APPEAL FROM THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.

Alluvial accretions—Title—"Gradual, slow and imperceptible," meaning of—English rule—Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation XI of 1825, s 4, applicability of to Madras.

The recognition of title by alluvial accretion is largely governed by the fact that the latter is due to the normal action of physical forces and the different conditions of Indian and English rivers are such that what would be abnormal and almost miraculous in the latter is normal and commonplace in the former. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Even if the test of "gradual, slow and imperceptible" according to the English rule is applied to such accretions, it should be borne in mind that slow and imperceptible are only qualifications of the word 'gradual' and this word with its qualifications only defines a test relative to the conditions to which it is applied. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether the law as to accretions promulgated in the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation coincides with the law as to accretions in the Presidency of Madras or elsewhere in India; [p. 3, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the High Court at Madras reported as 40 Ind. Cas. 896, affirming a decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cocanada.

FACTS.—The subject-matter of the dispute is an island or lanka formed in the Godavari river. The lanka has been in possession of the respondents. The appellant levied penal assessment which was paid under protest by the respondents. The suit was brought by the respondents for a declaration of their title to the lanka and the refund of the amount paid under protest. The appellant contended that the island was formed on the bed of a tidal and navigable river and as such belonged to the Government. The Trial Judge found that the suit lands were an accretion to the respondents' lands, that they were not a vertical accretion to the bed of the river, and that the appellant had no title to them.

On appeal, the High Court (Ayling and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.) confirmed the findings of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appeal.

Hence the present appeal.

Mr. DeGruyther, K.C. and Mr. Brown, for the Appellant.—The documentary evidence in the case clearly shows that the formation of the suit lands was very rapid and not gradual, slow and imperceptible as is required by law to give title to the respondents. There is no specific rule of accretions applicable to Madras but the rule of justice, equity and good conscience is to be applied, i. e., the rule of English Law.

Wagela Rajinji v. Masulin (1). The rule in English Law is well-established that a title by accretion is acquired only where the accretion is "gradual, slow and imperceptible."

Re v. Yarborough (2), Attorney-General of Southern Nigeria v. Holt & Co. (3). The accretion in this case does not satisfy the test. Bengal

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA & RAJA OF VIZIANAGARAM.

Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation XI of 1825 refers to "gradual accretion." It only applies to cases of incrementum laterale. Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Esq. (4). There is no distinction between the English rule and the Indian rule. The High Court relied too much on the observations in Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (5).

Mr. Upjohn, K. O., Sir George Lowndes, K. O., and Mr. Raikes, for the Respondents.—It is not open to the appellant to argue the question now raised. No issue was framed on this question nor was any evidence called. The facts found by the Courts show that the lands were formed as a gradual accretion. The test laid down in the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation applies to Madras. Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma v. Collector of Godavari District (6).

The true test, whether in India or in England, is that the accretion must be due to the ordinary and natural action of the river. What may be considered abnormal in an English river may be normal in the large Indian rivers. The onus was on the appellant and it was not discharged.

Haidar Khan v. Secretary of State for India (7).

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O., replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD CARSON.—The question in dispute in this action is as to the ownership of a certain lanka formed by alluvion in the bed of the river Godavari. It consists at the present time of an island being surrounded on all sides by the river, and in extent consists of about 1000 acres. At the place where this lanka is situated the Godavari is both navigable and tidal, and it is not disputed that the bed of the river at that place belongs to the Government of India. The extent of the river and the operation of its currents in forming alluvial tracts during the flood season must be borne in mind with reference to questions arising in this case. A description of this river will be found in Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma v.

Collector of Godavari District (6).

The Maharajah of Vizianagaram, the first respondent, has for some years been in possession of this property; the other respondent is a trustee of the Vizianagaram estates.

The defendant (appellant), as representing the Government of India, treating the Maharajah and his tenants as being in unlawful occupation of the lands in question, proceeded to levy penal assessment in respect of them amounting to Rs. 9,029. This sum the Maharajah paid under protest and has brought the present action claiming a declaration of title to the said lands and re-payment of this penal assessment.

The main questions raised by the pleadings and issues, and to which the evidence was directed in the Trial Court before the Temporary Subordinate Judge, were whether the lanka in question was an accretion, formed laterally as an adjunct to or in continuity with any lanka or other property belonging to the Maharajah and became his property, or was formed vertically as an island in the bed of the Godavari and was, therefore, the property of the Government.

The Subordinate Judge before whom the action was tried held that the lanka in question was formed by alluvion in contiguity with the Maharajah's land and was subsequently separated therefrom by the river, and gave a decree for the respondents.

On appeal the High Court of Judicature at Madras, on the 15th November 1916, confirmed the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the appeal, concurring with the finding of the Temporary Subordinate Judge that the land in dispute was formed as a lateral extension of the Maharajah's lanka, or at least of the site of his lanka.

There are, therefore, concurrent decisions upon this the main question raised, and their Lordships see no reason for dissenting from the conclusion arrived at. The further question, however, and indeed the main one argued on behalf of the appellant before this Board, was that even if the lands in question were accretions to lands of the Maharajah the process of accretion was not such as to give him title to them.

In dealing with the great rivers in India and comparing them with the rivers in this country, it is necessary to bear in mind the comparative rapidity with which formations and additions take place in the former.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. RAJA OF VIZIANAGARAM.

It was claimed by the appellant's Counsel that by the settled law of England, which, he argued, was the law applicable to Madras, land to be an accretion must be formed by gradual, slow and imperceptible degrees as laid down in the case of Rex v. Yarborough (2), and other English authorities, and he alleged that the accretions in the present case were not formed by "gradual, slow and imperceptible degrees." On the other hand, the Board were referred to section 4 of Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, the only requirement of which is that this accretion should be "gradual"—not that it should be slow or imperceptible. That Regulation was promulgated to be in force throughout the Provinces subject to the Presidency of Fort William, and did not apply to the Presidency of Madras. It has, however, been contended that this Regulation embodies the law of accretion as applicable generally to the rivers of India. Their Lordships do not find it necessary to decide whether the law as to accretions promulgated in the Bengal Regulation coincides with the law as to accretions in the Presidency of Madras or elsewhere in India, nor to discuss the exact meaning of the word "perceptible" in the English rule which provides that all accretions must be "gradual, slow and imperceptible," for, assuming the applicability of the English rule, "slow" and "imperceptible" are only qualifications of the word "gradual," and this word with its qualifications only defines a test relative to the conditions to which it is applied. In other words the actual rate of progress necessary to satisfy the rule when used in connection with English rivers is not necessarily the same when applied to the rivers of India. The application of the rule is, in their Lordships' opinion, correctly laid down in the judgment of Mr. Justice Ayling in the present case when he says:—

"It seems to me the recognition of title by alluvial accretion is largely governed by the fact that the latter is due to the normal action of physical forces; and the different condition of Indian and English rivers is such that what would be abnormal and almost miraculous in the latter is normal and commonplace in the former, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (5)."

Their Lordships observe that neither in the plaint nor in the defendants' written statement, or what is still more important in the issues as settled, is there any question raised as to the accretions being "gradual," "slow" or "imperceptible."

Further, in their memorandum of appeal to the High Court, the Government did not make the decision on this point a ground of objection. An examination of the evidence given before the Trial Judge shows that although several of the witnesses proved that the said lankas or parts of them "arose gradually" (page 219 of record), are increased "gradually" (page 229), or "gradually extended" (page 240), or "had been gradually growing in size" (page 282), no question challenging this evidence was put upon cross-examination, nor was any evidence given on behalf of the appellant to attempt to displace such evidence.

Some attempt was made to show by a comparison of farm leases and accounts of different years (which were put in evidence on behalf of the Maharajah to prove contiguity) that there must have been extensive accretions at a particular date, but such a comparison does not, when examined, show the contents of the lanka but only what land in the place was cultivated in each year.

Further, the judgment of Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar has pointed out that throughout the long dispute which has led to the present suit the Government had never suggested that the land in question "was not an accretion in the sense of a gradual formation." Their Lordships doubt whether, under these circumstances, it is open to the appellant to raise the contention under consideration, but assuming that it is, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that, applying the principles already explained, the accretion must be held to have been "gradual, slow and imperceptible," and to be the property of the Maharajah. The order appealed for must, therefore, be confirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 72—Forbearance to sue or to enforce claim, whether valid consideration.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 3rd February 1920.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Aithana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

GOKUL PRASAD, J.—This was a suit to recover certain amount on the basis of a hundi executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Debi Singh and Dan Sahai, on the 18th of June 1914. The defendants pleaded that they executed the hundi but that it was without consideration and was obtained through undue pressure.

The Trial Court came to the conclusion that the defendants had failed to prove that the hundi was executed under undue influence or without consideration. It accordingly decreed the suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the executors of the hundi.

The defendants went up in appeal. They abandoned the plea of undue influence but contended that the consideration alleged by the plaintiff was no consideration in law. The learned Judge gave effect to this contention of the defendants-appellants and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff comes here in second appeal and challenges the correctness of the finding of the lower Appellate Court.

The facts are shortly as follows. On the 5th of August 1903 the defendants, Debi Singh and Dan Sahai, with their two brothers borrowed a sum of Rs. 21,000 carrying interest at six per cent. per annum from the plaintiff and made a usufructuary mortgage of certain property in his favour for 18 years. On the same date two of the mortgagors took a lease of the mortgaged property for 18 years, that is to say, for the period of the mortgage, at Rs. 1,900 per annum. The mortgage was to end after 18 years without any further payment being made by the mortgagors, the principal and interest being satisfied by the plaintiff's possession for 18 years as aforesaid. The lease is specifically mentioned in the mortgage and certain conditions about the increase and decrease in revenue were to take effect only in case the lessees were ejected for non-payment of rent. As I have stated above, the mortgage was to be satisfied simply by possession for 18 years, there was no account to be made and nothing to be paid by one party to the other under ordinary circumstances, or, to put it in other words, the lease and the mortgage were agreed upon simultaneously and the plaintiff was to receive Rs. 1,900 per annum for 18 years in full satisfaction of the principal money and the interest due thereon. It, however, so happened that the defendants-respondents failed to pay the lease money and the result was that the plaintiff had them ejected on the 30th of March 1911. According to the plaintiff, notwithstanding the assessment of rent on the ex-proprietary holding of the mortgagors, the total income from the village became less by Rs. 568 from the amount of Rs. 1,900 per annum which he was to receive. In lieu of the aforesaid deficiency for two years that is for 1319 and 1320 Fasli which the plaintiff claimed, the defendants executed the hundi in question.

The argument on behalf of the plaintiff strenuously urged by his learned Vakil is that the Court below has erred in holding that this amount of deficiency did not form a legal consideration for the hundi. The learned Judge has, in my opinion, erred in doing so. The principle applicable to cases in which forbearance to sue or to enforce a claim in Court does or does not amount to a valid consideration has been very clearly laid down by Bowen, L. J. in Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Company (1): "It seems to me that if an intending litigant bona fide forbears a right to litigate a question of law or fact which it is not vexatious or frivolous to litigate, he does give up something of value. It is a mistake to suppose it is not an advantage, which a suitor is capable of appreciating, to be able to litigate his claim, even if he turns out to be wrong. It seems to me it is equally a mistake to suppose that it is not sometimes a disadvantage to a man to have to defend an action even if in the end he succeeds in his defence; and I think, therefore, that the reality of the claim which is given up must be measured, not by the state of the law as it is ultimately discovered to be, but by the state of the knowledge of the person who at the time has to judge and make the concession. Otherwise you would have to try the whole cause to know if the man had a right to compromise it, and with regard to questions of law it is obvious you could never safely compromise a question of law at all Now that being the law which I think has to be applied to the present case, I come next to the facts. Was there here forbearance of a bona fide claim?" Then he went on to deal with the facts of that particular case.

There is no doubt that if the plaintiff's allegations in this case are correct, he was likely to lose Rs. 865 per annum for a large number of years and was at the same time bound to give up possession of the property after the lapse of the period of the mortgage, there being no express provision in the mortgage for the recovery of such deficiency.

Under these circumstances in my opinion the plaintiff believed that he had a bona fide claim to enforce and his forbearance from trying to put that claim in Court, and to have it decided was good consideration for the hundi in dispute. In my opinion the decision of the Trial Court was correct. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court. As Dan Sahai, one of the defendants-respondents, has died and his heirs have not been brought on the record, the appeal as against him abates. I would, therefore, decree the claim against the defendant-respondent Kamal Singh with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale. In other respects the decree of the First Court is confirmed.

STUART, J.—I have little to add to the judgment of my learned brother. The first question that we had to decide was whether the hundi in question had been executed in consideration of Gulab Chand forbearing his right to sue the executants of the hundi for damages in respect of their acts, whereby he had been confined to the recovery from them of rent as ex-proprietary tenants, instead of being able to enforce against them the rent fixed by the lease. The point was not brought out very clearly in the Courts below, but there can be no doubt as to the fact that the hundi was executed in consideration of Gulab Chand forbearing to sue. I am clear in my mind that the question which he had a right to litigate was neither vexatious nor frivolous. Whether he would or would not have succeeded had he instituted a suit on this cause of action it is unnecessary for me to attempt to decide. I am not as confident as the learned District Judge was that he would have had no chance of success. Applying the test laid down by Bowen, L. J. I have to look at the state of knowledge of Gulab Chand who at that time had to judge and make the concession. I am satisfied that the cause of action was neither vexatious nor frivolous and that Gulab Chand believed at the time that he had a good cause of action. On these findings the appeal must succeed, for there was clearly forbearance of a bona fide claim and such forbearance is a good consideration in law.

I concur in the order proposed.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside and the plaintiff's claim is decreed against the defendant-respondent Kamal Singh. Kamal Singh shall pay his own costs and those of Gulab Chand in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Ordinarily, the decree or order of a Small Cause Court is final, under section 27 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, but when such a decree is transferred to the ordinary Court for execution as if it were a decree made by that Court, the orders made in execution are appealable in the same way as orders made in the execution of decrees passed by that Court, although under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code a second appeal would be barred. Rule against an order of the District Judge, Burdwan, dated the 6th May, 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, Burdwan, dated the 26th April 1921.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order of refusal of a District Judge to hear an appeal on the ground that no appeal lay, inasmuch as the order of the Court of first instance was made in the course of proceedings in execution of a decree made by a Court of Small Causes.

It appears that on the death of one Bhabadeb Bhutta his creditor Karali Prasad Mukherjee instituted a suit against his three infant sons and his widow. The claim was based as against the sons on the ground that they were the legal representatives of the deceased debtor and as against the widow on the ground that she had taken possession of the moveables which formed part of the estate left by the deceased. The suit, which was instituted in a Court of Small Causes, was decreed against the infant sons, but was dismissed as against the widow because she was not proved to be in possession of the moveables of the estate. The judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge states that as the widow was not an heir, she was not a necessary party, but for the reason that she was alleged to be in possession of a portion of the assets left by the deceased debtor. The suit was thus not dismissed against the widow on the ground that she was not a necessary party; it was tried on the merits against her and was decided in her favour, because the allegation that she was in possession of the moveables of the estate was not established by the evidence. This decree was transferred to the Court of the Munsif for execution by attachment and sale of the immoveable properties left by the deceased debtor. This order of transfer was made under section 29, Civil Procedure Code, in view of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 82 that an attachment of immoveable property cannot be effected by a Court of Small Causes. When the immoveable properties were attached, the widow appeared and objected on the ground that she had acquired good title thereto under a conveyance from her husband dated the 23rd January 1919. This objection was registered as a case under section 47, Code of Civil Procedure. There was a regular investigation and the Court came to the conclusion that the objection was not sustainable. The widow thereupon preferred an appeal to the District Judge. The District Judge has refused to entertain the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay inasmuch as the decree under execution had been passed by a Court of Small Causes. This view is clearly erroneous.

Section 27 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is in these terms: "Save as provided by this Act, a decree or order made under the foregoing provisions, of this Act by a Court of Small Causes shall be final." The orders thus made final are orders made by a Court of Small Causes; so that if this decree had been executed by the Court of Small Causes itself, the order in execution would have been final: Raj Kumar Lal v. Bulaki Miyan (1), Alagamuthu Pillai v. Devasagaya Fernandez (2). When, however, the decree has been transferred to the ordinary Court to be executed as if it were a decree made by that Court, the orders made in execution are appealable in the same way as orders made in execution of decrees passed by that Court; this is in accordance with the view adopted in Atwari v. Moitu Lal (3), although a second appeal would be barred under section 102, Code of Civil Procedure. We hold accordingly that the ground assigned by the District Judge in support of his order of refusal to entertain the appeal cannot be upheld.

It has been argued, however, that the appeal preferred to the District Judge was incompetent, because the order was made not under section 47, but under Order XX, rule 58 of the Code. In our opinion this contention is not well-founded. The Explanation to section 47 of the Code provides that for the purposes of the section a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed are parties to the suit. This Explanation was inserted in view of the divergence of judicial opinion which had prevailed under the Code of 1882. Under that Code it had been held by the Allahabad High Court in Kalka Prasad v. Esant Ram (4), Sheo Fargus Singh v. Nawab Singh (5) and by this Court in Rahimuddi Sirkar v. Loll Keah (6) and Ram Fershad v. Jaganath Ram (7) that the plaintiff whose suit had been dismissed and the defendant against whom a suit had been dismissed could not be considered as parties to the suit. On the other hand, the Madras High Court had held in Rameswami Sistrulu v. Kameswaramma (8), that such a plaintiff and such a defendant must be regarded as parties to the suit; see also Gowri v. Vigneswar (9). The present Code gives effect to the view taken in the Madras decision and the widow must consequently be deemed a party to the suit, even though the suit was dismissed as against her. We are not unmindful that it has been ruled in the case of Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (10) and Shrim Lal Sahu v.

Amar Prasad (11), that the Explanation does not apply to a case where a suit has been dismissed against a person on the ground of misjoinder of parties, as in such an event, it cannot be appropriately said that that person is a party to the suit. The decision in Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (10) was, however, not followed in Medisetti Ventasami v. Kunchalla Chidambaram (12) and Vaddadi Sannamma v. Koduganti Radh bhoyi (13) and cannot be reconciled with Abdul Kasim v. Thambusami Pillai (14) and Velkatchella Reddy v. Muthialu Reddy (15). The present case is, plain, not affected by this conflict of judicial opinion in Madras. Here although the opinion was expressed that the widow was not a proper party because she was not one of the heirs of the deceased debtor, yet she was treated as a proper party by reason of the allegation against her that she was in possession of the moveables of the estate. On this basis, the suit was tried against her and she succeeded on the merits. We must consequently hold that she was a party to the suit within the meaning of section 47, Code of Civil Procedure. Consequently the objection raised by her to the attachment of the properties covered by the conveyance executed in her favour by her husband, was rightly treated by the Court of first instance as comprehended within the scope of section 47, the decision of such a question operates as a decree under section 2, Civil Procedure Code, and is appealable in the same manner as other decrees under section 96, Civil Procedure Code.

The result is that the Rule is made absolute and the case returned to the District Judge in order that he may proceed to hear the appeal. The petitioner is entitled to the costs of this Rule—one gold mohur.

Appeal from a decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 8th November 1920, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 17th April 1920.

Mr. Ram Chandra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole point raised in this second appeal turns upon the rule of law applicable to a Will of Raja Ajit Singh Taluqdar of Partabgarh under which the defendant has inherited a certain property. The property in the Unao district was contracted to be sold to the plaintiff, Lala Manni Lal, for a certain sum and he deposited Rs. 2,000 with the defendant, Raja Partab Bahadur Singh, as earnest-money with a condition that the money would be forfeited in case the contract of sale was not completed. In this Court the condition cannot be questioned and there is no ground of appeal relating to it. The plaintiff, Lala Manni Lal, sued for the recovery of the sum deposited by him with the defendant on the ground that the contract failed for a valid reason because of the want of title in the defendant to transfer the property. The lower Appellate Court held that there was no such want of title; and in appeal from the decree of the lower Appellate Court the only question raised is whether the defendant has full title to transfer the property or not. Another issue that the plaintiff purchased with full knowledge of the Will under which the defendant had inherited the property was not referred to by the lower Appellate Court and has not been pressed in argument here by the learned Pleader of the defendant-respondent. The one and the only point, therefore, for decision depends on the construction of the Will under which the defendant has succeeded to the Partabgarh estate.

The Will, of which construction is sought here, opens with a description of the property of which the testator was in possession and a declaration of the fact that the testator had no child of his body. He then goes on to declare the necessity he is under for the above reason to publish his desire by means of a Will together with certain conditions and restrictions so that his wishes may be given effect to in accordance with the document after his death. He then declares what his desire is. He directs that after his death his entire property, whether in his possession at the time or acquired afterwards, shall be taken by the defendant Lal Partab Bahadur Singh because of his good qualities of conduct and religion and "Lal Partab Bahadur Singh shall be my heir and successor (waris wa janshin), and after he becomes my heir (bad waris one ke) the above-mentioned heir shall carry out the under mentioned conditions." It is clear from the preamble that the entire estate was vested absolutely in Lal Partab Bahadur Singh. The words as to the fulfilment of conditions are significant in so far that the conditions shall be carried into effect after Lal Partab Bahadur Singh has become heir of the property. The conditions are, no doubt, in derogation of full ownership. The first condition is that none of the testator's successors shall have a right to transfer the property, the second declares succession in perpetuity without declaring the heir in remainder. The fifth condition lays down a line of descent in conflict with section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1839) and in paragraph 8 a further condition of succession of male heirs according to the arbitrary wishes of the testator is laid down. The seventh condition declares that the owner of the time who transfers any property would be liable to be removed from ownership by the next successor in case any transfer was made. The question here is whether having regard to the language of the Will the defendant is precluded from transferring property which he inherited under the Will. The learned Pleader for the appellant desired the Court to give effect to the intention of the testator. It is not possible to do so, because the intention of the testator in one part of the document is in conflict with his declared intention in another part of the document. After making Lal Partab Bahadur Singh absolute owner to fill the seat occupied by himself (j.nashin), the testator has imposed conditions to narrow down the estate granted at the commencement of the Will. It may also be noted that the intention of a testator which contravenes any recognised rules of Hindu Law could not be given effect to by a Court of Law. It was argued by the appellant's learned Counsel that whatever may happen to future successors, the defendant at least takes only a life-interest under the Will. He relies upon the passage in Trevelyan's Law relating to Hindu Wills, 2nd Edition, at page 43: "When the testator has attempted to create any estate heritable otherwise than in accordance with law, unless there is something in the context to the contrary, the first taker takes for life, because the giver has at least that intention." Obviously this opinion of the learned Jurist is based on a deduction from the Privy Council ruling in the case of Jotendromohun Tagore. The language of the Will here, however, is different from the language of the Will in that celebrated case. There was a definite direction in Tagore's Will bequeathing property "Unto and to the use of the said Jotendromohun Tagore for and during the terms of his natural life." There was a definite direction of life-interest to the next heir and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that this particular direction for subsequent successors being in conflict with the tenets of the Hindu Law could not operate. In the present case an absolute interest in the entire property of the testator is given to the defendant before the testator starts in the Will to impose conditions. The passage which follows the one quoted by the appellant's learned Counsel at page 48 is, in my opinion, more pertinent to the present case. "If there be an absolute bequest, the expression by the testator of a restriction in the mode of inheritance such as the exclusion of female heirs will not affect such a gift." Similarly, if there is an absolute bequest, a restriction as to alienation will also fail to have effect. A passage from their Lordships' judgment in the Tagore case, [Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (1)] may be quoted here: "If, again, the gift were in terms of an estate inheritable according to law, with superadded words, restricting the power of transfer which the law annexes to that estate, the restriction would be rejected as being repugnant, or, rather, as being an attempt to take away the power of transfer which the law attaches to the estate, which the giver has sufficiently shown his intention to create, though he adds a qualification which the law does not recognise." The appellant's learned Counsel drew the Court's attention to the observations of their Lordships at pages 370 and 371 of the report and to the final conclusion at page 372 that their Lordships were thus of opinion that a life-interest had been created in Jotendromohun Tagore and that the estate of inheritance and subsequent estate or interest attempted to be created by the Will had failed. I have already drawn a distinction between the language of the Will at present before the Court and Tagore's Will and in my opinion, the observations to which the learned Counsel has drawn the Court's attention have no application here. There is a judgment of the Allahabad High Court reported as Bageshri Kunwar

(1) 18 W. R. 359 at p. 365; 9 B. L. R. 377; 1 A. Sup. Vol. 47; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 692; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 82 (P. C.).

PULIN BIHARI ROY v. MAHENDRA CHANDRA GHOSAL.

v. Santnarain Singh (2). In interpreting a Will in which there was a condition similar to the seventh condition of the Will here providing that if the legatee or his heir alienated the village it should revert to the heirs of the testator, the learned Judges held in that case that it was not a case of a gift over but of forfeiture or resumption by the heir of a testator on a violation of a condition forbidding alienation and refused to give effect to that condition. The judgment in the Allahabad case was based on a Madras ruling of Anantha Tirtha Chariar v. Nagamuthu Ambalgaren (3). There may be some doubt as to the application of section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act to a bequest made under a Will but the principles of law enunciated in the Allahabad judgment appear to be otherwise sound. I hold that under the Will the defendant took an absolute estate.

It was suggested by the appellant's learned Counsel that the case may be referred to a Bench but I do not see any necessity to do so. This decision will govern the parties to the suit, which is of a comparatively small value, and will not have operation against people who have no connection with this suit.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 163 OF 1919.

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

vs.

MAHENDRA CHANDRA GHOSAL

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XLI, rr. 20, 33, O. XXX, r. 4 (2)—Appellate Court—Respondent, addition of—Suit by or against a firm in the firm-name—Names of partners disclosed—Death of a partner—Legal representative, whether must be added as party—Determination of partnership—Notice—Continuance of partnership—Presumption—Partner carrying on business of same nature without consent of other partners—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 257, 259—Obligation of partner to render true accounts—Notice to produce accounts—Non-compliance—Presumption—Evidence Act (I of 1872) ss. 66, 114 (g), 164.

Apart from all questions as to the scope of Order XLI, rule 20 and Order XLI, rule 33, the Court, in a proper case, has inherent power to add a respondent to an appeal. [p. 12, col. 2.]

A suit of the description contemplated by Order XXX of the Code of Civil Procedure may be brought by or against a firm in the firm-name even though the firm may have been dissolved before the date of the suit, provided the cause of action arose before the date of dissolution. This may be done, notwithstanding the position that a firm is not recognised as an artificial or juristic person. The proceedings in a suit so brought continue in the name of the firm, even though the names of the partners are disclosed. From this standpoint no valid objection can be taken to the competence of an appeal even if the representatives of a deceased appellant are not added as parties. [p. 13 cols. 1 & 2.]

Where no fixed term has been agreed upon for the duration of a partnership, any partner may determine the partnership at any time on giving notice of his intention so to do to all the other partners. But the dissolution takes place as from the date of communication of the notice. [p. 14, col. 2.]

Where the evidence discloses that a partner who intended to retire from the partnership did in fact continue to associate with its work, a presumption may legitimately be drawn in favour of the continuance of the partnership. [p. 14, col. 2.]

If a partner, without the consent of the other partners, carries on any business of the same nature and competing with that of the firm, he must account for and pay over to the firm all profits made by him in such business, and he must also make compensation to the firm for any loss occasioned thereby. [p. 15, col. 1.]

PULIN BIHARI ROY V. MAHENDRA CHANDRA GHOSAL.

Section 257 of the Contract Act makes it obligatory upon each partner to render true accounts and full information of all things affecting the partnership to any partner or his legal representatives. The occasion for this in a suit for accounts upon dissolution of partnership will, however, arise after the preliminary decree is made. At that stage each partner should be served with the notice contemplated by section 66 of the Indian Evidence Act to produce such accounts and papers as may be in his custody. If he omits to produce the books and the books are proved to be at the time in his custody or under his control, the presumption recognised in Illustration (g) to section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act may be applied. In such circumstances secondary evidence will become admissible and the party who has withheld the document will not be able to use the original document as evidence at a later stage without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court, as provided in section 164 of the Evidence Act. [p. 15, col 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of money due on adjustment of accounts upon dissolution of a partnership business, called the Joint Salt Bond Business, and carried on by them and the three sets of defendants at Sadarghat, Chittagong. The plaintiffs constitute a firm styled Krishnadas Sasatan Brajendra Kumar Ray. The first party defendants are members of a firm known as Krishna Kumar Ghosal; the second party defendants are members of a firm styled Ramkamal Radhaballabh Saha; the third party defendants are members of a firm named Gangadas Seal. In the salt business, the Rays claim a five-annas nine-pies share, the Ghosals four-annas share, the Sahas four annas six-pies share and the Seals one-anna nine-pies share. The business was managed by the different sets of partners during the four quarters of the year by turns, namely, the Ghosals during the first quarter, the Seals during the second quarter, the Sahas during the third quarter and the Rays during the fourth quarter. The partnership was started in 1306 B. E. for the purpose of importing salt from foreign ports and selling it in Chittagong. The Rays had a firm in Calcutta which ordinarily purchased salt for the joint business, and the purchase-money had to be paid by the defendant partners to them at Chittagong. If there was delay in payment on the part of any set of partners, it became liable to the set which made the payment on its behalf. There was a book kept called the order-book in which the price for sale of salt as fixed by the partners from time to time was recorded. Each set of partners could sell as much salt as it liked out of the joint stock, but was liable for the excess taken by it over that due for its share to the set or sets of partners who might have taken less than a proportionate share. There used to be a periodical adjustment of accounts generally at the end of each quarter which is described in these proceedings as a Bantan. The term literally signifies division. The Bantan, it is said, was intended to remove inequalities in the appropriation of salt by the partners and to settle the amount of money due among the partners inter se by reason of such inequality. In addition to the Bantan, there was a Nikash which was intended to be held annually, but in fact took place at irregular intervals. The term Nikash signifies final adjustment of accounts, and one of the points in controversy in the Court below was, how far a Bantan might be treated as a final settlement. The business was carried on in this manner, according to the plaintiffs, to the end of 1320 B. E. and they claim accounts from 26th Sraban 1320 up to 30th Chaitra, 1320, as according to them the Bantan had taken place for the antecedent period. The defendants urged, on the other hand, that the Nikash which alone constitutes final account, had not been held for the period subsequent to 1316 B. E. and that the partnership did not terminate till the end of 1321 B. E. The defendants consequently claimed that accounts might be taken for the entire period between the commencement of 1317 B. E. and the termination of 1321 B. E. The Subordinate Judge has given effect to the contention of the defendants in this respect. To appreciate the full significance of the claim of the defendants that accounts might be taken for the longer instead of the shorter period, it is essential to bear in mind that some of the plaintiffs had, during the year 1321 B. E. if not also during 1320 B. E., engaged in another salt business, and the question consequently arose whether they had rendered themselves liable to account to their partners for the profits of such separate business. The plaintiffs retorted that other partners had acted in a similar manner, specially, with respect to salt imported in S. S. Baron Balfour. The Subordinate Judge has held that the partners who had engaged in rival salt business before the dissolution of the partnership were liable to render mutual accounts. The plaintiffs have appealed against the decree of the Subordinate Judge and have assailed his decision upon every material point. The grounds which emerge for consideration may, however, be concisely enumerated, namely, first, that the Bantans which covered the period up to 25th Sraban 1320 B. E. were final adjustments and could not be re-opened; secondly, that the salt bond business was dissolved at the end of 1320 B. E. and not at the end of 1321 B. E.; thirdly, that even if the partnership business be not deemed to have been dissolved at the end of 1320 B. E., each partner was entitled to have separate dealings in salt and could not be called upon to account for the profits of such transactions; fourthly, that if such separate dealings in salt were improper, the defendants could at most get compensation to the extent of Rs. 5,000; fifthly, that the Court should not, at this stage, have gone into the question of the custody of the account-books, and that, in any event, the investigation has been inadequate and the conclusion incorrect.

Before we deal with these grounds, it is necessary to refer to a preliminary objection to the competency of the appeal. In the plaint, although the suit was described as a suit by a firm against three other firms—each of them partners in the salt business—the names of the members of the firms were disclosed. During the pendency of the appeal, Brajendra Kumar Ray, one of the members of the plaintiff firm, died on the 20th June 1920. On the 3rd January 1921, the three sons of the deceased applied as his legal representatives to be added as parties appellants. This application, made under Order XXX, rule 4 (2) (a), Civil Procedure Code, was opposed on the ground that it was barred by limitation under Article 176 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, which provides that an application under the Code of Civil Procedure to have the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff or a deceased appellant made a party must be made within six months from the date of the death of the deceased plaintiff or appellant. This period of six months, it may be noted, has been reduced by Act XXVI of 1920 which received the assent of the Governor General on the 2nd September 1920 and came into force on the 1st January 1921; that, however, did not affect the position of the parties. The petitioners contended that they were entitled to apply within three years under Article 181. We hold that the application was governed by Article 176 and that as no satisfactory reasons had been assigned for the delay, the application must be dismissed. This order was made on the 21st June 1921; three days later, the surviving appellants applied to the Court to add as respondents to the appeal the legal representatives of the deceased co-appellant, who had, through their remissness, failed to join as appellants within the prescribed time. The surviving appellants urged that they should not be made to suffer by reason of a default on the part of the legal representatives of the deceased co-appellant; and that the Court should, under Order XLI, rule 20, Order XLI, rule 23, or, if, neither of these rules was considered applicable, in the exercise of its inherent power recognised in section 151, add as respondents to the appeal the representatives of the deceased, so that no exception might be taken that the appeal was not properly constituted. We granted this application, because apart from all questions as to the scope of Order XLI, rule 20 and Order XLI, rule 23, the Court has inherent power to add a respondent to the appeal in the events which had happened; Hemargini Debi v. Haridas Banerjee (1), Lakshmichand v.

Kachubhai (2). The objection taken by the respondents that the appeal had ceased to be properly constituted by reason of the death of one of the appellants and the failure of his legal representatives to join as co-appellants within the time allowed by law, thus became unsubstantial. No doubt, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Raj Chunder Sen v. Ganga Das Seal (3), a suit to take the accounts and wind up the affairs of a partnership cannot proceed in the absence of one of the partners, or, in the event of his death pendente lite, in the absence of his legal representative. It may also be conceded that when an appeal has abated in part in respect of the heirs of a deceased appellant, the result of such abatement may be to make the appeal an imperfectly constituted appeal which the Court cannot proceed to hear; this depends upon the nature and scope of the suit; Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (4). In the present case, however, no such difficulty arises, as all the parties interested are now before the Court either as appellants or as respondents. Apart from this, there is considerable force in the contention of the appellants that the addition of the representatives of the deceased was unnecessary, inasmuch as the suit as framed was a suit of the description contemplated by Order XXX of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such a suit may be brought by or against a firm in the firm-name even though the firm may have been dissolved before the date of the suit, provided the cause of action arose before the date of dissolution; Davis v. Morris (5), Wenham, In re, Battams, Ex parte (6). This may be done, notwithstanding the position that a firm is not recognised as an artificial or juristic person: Corbett, Ex parte Shand, In re (7), Ellis v. Wadson (8), Sadler v. Whiteman (9) affirmed in Whiteman v.

Sadler (10) and cited in Rea v. Holden (11). The proceedings in a suit so brought continue in the name of the firm, even though the names of the partners are disclosed; Order XXX, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The case before us is not that of a suit brought in the names of particular individuals, as in Monmohun Pandey v. Bidhu Ihus-n Ecy (12), but rather that of a suit brought in the firm-name, as in Bal Kissen v. Karly L. L. (13). From this standpoint, no valid objection could be taken to the competence of the appeal, even if the representatives of the deceased were not added as parties. In our opinion, the preliminary objection cannot be sustained and the appellants are entitled to our judgment on the matters in controversy.

As regards the first ground, we are of opinion that the accounts must be taken, notwithstanding the Bantans which have taken place as found by the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge has correctly held that there were two sets of accounts taken, the Bantan and the Nikash. The scope and object of the two were not identical, as is clear from the samples of the Bantan and the Nikash which have been produced. The Bantan was an adjustment of the dues of the partners inter se on account of the inequality in the proportion of salt taken by each set of partners on their own account for sale by them to their own customers as opposed to joint sale of salt by the joint firm. Such an adjustment would show what quantity of salt had been taken by each set of partners and how much money would have to be contributed by one set to another on account of inequality in the appropriation. On the other hand, the Nikash at the end of the year would show the outstanding balance from customers of the joint business and expenditure of all descriptions incurred during the year. Opportunity would, no doubt, be taken on the occasion of this yearly settlement of accounts, to rectify the errors, if any, in the Bantan, which would, prima facie, form the basis of the annual account. But there has apparently been some misapprehension as to the true relation of a Bantan to a Nikash. One extreme view is that the Bantan may be entirely ignored and the Nikash taken irrespective thereof. The opposite extreme view is that the Bantan is absolutely conclusive and that its accuracy cannot be challenged at the time of the Nikash. Neither of these views can clearly be supported. The Bantan was regularly taken in the presence of the parties or their representatives, though its scope was limited. Consequently, if its accuracy is challenged at the time of the Nikash, the burden lies upon the party who assails it to establish the alleged error. The elementary principle that an account once taken in the presence of the parties interested and acquiesced in by them will not be lightly re-opened must plainly be applied to a Bantan; McKellar v. Wallace (14), Moheesh Chandra Basu v. Radha Kishore Bhattacharjee (15), Gokul Krishna Das v. Shashi Mukhi Dasi (16), Magniram v. Laxminarayan (17), Jehangir Cowasjee v. Hope Mills Limited (18). Subject to this reservation, the Bantan cannot be treated as a conclusive answer to the claim for accounts for any period. This, however, does not, as the Subordinate Judge has correctly held, affect the decree in the former suit brought by the Rays against the Seals and finally decided by this Court on the 4th December 1919. That decree confirmed the decision of the primary Court, and, though conclusive between those parties, expressly left unaffected all matters outside the scope of the accounts comprised in that litigation. The direction given by the Subordinate Judge in this respect is not open to criticism.

As regards the second ground, the evidence is conclusive that the salt bond business was not dissolved at the end of 1320

B. E., but continued till the end of 1321 B. E. The case for the plaintiffs is that the dissolution was effected by the retirement of Jogendrakrishna and Nilkrishna, two of the members of the plaintiff firm, from the salt business at the end of 1320 B. E. Now, it is well-settled that where no fixed term has been agreed upon for the duration of a partnership, any partner may determine the partnership at any time on giving notice of his intention so to do to all the other partners; Crawshay v. Maule (19). But the dissolution takes place as from the date of the communication of the notice; Mellersh v. Keen (20). Tested in the light of this principle, the case for the plaintiff firm completely collapses. In the matter of the alleged dissolution by retirement, the parties acted in the most unbusinesslike way imaginable. The obvious course was to communicate their intention to dissolve the partnership in writing to the other partners. It is not necessary to consider whether notice to the defendant firms would have been sufficient or whether notice to each individual member of each of the firms concerned was essential. No written notice was in fact given, and the oral evidence of verbal intimation to some of the persons interested is of the vaguest description. On the other hand, the evidence discloses that the persons who intended to retire from the business did in fact continue to take salt from the business and to associate otherwise with its work. In such circumstances, a presumption may legitimately be drawn in favour of the continuance of the partnership; Parsons v. Hayward (21), King v. Chuck (22). There is, in our opinion no reasonable doubt as to the soundness of the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that there was no effective dissolution of the firm at the end of 1320 B. E. and that it was continued till the end of 1321 B. E. In such a contingency, it was not only open to the Court but incumbent upon it, to direct the accounts to be taken for a longer period than that mentioned in the plaint. The accounts in a suit of this description have to be taken for the benefit of all the persons concerned; the scope and extent of such accounts must be determined by the Court on the true state of facts disclosed in the evidence and cannot be restricted to the limited measure of relief claimed by the plaintiff on inaccurate allegations.

As regards the third and fourth grounds, we have been invited to hold that each partner was entitled to have separate dealings in salt and could not be called upon to account for the profits of such transactions for the benefit of all the partners of the original business. This contention is opposed to the elementary rule that if a partner, without the consent of the other partners, carries on any business of the same nature as, and competing with, that of the firm, he must account for and pay over to the firm all profits made by him in such business, and he must also make compensation to the firm for any loss occasioned thereby. This obligation is formulated in section 259 of the Indian Contract Act and has long been recognised as a fundamental rule in the law of partnership: Aas v. Benham (23), Trimble v. Goldberg (24), Glasington v. Thwaites (25). The rule is not applicable to a really different business, though the same knowledge and information may be useful in both. In the case before us, however, there is no doubt as to the true nature of the separate business carried on by some of the members of the salt bond partnership. The evidence makes it abundantly clear that the separate transactions were of precisely the same nature as the business carried on by the partnership and that there was thus a breach of duty of the partners concerned not to carry on like business in the same field of competition. The correctness of the view taken by the Subordinate Judge cannot be successfully questioned. We may add in this connection that it was faintly suggested that the sum recoverable on account of this breach of obligation was limited by agreement to Rs. 5,000. The agreement, however, does not admit of such a construction; the sum of Rs. 5,000 mentioned therein was prescribed as a penalty and does not absolve the parties in default from the obligation to account for all the profits made in such business.

As regards the fifth ground, it has been urged that the Court should not, at the preliminary stage, have gone into the question of the custody of the account books, that the investigation has, at any rate, been inadequate and that the conclusion is not supported by the evidence. We are of opinion that this contention should prevail. Section 257 of the Indian Contract Act makes it obligatory upon each partner to render true accounts and full information of all things affecting the partnership to any partner or his legal representatives. The occasion in this case will, however, arise after the preliminary decree is made. At that stage each partner should be served with the notice contemplated by section 66 of the Indian Evidence Act to produce such accounts and papers as may be in his custody. If he omits to produce the books and the books are proved to be at the time in his custody or under his control, the presumption recognised in Illustration (g) to section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act may be applied, namely, that evidence which could be and is not produced has been withheld because, if produced, it would be unfavourable to the person who withholds it; Hem Chandra v. Kali Prasanna Bhairuri (26). In such circumstances, secondary evidence will become admissible, and the party who has withheld the document will not be able to use the original document as evidence at a later stage without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court, as provided in section 164 of the Indian Evidence Act. The procedure as to notice was not followed in the Court below, and it has transpired that some of the account-books, namely, the books of 1318 B.E., 1319 B.E. and one of the books of 1320 B.E. were, at the time the plaintiffs were called upon to produce them, actually in this Court in the records of the appeal preferred in the previous suit brought by the Rays against the Seals. These books appear to have been subsequently returned to the plaintiffs, and they have expressed their readiness to produce them whenever called upon. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the finding in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge relating to the custody of the account books should be expunged and that the direction in the decree based thereon should be omitted. When the enquiry is undertaken by the Commissioner, proper orders as to the production of account books and other papers by all the partners will be given by the Subordinate Judge on the lines indicated above.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge modified in two respects, namely, first, as to the use to be made of the Bantan when the accounts are taken, and, secondly, as to the omission of the order for production of account books; subject to these variations, the decree of the Subordinate Judge will stand confirmed. The appellants will pay the respondents their costs in this appeal, but such costs will include only half the hearing fee, as the objection to the competence of the appeal has not been sustained and the decree of the Court below has not been affirmed in its entirety.

Hindu Law—Widow, usufructuary mortgage by—Property let out to tenants—Death of widow—Rents, unrealised, by the mortgagee—Accretions—Presumption—Construction of document—Mortgage-deed, interpretation of—Hindu widow—Mortgage with personal liability—Liability, whether enforceable after her death—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), 68 (a).

The presumption whether a Hindu widow dealt with the income of her deceased husband's estate as to make it an accretion to the corpus or not, must depend upon the circumstances of every case. [p. 17, col. 2.]

Where a Hindu widow creates a usufructuary mortgage of any property let out to tenants, rents actually fallen due at her death, though remaining unrealised by the mortgagees, cannot be treated as accretions to her husband's estate as in the real sense those rents—being transferred to the mortgagees—must be considered to have been already spent by the widow, thus leaving no doubt as to her intention to treat them as personal property. [p. 17, col. 2.]

Apart from any question of Hindu Law the mortgagees, in such a case, being really the landlords up to the date of the widow's death, rents fallen due during that period must be held to be due to them and not to their successors whoever they may be. [p. 17, col. 2.]

Where a Hindu widow executes a mortgage of property belonging to her husband but declares that the mortgagees would, if and whenever deprived of the same, be entitled to recover the mortgage-money from her personal property, the words are wide enough to include the enforcement of the personal liability even after her death. In a clear contract of this nature it is not necessary to interpret it in the light of the law of mortgages, although that law itself, as laid down in section 68 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, would support this view. [p. 18, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Lucknow (at Sitapur), dated the 23rd February 1921, reversing that of the First Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 2nd May 1921.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this suit are at one as regards the facts and the decision of this Court is desired as to the interpretation to be placed on those facts in accordance with law. A Hindu widow with a limited share in property made two transfers by way of mortgage of two different properties in 1914 and died at the end of 1915. The mortgages were both usufructuary and the first insured for a period of 4½ years and the second for a period of 14 years. Soon after her death her husband's reversioners took possession of the mortgaged property without any objection from the mortgagees. Subsequently, by this suit the mortgagees claimed recovery of the balance of money due to them out of the assets of the widow in the hands of the defendants reversioners. The mortgage-money was to be paid off out of the usufruct and there is no dispute that a balance of Rs. 1,270-5-11 was due to the plaintiffs on the date of the woman's death. There was a further prayer of the plaintiffs that a portion of this balance consisting of arrears of rent of the widow's lifetime recovered by the defendants and not by the plaintiffs may be ordered to be realised from the person and property of the defendants apart from the assets of the widow in the defendants' hands. That sum is a few annas under Rs. 300. The learned Subordinate Judge of Sitapur decreed both the reliefs, but on appeal by the defendants the suit was dismissed by the learned Third Additional District Judge of Lucknow.

The lower Appellate Court's opinion was that the mortgage came to an end with the life of the widow and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the balance personally from the widow. As regards arrears of rent it held that they were accumulations added to the corpus of the husband's estate and did not form the assets of the widow.

I shall take up the question regarding the arrears of rent first. In my opinion the lower Appellate Court has made a mistake in weighing the facts of the case. As laid down in the ruling referred to by the lower Appellate Court Ehigabati Koer v. Sohoda Koer (1), "the test to be applied to a case of this description is to determine from the surrounding circumstances the intention of the widow. Did she intend to treat the disputed property as part and parcel of the estate of her husband, or did she treat it as a temporary saving liable to be applied by her subsequently for her own purposes?" If the test is applied to the present case it will be obvious that the claim of the plaintiffs must prevail. A similar opinion was expressed by their Lordships in the Privy Council case reported as Raja Rajewara Drai Rajah of Ramnad v. Sunlara Pandiyasami Tevar (2). Their Lordships pointed out at page 157* that the presumption whether a widow dealt with the income of her deceased husband's estate as to make it an accretion to the corpus or not, must depend upon the circumstances of every case. In the Calcutta case cited above, the learned Judges have taken the trouble of distinguishing the case before them from a Bombay case in which rents realised from the tenants were held to be the assets of a widow. They observed: "This view may, at first sight, seem to militate against that adopted by Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in Rivett-Carnic v. Jiribai (3). That case, however, is distinguishable.....In that case the rent had actually been collected on behalf of the widow by her agent: at the time of her death it was consequently her money in the hands of her agent: no distinction could thus be drawn between the sums already expended and the balance in the hands of her agent." In the present case if the facts are considered in the true light, the widow had already expended the rents due to her during her lifetime. They had already been transferred to the mortgagees and thus her clear intention to treat them as her own personal property was disclosed from such action.

Apart from all considerations of Hindu Law, the plaintiffs were really landlords up to the date of the widow's death and whatever rents fell due during the period that they were landlords must be held to be due to them and not to their successors, the defendants.

I must, now, proceed to a consideration of the question whether the balance due to the plaintiffs on the mortgages is recoverable from the assets of the widow or not. For a decision of this question the only thing necessary to enquire is what was the contract between the parties. In both the mortgage-deeds there was a clause almost in identical terms to enforce the personal liability of the mortgagor. The mortgagees were declared to be entitled to recover their money by suit from the moveable and immoveable property and person of the executant in case of the mortgaged Mauza going out of the possession of the mortgagees upon the claim of any one for any reason. In the widest terms possible the executant has admitted her personal liability to pay the amount secured by the mortgages. The lower Appellate Court has imported in these clauses the words "during the executant's lifetime" without explaining how the expressions used in the two mortgages restricted the personal claim to the lifetime of the executant. In my opinion, the words are wide enough to enforce personal liability after the death of the executant without any reservation. If the widow has left any assets, the mortgagees are entitled to enforce their claim against those assets. When there is a clear contrast of this nature, it is not necessary to make any reference to the law of mortgage. If any authority were required it would be lent by the provisions of section 68 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act where the mortgagee is given a right to sue the mortgagor for the mortgage-money where the mortgagor has bound himself to re-pay the same. It was pointed out on behalf of the respondents by their learned Counsel that no one deprived the plaintiffs of the mortgaged property and that the interest of the widow came to an end with her death and by operation of law as must have been well known to the plaintiffs when they took the mortgages. This is quite true, but it appears to me that the clauses in the mortgage-deeds were entered to provide for such a contingency as the present of the widow dying within the period of the mortgage.

In my opinion the decree of the first Court was correct. I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the First Court with costs of this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 32—"Investment in the purchase of other lands," whether includes erection of buildings.

Having regard to the definition of the expression "land," the words "invested in the purchase of other lands" in section 32 of the Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Calcutta Improvement Trust Act include the erection of buildings upon the land. [p. 19, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a debutter property is acquired by the Calcutta Improvement Trust, the amount of compensation for that property must be paid over to the trustees if the President of the Trust is satisfied that the money would be invested by the trustees in the erection of buildings. [p. 19, cols 1 & 2.]

Rule against the order of the Court of Calcutta Improvement Tribunal in (Civil Deposit) Case No. 407 of 1919.

Babu Bepin Ohunder Mullick, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners in this case are the Trustees of a debutter estate. Some lands belonging to the estate have been acquired for the Calcutta Improvement Trust and a sum of Rs. 2,24,000 and odd is in deposit with the President of the Tribunal. The petitioners applied to the President for payment to them of the amount so deposited in order that they might erect buildings on the exempted portion of the land. The President refused to pay the money and this Rule was obtained to set aside that order.

It appears that only a portion of premises Nos. 79 and 80 Collotollah Street has been acquired and the remaining portion is in the occupation of certain lessees. The term of the lease has not yet expired. It is stated that the lessees have entered into an agreement with the petitioners under which they would pay net profits to the extent of 7 and 7½ per cent. in addition to the existing rents provided buildings are erected on the exempted land by the petitioners, and that plans of such buildings have been approved by the Corporation. It is also stated that, if advances are made to the contractors who would erect the buildings, it will be advantageous to the Trust estate as the costs in that case would be less. As stated above, the petitioners applied to the President of the Improvement Tribunal for payment to them of the money. That, however, was refused by the learned President on the ground that it was not a suitable mode of investment.

Now, section 32 of the Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Calcutta Improvement Trust Act provides that the Tribunal shall order the money to be invested in the purchase of other lands to be held under the like title and conditions of ownership as the land in respect of which such money shall have been deposited was held. Here, there can be no question as to the land being under the like title and conditions of ownership, because the proposal is to erect buildings on the land belonging to the Trust estate. The only question for consideration, therefore, is whether the erection of buildings would come within the words "invested in the purchase of other lands" in section 32 of the Act. Having regard to the definition of the expression "land," we think that the words of section 32 quoted above would include the erections of buildings upon the land, and if the President is satisfied, that the money would be invested in the erection of buildings as proposed by the petitioners, we are of opinion that he is bound to pay the money over to the petitioners.

We are informed that there is no question as to the petitioners being the sole trustees. The President may, however, easily satisfy himself as to the correctness of this statement.

The learned President in showing cause states that the order of the 14th August was made upon a request made verbally by the Vakil for the petitioners and, subsequently, on the 19th August, the petitioners submitted an unverified application for re-consideration of the order of the 14th August. Evidently, he is under a mistake because the record shows that there was a written petition filed on the 14th August, though it was not verified.

We think under these circumstances that the case should go back to the learned President of the Improvement Tribunal in order that he may satisfy himself as to whether the petitioners are the sole trustees of the Trust estate and, if so, whether the money would be invested in erection of buildings on the land and whether there is an agreement between them and their lessees for the erection of buildings on the portion of the land not acquired as mentioned in their petition and, if he is satisfied upon those points, we think that he should pay out the money to the petitioners.

We assess the hearing fee in this Rule at two gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down at once.

JUDGMENT.—Suit for specific performance of a contract of sale of a house by the plaintiffs vendees against the defendants-vendors. The property in suit Survey-sheet D-1, Survey No. 39, admeasuring 94 square yards with a house, in the Sadar Bazar Quarter, Karachi, was bequeathed by Lalau Mal by a registered Will of 1839 (Exhibit 25) to his younger wife, Vishnibai, who in turn left it by a Will (Exhibit 43) to her daughter, defendant No. 2 Laxmibai, KHEMCHAND RATANCHAND C. DHALOMAL.

The plaintiffs are the leading members of a charitable association called the Sarveh Hiteshi Ayurvedic Aushadhalaya Association and negotiated through their leading spirit Swami Vrikatanand, plaintiff No. 2 (a), with defendant No. 1. Dhalomal, husband of defendant No. 2, Lakshmibai; and on the 21st August 1917 defendant No. 1 passed the agreement (Exhibit 8) in suit in favour of plaintiff No. 1 Khemchand to sell the property for Rs. 30,000, receiving Rs. 2,000 as earnest money. On the 31st August this agreement was signed by defendant No. 2 Lakshmibai and the transaction was to be completed according to the agreement in four months. On the 9th November plaintiffs published a notice (Exhibit 32) in the Sind Observer of their proposed purchase. On 1st December 1917 they received a letter (Exhibit 11) from Messrs. Kalumal and Co. as Pleaders for Asibai, step-sister of defendant No. 2, Lakshmibai, asserting a claim to a half share in the property and objecting to the plaintiffs' purchase. The plaintiffs called upon the defendants to clear the title in respect of Asibai and her son Bachoomal; and correspondence (Exhibit 9) commencing with a letter on the 6th December ensued between the parties. On 22nd December 1917 the defendants' Pleader informed plaintiff No. 1 that the plaintiff had been guilty of breach and that, therefore, the earnest money was forfeited.

The case of the plaintiffs is that they were entitled to get from the defendants a clear marketable title, free from doubt as regards the claim of Asibai, but that the defendants had failed to clear the doubt so as to enable them to pay the balance of the purchase-money and to complete the transaction. The plaintiffs assert that on account of the rise of values of landed properties in Karachi the defendants delayed and obstructed and resiled from the agreement.

The defence in the main is that the defendants had cleared the title by producing to the plaintiffs the two Wills of Lalanmal and Vishenbai. They assert that it was the plaintiffs who were not in possession of the necessary purchase amount to complete the transaction, and failed to pay it and to tender a conveyance.

Two other defences were also raised which may briefly be noticed. The first paragraph of the written statement was that in addition to the earnest money of Rs. 2,000 paid on the 31st August the plaintiffs had also agreed but failed to pay Rs. 10,000 on the next day. The second defence was that defendant No. 2 Lakshmibai signed the agreement without having been read over to her and without knowledge of the contents.

The following six issues were framed by my learned predecessor Mr. Raymond:—

1. Did plaintiffs agree to pay Rs. 10,000 on the 22nd August 1917, if so, what is the effect of the failure to pay? Can the defendants plead this in view of the written agreement?
2. Were plaintiffs justified in calling upon defendants to file a suit against Asibai with a view of obtaining the declaration from the Court that Asibai had no interest? Does this fact disentitle the plaintiffs to specific performance?
3. Which party is guilty of breach?
4. Are plaintiffs entitled to specific performance?
5. Are plaintiffs entitled to any damages, if so, what and from whom?
6. General issue.

Issue No. 2 was on the 12th August amended by me (Exhibit 36) as follows:—

"Were the plaintiffs justified in calling upon the defendants to have their title cleared (as per the plaintiffs' letters in correspondence Exhibit 9) as against Asibai? Does this fact disentitle the plaintiffs to specific performance?"

The reason for the amendment was that Issue No. 2 as originally framed implied an admission on the part of the plaintiffs that they had called upon the defendants to file a suit against Asibai. But no such admission was made either in the correspondence Exhibit 9 or in the evidence called by the plaintiffs. The defendants were, therefore, given the choice of an express issue and evidence as to whether the plaintiffs had called upon the defendants to file such a suit or of having the issue amended as it actually has been. The defendants' learned Counsel has chosen the second alternative and the issue has been amended accordingly. My findings on these issues are as follows:—

Issue No. 1. Evidence on the agreement set up by the defendants is inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act.

KHEMCHAND RATANCHAND V. DHALOMAL.

Issue No. 2 (amended). The plaintiffs were justified in calling upon the defendants to clear the title of the latter as against Asibai. This fact does not disentitle the plaintiffs to specific performance.

Issue No. 3. Defendants are guilty of breach.

Issue No. 4. Plaintiffs are entitled to specific performance.

Issue No. 5 does not remain as the damages would have been rupees eleven thousand.

Issue No. 6. As per order.

My reasons for the findings are as follows:—

The defendants have led no evidence and have not asked to lead any evidence on the first issue, their learned Counsel practically admitting in arguments the insuperable bar of section 92 of the Evidence Act. In view of this admission, it is needless to labour the point further. It is plain that when the terms of the agreement are as clear and formal as in Exhibit 8, an oral agreement which could only be entered into at the time of such written agreement Exhibit 8 to pay so large a sum as Rs. 10,000 on the following day and not as they seem to state, Rs. 28,000 in four months, cannot be admitted without rendering the express terms of section 92 totally nugatory. It is urged for the plaintiffs that an oral agreement, such as the defendant No. 1 sets up, is on the face of it false and it must help to convict the defendant of falsehood and bad faith; and the fact that this false oral agreement was set up as early as 7th January through his Pleaders by correspondence convicts the defendant No. 1 of bad faith, even about the time of the completion of the contract.

It will be convenient in this connection also to notice the defence that the document Exhibit 8 was not read over and explained to defendant No. 2 when she signed it. An issue on the point was apparently originally drafted but was not persisted in. Certainly in the proceedings before me no such issue was asked for and no reference made except in the final arguments. The writer of Exhibit 8 Jamiat-rai is dead. Of the other parties at the signature of defendant No. 1 the two defendants deny that the agreement was read over or explained, while Keshamal witness, Exhibit 14, partner of plaintiff No. 1, asserts that it was defendant No. 2 who claimed to exercise the right of a pardah-nashin woman and has been examined on commission at her house. A perusal of her evidence with its point-blank denial of any knowledge or act of the whole transaction except her bare thumb impression constrains me to the conclusion that it is totally unacceptable. Making every allowance for the position of a Hindu wife who has devolved the management of this property of hers on her husband, I cannot for a moment believe that when defendant No. 1 negotiated and signed the agreement Exhibit 8 and afterwards agreed and arranged for the parties to go to his house and get his wife to sign it, that throughout this long period and, according to the defendants, even up to the two years that have since elapsed before her evidence, the husband should leave the wife in complete ignorance about the negotiations or the agreement. To cases such as the present where the husband, having entered into the agreement, obtains his wife's consent and signature shortly afterwards, the law which throws upon parties, dealing with pardah-nashin ladies, the onus probandi of their understanding the contents, has no application. I would, therefore, hold that the defendant No. 2, when she signed, was perfectly aware and understood the nature of her act and that she is for the purposes of this suit in exactly the same position as the defendant No. 1.

Issue No. 2 is, in my opinion, the crucial issue in this case and it must be considered along with Issue No. 3. The plaintiffs, it should be premised, had purchased the property for a charitable dispensary. They have none of them a personal interest in the case, and the leaders such as Khemchand Ratanchand plaintiff No. 1 and Ghulam Hussein Kassim plaintiff No. 2 appear to be merchants of position and means. Plaintiff No. 2A Swami Vriktanand is an ascetic and practising physician, who does not charge fees for treatment and is equally disinterested. These plaintiffs have produced clear evidence (Exhibits 18 to 23a) of regular books of account of three different firms and proved that the plaintiffs' association had ample funds to complete the sale long before the expiry of the stipulated period of four months in the agreement. I am, therefore, unable to accept the version for the defendants which rests upon no evidence worth the name, that the plaintiffs had no money and could not, therefore, complete the sale. On the letter, Exhibit 11, from Messrs. Kalumal and Co. and the correspondence (Exhibit 9) on the evidence of the plaintiffs and on the admission of the defendants there can be no question but that it was Asibai's claim which induced a doubt as to title in the minds of the plaintiffs and caused them to delay payments and tender of conveyance to the defendants until this doubt was solved.

In this view, without injustice to the lengthy evidence and the elaborate arguments on both sides, the case could have been to all intents and purposes tried or argued upon the correspondence alone, and the single question submitted to the Court, whether, upon this claim of Asibai's, met as it admittedly was by the defendants with the two Wills, the title offered by the defendants was a clear marketable title which the plaintiffs were bound to accept or whether it was so clouded that the plaintiffs were within their equitable rights in calling upon the defendants to clear it, whether in the manner expressed in the correspondence, Exhibit 9, or in the manner admitted in the oral evidence, viz., by the defendants' obtaining the signatures on the agreement of Asibai and Bachumal and two leading members of the defendants' caste and in any other reasonable manner.

The plaintiffs in addition to their ordinary rights under section 25 of the Specific Relief Act and section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act rely also on the concluding words in the third sentence of the second paragraph of the agreement, Exhibit 8: "That the vendor would also get the property free from all disputes and incumbrances and also get the signatures of all the other claimants (haqdars) thereto."

The plaintiffs contend that Asibai, being express claimant and a step sister of Lakshmbai defendant No. 2, the defendants were by virtue of this sentence, bound to clear their title by getting the signatures of Asibai and Bachumal. As for the two Wills, Probate was not taken out of either of them, and Vishenbai's Will was only registered after her death. The two Wills, therefore, did not clear the title sufficiently. It is contended for the defendants that the word 'haqdar' means not any ordinary claimant but only a rightful claimant, and applied only to Lakshmbai, whom the parties had in contemplation. The two Wills it is contended sufficiently cleared the title.

The equitable rights of the parties, whether under the general law or under the agreement, can only be construed and given effect by the Court in a spirit of fairness to both parties. The phrase "Marketable title free from reasonable doubt" may be incapable of legal definition; but the purchaser, while he is not on the one hand at liberty to raise doubts which are not considerable or rational, cannot be compelled on the other hand to take a title which will expose him to litigation or hazard, Pyle v. Waddingham (1), Scott and Alvarez's Contract, In re, Scott v. Alvarez (2). The question whether the doubt is reasonable must be determined on the facts of each case Ahmedbhai Habibbhai v. Sir Linshaw Petit (3).

On the actual facts of this case, I am of opinion that the doubts of the plaintiffs, as instructed by their legal advisers, were reasonable. First of all, the right of a Hindu, such as Lalammal, who had brothers, to bequeath property by a Will may be open to doubt. Secondly, Vishenbai's Will was not registered till after her death. Thirdly, no Probate had been taken out in respect of either Will. It is true that the law does not compel interested parties to seek a Probate of the Will of a Hindu in Karachi, but, on the other hand, it is equally true that so long as Probate is not taken out, it is open to interested parties to challenge the genuineness or the validity of the Will and of its provisions. Lastly, there was the patent fact that Asibai, a step sister of the owner defendant No. 2 had, through her Pleaders, formally asserted to the plaintiffs her claim to half the property in suit as against the defendants. I do not think it can be said that a reasonable purchaser would feel upon the two Wills alone that he was protected from further litigation and harassment on the part of Asibai, who had never admitted their genuineness or validity. The doubts of the plaintiffs were, therefore, reasonable and they were justified in calling upon the defendants to protect them against any action on the part of Asibai and her heirs.

The positive suggestion of the plaintiffs in this behalf did not actually extend to the filing of a suit against Asibai by the defendants. The first alternative they proposed was that the defendants should obtain the signature of Asibai and her son Bachumal. When the defendant No. 1 professed his inability to do so, they made a further suggestion. They suggested that half the purchase amount should be deposited by them with some solvent and respectable third party agreeable to both and that it should remain in deposit upon interest at 12 per cent. payable to the defendants who would not withdraw the principal, until the doubt as to Asibai's claim was solved. It appears to me under the circumstances to have been a reasonable offer, which in any case shows the alacrity and desire of the plaintiffs to complete the transaction. It was, however, refused by the defendant No. 1.

The argument for the defence that Vishendas witness, Exhibit 41, had taken a mortgage on the property for Rs. 6,000 from the defendants alone without Asibai's signature and that the plaintiffs should, like Vishendas, have been content with the title, is in my opinion sufficiently met by the plaintiffs. The latter justly pointed out that Asibai's claim only extended to half the property which was worth Rs. 30,000 and, therefore, a mortgagee to whom Asibai had made no claim, and in any case a mortgagee to the extent of Rs. 6,000 could well be satisfied with a mortgage without Asibai's signature, whereas a purchaser of the whole property for Rs. 30,000 to whom Asibai had notified her claim, was very differently circumstanced.

I conclude, therefore, that, as in the case of Ahmedbhai Habibbhai v. Sir Dinshaw Petit (3), Haji Mahomed Mitha v. Musaji Essaji (4) and Shrinivasdas v. Meherbhai (5), the plaintiffs had room for reasonable doubt both in law and in fact, as to the title, on the date of the suit, in spite of the Wills, and were justified in calling upon the defendants as they did in their correspondence and otherwise to clear title. How to do so was a matter mainly for the defendants. It did not suffice for the defendants to say that Asibai declined to give her signature. As a matter of fact, her son Bachumal states on oath in the box that though he made the claim through Messrs. Kalumal and Co. of his own accord, his persistence in it was directly instigated by the defendant No. 1, who asked him not to withdraw from the claim so as to enable him, the defendant No. 1, to renege from the agreement. The matter, however, is one of the word of Bachumal as against that of the defendant No. 1; and it is unnecessary for me to express an opinion as to whether the defendant No. 1 did or did not go to this extent. It suffices for the purpose of the present suit on the defendant No. 1's own admission that he did nothing beyond producing the two Wills, to hold that he did not solve the reasonable doubts of the plaintiffs as he was in law bound to do and did not even meet their suggestion of leaving half the purchase amount in deposit.

In this view of the case it is not, strictly speaking, necessary to consider whether the word 'hizlars' in the agreement is confined to the rightful owner such as Luxmitai or to quite new claimants such as Asibai and Bachumal, who asserted them, though they have now in Court agreed to give up all claim to the property. Reading the agreement as a whole, I should say that the parties and the writer meant by the sentence and the word in question that the defendant's bound themselves to give to the plaintiffs a title free from all reasonable doubt and that they had not then in contemplation any particular claimant whether rightful owners such as Luxmitai or others such as Asibai. The case is, therefore, clearly distinguishable from cases such as Birlashri Prasad v. Mahant Jairam Gir (6) where the purchaser insisted on including in the conveyance a clause giving him an absolute warranty of title, and failing such insertion withheld payment of the purchase-money beyond the time fixed. This case has been distinguished in the recent case of Madurai Ohetty v. Babu Saheb (7). The facts of the latter case are somewhat analogous to those of the present. Until, therefore, the defendants had satisfactorily solved this reasonable doubt of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs were justified in not paying the balance of the purchase amount and tendering a conveyance but in coming to Court for investigation of the title and for specific performance, if the title was good. The defendants were not justified in cancelling the agreement or forfeiting the earnest-money, Jamshed Khodaram Irani v. Burori Dhunjibhai (2).

I would, therefore, hold on the third issue that the defendants are guilty of the breach and, as in the Madras case quoted above, that the purchasers are entitled to sue for specific performance and enquiry with a view to clear up the question of title.

The question, therefore, remains whether on the fourth and fifth issues the plaintiffs should be granted specific performance or damages only. No reasons have been placed before me to disentitle the plaintiffs to specific performance. The defendants have executed a second mortgage for Rs. 12,000 in favour of the same mortgagee V'shendas Fatehchand. It is also in evidence that from the day of the agreement up to the day of conveyance and until the end of 1919, landed property in Karaahi has been rising in value at varying rates, at different times and in different quarters although, during the last few months, the greatest rise has passed and there has been, if any thing, a tendency to fall though not by any means to the rates before the agreement. The amount of the two mortgages is, however, amply covered by the balance of the purchase amount, and the fluctuations, though they make it difficult to assess damages on the day of the breach, induce no such difficulty in specific performance. I would, therefore, follow the usual rules which, except for reasons shown, grant specific performance, and answer on the fourth issue that the plaintiffs are entitled to specific performance and not to damages on the fifth issue. On the evidence of the brokers those cited for the plaintiffs are professional brokers while those for the defendants are small men. For this reason, so to speak, I would assess the damages at Rs. 12,000, if specific performance had not been granted.

On the general issue the learned Counsel for the defendants has argued that as the plaintiffs' doubts as to title have, now, in the face of Bachumal's admission in the witness-box, vanished and are now seen to have been groundless, the defendants are entitled to their costs from the plaintiffs even if the findings on the other issues are against the former. The question of costs is, however, one for the judicial discretion of the Court both on its findings and on its general view of the conduct of the parties. The findings are against the defendants. Conduct in the case of vendors and purchasers must be such as can be expected from parties dealing fairly and squarely with each other. In the present case, I am clearly of opinion, that the advantage in this respect is entirely with the plaintiffs and against the defendants. The plaintiffs have been throughout, subject to the doubt arising through Asibai's claim and the counsel of their advisers in respect thereto, ready and anxious to perform their part of the contract. The conduct of the defendants, on the contrary, from the time that Asibai put forward her claim, appears to me to have been precisely the opposite. There is very definite evidence of the broker Bhagwanji (witness Exhibit 13) to show that the defendant was after the agreement ready to sell the property for Rs. 45,000. There is the evidence of Bachumal that the defendants asked him to persist in his claim. Defendant No. 1 appears to have refused receipt of a telegram on the 7th December from the plaintiffs and to have delayed replying to the letters of the 6th, 19th and 22nd December, that is to say, the date after the expiry of the period fixed in the agreement for the conveyance. He appears to have repented of the agreement very soon after it, probably in view of the rising prices and to have been only waiting to put an end to it on the earliest possible date, viz., 22nd December. To this conduct must be added the false defences raised in the suit such as the alleged agreement in Issue No. 1, and the alleged omission to read and explain the agreement to defendant No. 2. Nothing more is needed to justify the placing of all the plaintiffs' costs on the defendants.

There will, therefore, be a decree for the plaintiffs in the following terms:—

The plaintiffs do deposit Rs. 28,000 in Court within 15 days of this decree and to tender a conveyance as in the agreement Exhibit 8 and the two defendants within a week of cash deposit do pass the conveyance in respect of the property in suit in favour of the plaintiffs, the Sarveh Hiteshi Ayurvedic Anushadhalaya by its present Chairman Swami Vikatanand, plaintiff No. 2a, free of all incumbrances and claims. On the defendants failing to do so, the Nazir will execute the conveyance for them. Out of the amount paid into Court by the plaintiffs, the defendants, or on their default, the Nazir will make up the accounts of the mortgage with Seth Vishendas Patchchand, witness, Exhibit 41, and redeem the two mortgages with interest and have them endorsed by the mortgagee as paid off and made over to the defendants. The balance of the purchase amount after deducting the amount found due to the mortgagee, and the amount due to the plaintiffs for costs, if the plaintiffs so desire, will be made over to the defendants.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Land acquisition—Principle of assessing compensation—Potential value—Operative effect of special adaptability or future utility—Test.

Tribunals assessing compensation must take into account, not only the present purpose to which the land is acquired, but also any other more beneficial purpose to which in the course of events it might, within a reasonable period, be applied, just as an owner might do if he were bargaining with a purchaser in the market. [p. 27, col. 1.]

The operative effect of special adaptability or future utility must be estimated, not by idle speculation and impractical imagination, but by prudent business considerations such as would weigh with an intending purchaser at the imaginary market which would have ruled, had the land been exposed for sale when it was subjected to compulsory acquisition. [p. 27, col. 2.]

Too much importance must not be attached to evidence of offers in ascertaining the market value of land; but the position is different where the question is, whether there is a market at all for a tract of land for use for a special purpose. [p. 28, col. 1.]

Per Buckland, J.—In assessing the compensation payable enquiry should be made as to what is the market value of the land when laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owner could dispose of it. Whether or not the particular way in which it is claimed that the land if so laid out could be disposed to the best advantage to the owner is one appropriate to prevailing conditions is a question of fact to be decided according to the circumstances of each case [p. 29, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—These ten appeals are directed against five awards made by the Land Acquisition Judge of Howrah in five references under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. The Collector made his award in each case on the basis of the condition of the land at the time of the declaration. He adopted a three-fold classification, namely, homestead land at Rs. 400 per bigha, garden land at Rs. 100 per bigha and tank at Rs. 40 per bigha. The claimants applied in each case for a reference to the Court under sub-section (1) of section 18 and formulated the ground of their objection to the award of the Collector in these terms: "The land acquired is locate just by the side of a brick-field; it could have been a brick-field in future and the value of the land should consequently be assessed at not less than Rs. 1,500 per bigha." Thus the substantial question for consideration on the reference was, whether the land should be valued on the basis of its actual condition at the time of the declaration or whether its special adaptability for possible use as a brick field should be deemed a relevant element in the determination of its market value. The District Judge gave effect to the contention of the claimants that as the lands adjoined brick-fields and might at any time have been converted into brick-field lands, their special adaptability for the purpose was a material factor in the assessment of their market value. But as the situation and condition of the lands would render necessary an appreciable expenditure of money to convert them for use as brick-fields, he assessed their value at Rs. 800 per bigha. The Secretary of State for India in Council has appealed against the five awards on the ground that the District Judge should have valued the lands to their present disposition and should not have valued them on the conjectural ground that they were capable of conversion into brick-field lands or even as lands which might be absorbed into neighbouring brick-fields. The claimants, on the other hand, have preferred five appeals against the awards on the ground that although the District Judge had adopted the principle of special adaptability, the market value of the lands as assessed by him was inadequate, as he had allowed for cost of conversion on too liberal a basis. The ten appeals consequently re-open all the important questions in controversy before the District Judge.

As regards the appeals preferred by the Secretary of State for India in Council, it is manifest that the District Judge rightly declined to assess the market value of the lands solely on the basis of their actual disposition at the time of acquisition. The principle that the fairest and most favourable principle of compensation to the owners is to estimate the market value of the property, not according to its present disposition, but laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owners could dispose of it, was regarded as well-established by Garth, O. J. in the case of Iremchand Burrell v. Collector of Calcutta (1). The doctrine was applied by Sargent, O. J. in the case of Collector of Pooja v. Kashinath (2) when he formulated the question for solution as to what would be the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owner could dispose of it and what would be its market value if so laid out. The same view was emphasized in different terms in Hink v. Secretary of State (3): "The probable use of land in the most advantageous way, in accordance with or following the use already made of neighbouring lands, leads to speculative advances in prices, and regard should be had to such advance. The utility of land is certainly an element for consideration in estimating its value, that is, the utility which may be calculated by a prudent businessman." The limitation involved in the concluding words of this passage is of fundamental importance, for as Jenkins, O. J. observed in Kailas Chandra Mitra v. Secretary of State (4), what has to be determined is the "market value of the land", which may be roughly described as the price that an owner, willing and not obliged to sell, might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing purchaser with whom he was bargaining for the sale and purchase of the land. Precisely the same test was indicated by Moulton, L. J. in Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, In re (5), when he observed that the owner is entitled to be paid the full price for his land, and any and every element of value which they possess must be taken into consideration in so far as they increase the value to him. This was approved by the Judicial Committee in Cedar Rapids Manufacturing and Power Co. v. Lacoste (6), and is in accordance with the opinion previously expressed by Vaughan Willam L. J., in Ewila and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries and Pontypridd Waterworks Company, In re (7), that in assessing compensation every circumstance which is in existence as a fact at the moment when the notice to treat is given as also the probable use which might be made of the property must be taken into consideration, although we cannot take into account a contingency which cannot be anticipated and cannot be measured. MOHINI MOHAN BANERJEE v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

there is room for divergence of opinion in the application of the principle to the facts of a concrete case, is illustrated by the course of events in the litigation last mentioned, where the House of Lords disagreed with the conclusion of the Court of Appeal which had reversed the decision of the primary Court; Bailfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries v. Pontypool Waterworks Company (8). The stages of the matter is that tribunals assessing compensation must take into account, not only the present purpose to which the land is applied, but also any other more beneficial purpose to which, in the course of events, it might within a reasonable period be applied, just as an owner might do if he were bargaining with a purchaser in the market. The recognition of this potential value, as it has been called, may be found in a variety of cases, Reg. v. Brown (9) (Potential value of agricultural land for building purposes); Ripley v. G. N. Ry. Co. (10) (Contiguity of land to a reservoir making it suitable for building a mill); Brown v. Commissioner for Railways (11) (Future profitable working of mine); Ossalinsky v. Corporation of Manchester (12) Browne and Allen on Compensation, 659 (Contiguity of land to a lake, making it specially adaptable for use as a reservoir); Fiddel and New Castle and Gateshead Water Co., In re (3) (Fitness of land for reservoir); Gough and Aspathia, Silloth and District Joint Water Board, In re (14) (Fitness of land as base for water supply); Wilney v. North-Eastern Ry. Co. (15) (Adaptability of land for railway purposes); Oeder Rapids Manufacturing and Lower Co. v. Lacoste (6) (suitability for development of water power). The principle has also been applied where the land of the claimant, though not in itself adaptable for a reservoir, is so adaptable in conjunction with other adjacent lands belonging to other owners: Mayor of Tynemouth and Duke of Northumberland, In re (16). Examples of the recognition of the doctrines of potential value and special adaptability may also be found in the cases of Hugli Mills Co. v. Secretary of State (17), Rajendra Nath Banerjee v. Secretary of State (18), Mulji Khetsey, In re (19), Government v. Dyal Mulji (20), Dhaniibhoy, In re (21), Dorabji Oursstji, In re (22), Sorabji, Jamselji, In re (23), Daya Khushal v. Assistant Collector, Surat (24). The true rule was tersely stated by Lord Danedin in pronouncing the opinion of the Judicial Committee in two recent cases. In Oeder Rapids Manufacturing and Lower Co. v. Lacoste (6) he formulated the proposition that the value to be paid for is the value to the owner as it exists at the date of the taking; such value consists in all advantages which the land possesses, present or future, but it is the present value alone of such advantages that falls to be determined. In Ollum v. City of Vancouver (25) he added the necessary corollary that while all opportunity of employment for a certain purpose in regard to the position of the land to be acquired is to be taken into account, there must some point where the opportunity becomes so remote as to be negligible. This brings into clear relief the fundamental importance of the test that the operative effect of special adaptability or future utility, (expressions which have sometimes been criticised, not wholly without reason) must be estimated, not by idle speculation and impractical imagination, but by prudent business considerations such as would weigh with an intending purchaser at the imaginary market which would have ruled, had the land been exposed for sale when it was subjected to compulsory acquisition. Let us now examine the circumstances of the case before us in view of these principles.

MOHINI MOHAN BANERJEE V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

It is an admitted fact that the lands acquired are at a short distance from the Bally canal which has numerous brick-fields along both its banks. Three of these brick-fields were owned at the time of the declaration by Ghose Kumar and Bull. These brick-fields adjoined one another and the acquired lands were cut off from direct access to the canal by their interposition. It appears from the evidence of the superintendent of the East Indian Railway brick-fields that bricks are made either from natural clay or from silt deposit. There is no evidence to show that there was such a depth of natural clay on the acquired lands that they could have worked as brick fields for any length of time. Consequently, it may be assumed that the acquired lands could not be profitably used as independent brick-fields without deposit of silt. To obtain the requisite deposit of silt, a regular water supply would be necessary and as the acquired lands were cut off from the canal by intervening brick-fields, they could only have been of value for brick-field purposes if they should be acquired for and included in the neighbouring brick-fields. The claimants must accordingly show, in order to establish their proposition that the lands should have been valued on a brick-field basis, that there was reasonable probability that the lands would, but for their acquisition, have been included in those brick-fields. This assertion is not based on a mere hypothesis that as business flourished in the adjoining brick-fields, their owners might, in the normal course of events, seek for room for expansion. The claimants have actually proved that plots of land have from time to time been added to and included in at least one adjoining brick-field. They have also proved by reliable evidence that Kumar and Bull had negotiated with them for purchase or lease of some of these lands with a view to their incorporation in their existing brick-fields. No doubt, as pointed out by Batehlor, J. in Government of Bombay v. Merwanji Muncherji (26) too much importance must not be attached to evidence of offers in ascertaining the market value of land; but the position is different where, as here, the question is, whether there is a market at all for a tract of land for use for a specified purpose. In the present instance, there is no room for controversy that there is trustworthy evidence to show that if the acquired lands had been thrown into the market, adjoining brick-field owners would in all probability have come forward to purchase them or to take leases of them for inclusion in their brick-fields. The District Judge has thus rightly concluded that there was a reasonable probability that the lands might have been taken up by the adjoining owners for the extension of their brick-fields and that this possibility must be taken into consideration in calculating the amount to be awarded as compensation upon compulsory acquisition. The chief ground urged in support of the appeals preferred by the Secretary of State cannot consequently be sustained.

As regards the appeals preferred by the claimants, the point for consideration is whether the rate fixed by the lower Court is adequate. The District Judge was plainly right when he held that documents filed on behalf of the Secretary of State were not of much assistance. They relate to transactions regarding lands at some distance from the lands acquired, and even if they relate to leases or purchases of lands contiguous to brick-fields, they are not in respect of transfer of land to brick-field owners for brick-field purposes. On the other hand, the claimants have adduced documentary evidence (conveyances, leases and land acquisition awards) in respect of lands actually in use as brick-fields, these indicate a rate which varies from a minimum of Rs. 1,200 per bigha to a maximum of Rs. 2,250 per bigha, the majority of transactions show that the rate varies from Rs. 1,440 to Rs. 1,650 per bigha. From an analysis of the relevant evidence, the District Judge had thus correctly held that Rs. 1,600 per bigha may fairly be taken as the rate for fully prepared brick-fields. He has then allowed a reduction of 50 per cent. because the lands acquired would have to be converted into lands fit for use as brick-fields at a considerable outlay. This reduction, however, is not supported by the evidence on the record. The method of brick manufacture in this country as described in standard treatises (such as the paper by Major Falcouet R. E. in Volume III of the professional papers on Indian Engineering published by the Government), also does not lend any support to the view that the costs of conversion of ordinary land into land fit for use as brick fields amounts to one-half of the value of the land. On the other hand, such evidence as there is on the record shows that the reduction allowed by the Court below is excessive. The District Judge has correctly found that the leases on the record prove that prepared brick-field lands fetch a rent of Rs. 80 per bigha. The District Judge has also accepted the statement of Mohini Mohan Banerjee, one of the claimants, as to the rent paid to him by Mr. Ball for a plot of 15 cottas incorporated in a brick-field but he has inaccurately stated this to be Rs. 50 per bigha instead of Rs. 80 as the rent fixed as a lump sum. If this statement be accepted, the rent for unprepared land works out at Rs. 200 for three bighas as against Rs. 240 for three bighas of prepared land. This gives the proportion by which the value should be reduced, namely, 6 to 5. The conclusion follows that if the rate for prepared brick-fields is Rs. 1,600 as found by the District Judge, the rate for unprepared land should be approximately Rs. 1,333. We accordingly direct that the lands acquired be valued at Rs. 1,300 instead of Rs. 800 per bigha.

The result is that Appeals Nos. 266, 280, 281, 282 and 283 filed by the Secretary of State must be dismissed with costs. The hearing fee in each of these cases is assessed at two gold mohurs. Appeals Nos. 251, 260, 281, 282 and 283 preferred by the claimants are allowed with costs. The land in each case will be valued at Rs. 1,300 instead of Rs. 800 per bigha. The hearing fee in each of these appeals also is assessed at two gold mohurs. The order for proportionate costs made by the lower Court will stand but the amounts will be modified on the basis of the sums awarded in this Court.

BUCKLAND, J.—The principle adopted by the District Judge in assessing the compensation payable, by enquiring what is the market value of the land when laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owner could dispose of it, is very well established and he has correctly applied it. Whether or not the particular way in which it is claimed that the land if so laid out could be disposed of to the best advantage to the owner is one appropriate to prevailing conditions is a question of fact to be decided according to the circumstances of each case. In the case before us there can be no question that the land which has been held to be suitable for a brick field, would fetch a higher price, if sold for that purpose to the owner of an adjacent brick-field than if sold for any other purpose. The District Judge has disregarded the evidence of leases of other lands adduced by the Secretary of State and done so rightly on two grounds:—(1) the lands are not contiguous to those in question, and (2) they are not leases of land to brick-field owners for the purpose of making bricks.

In assessing compensation the District Judge has erred in deducting 50 per cent. as the cost of converting the land for the purposes of a brick-field.

In addition to the evidence referred to by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee there is the statement of Sarada Prosad Kumar that it took him 6 or 8 months to convert land into a brick-field. Applying this to a computation of the value of the land on a lease-hold basis, the reduction on account of conversion for this particular purpose is comparatively trifling. Taking this in conjunction with the reasons given by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee I agree with him as to the rate at which compensation should be paid and I concur in the order made.

Mortgage—Contribution—Auction-purchaser of part of mortgaged property, liability of.

KARAMAT ALI V. GORAKHPUR BANK, LD.

An auction-purchaser in execution of a decree obtained upon a mortgage purchases the rights of the mortgagor and the mortgagee at the date on which the mortgage was made, and any subsequent equities or liabilities which arise in respect of the mortgaged property cannot attach to him inasmuch as he acquires the property free from any such liabilities or equities, [p. 31, col. 1.]

Where a portion of a mortgaged property has been sold, a suit for contribution for the mortgage money can be brought only against the holder of the portion of the mortgaged property which has remained unsold and not against the auction-purchaser of the portion sold, [p. 31, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are these. On the 15th of June 1833 one Hasru mortgaged a three-annas share to the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The mortgaged property was sold in execution of a simple money-decree, and a one-anna share was purchased by one Kali Charan, who was the predecessor-in-title of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Another one-anna share was purchased by Sarju Prasad, and the third one-anna share was purchased by Wazir Ali, the defendant No. 5. Sarju Prasad mortgaged the one-anna share purchased by him to the Gorakhpur Bank. The Bank obtained a decree upon that mortgage and caused the one-anna share to be sold by auction and it became the purchaser of that share. The defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the mortgagees under the mortgage of 18-8, brought a suit on the basis of that mortgage against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the Gorakhpur Bank and Wazir Ali, defendant No. 5, and obtained a decree for sale. In the suit in which that decree was passed a compromise was entered into between the mortgagees and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by which the latter agreed to pay to the mortgagees Rs. 1,333-5-4 and the mortgagees undertook to release from liability the one anna share purchased by their father, Kali Charan. The aforesaid amount appears to have been paid to the decree-holders and a sum of Rs. 14,200 was the balance outstanding under the decree. The decree holders caused the one anna share of Wazir Ali to be sold by auction, and this sale realised Rs. 4,200. They then put up to sale the one-anna share purchased by the Gorakhpur Bank, and this sale realised Rs. 10,000 which fully discharged the decree. After this auction sale the present suit was instituted by the Gorakhpur Bank against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and Wazir Ali, the fifth defendant. The Bank's contention was that the one-anna share, of which it was the purchaser, was liable for one-third of the mortgage-debt, that it had contributed more than its ratable share, and that the Bank was, therefore, entitled to be recouped the amount which the sale of its property had fetched in excess of its share of liability, and on this ground the Bank claimed Rs. 4,822-3-7 and interest. The Court below dismissed the claim as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2; it also dismissed the claim against Wazir Ali; but it made a decree against the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the decree-holders, on the ground that under the compromise between them and the heirs of Kali Charan they had undertaken to compensate the heirs of Kali Charan for any amount which they might have to pay on account of the decree in addition to the amount which they had undertaken to pay. The decree-holders, the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, have preferred this appeal, and it is contended on their behalf that if the claim could be maintained against any one, it could be maintained against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the decree of the Court below as regards them (defendants Nos. 3 and 4) was an erroneous decree. We may mention that the Gorakhpur Bank did not prefer any appeal against that part of the decree of the Court below which dismissed the claim, against Wazir Ali and against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In our opinion the decree of the Court below as regards Wazir Ali is correct. No doubt the one-anna share which Wazir Ali purchased was ratably liable for one-third of the mortgage-debt; but Wazir Ali surrendered that share and it was sold by auction. Therefore, no claim for contribution could be brought forward against him. He was not in possession of any part of the mortgaged property after the auction sale of his one anna share, and no claim could be advanced against him as no personal liability was incurred by him. The only persons against whom the Gorakhpur

Bank, which undoubtedly had contributed more than its ratable share of liability, could maintain its claim were the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, whose share in the mortgaged property has not yet been sold, but the Court below exempted those defendants from the claim on the ground that the decree-holder, defendants Nos. 3 and 4, had undertaken by the compromise to pay up any amount for which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 might be liable. This part of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is, in our opinion, erroneous. There was no privity of contract between the plaintiff (i.e., the Gorakhpur Bank) and the decree-holder, defendants Nos. 3 and 4, and, therefore, by virtue of the compromise the Gorakhpur Bank could have no claim as against the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The right of the Gorakhpur Bank to obtain contribution from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 could not be deemed to attach to the decree-holders defendants Nos. 3 and 4 by reason of their agreement with the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to release their one-anna share from liability for the mortgage. It was, however, contended by Mr. Dillon on behalf of the Bank that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 being auction-purchasers of the one anna share of the Gorakhpur Bank, were liable to make good to the Bank the amount which the Bank had to pay in excess of its share of liability. In our opinion the position of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 was that of auction-purchasers of the one-anna share of the Gorakhpur Bank. As such auction-purchasers they could not be held liable to contribute towards the mortgage-money. An auction-purchaser in execution of a decree obtained upon a mortgage purchases the rights of the mortgagor and the mortgagee at the date on which the mortgage was made, and any subsequent equities or liabilities which arose in respect of the mortgaged property could not attach to them inasmuch as they acquired the property free from any such liabilities or equities. Mr. Dillon has failed to draw our attention to any authority in which it has been held that a claim like the present could be brought against the auction-purchaser. He referred to the case of Shantó Chandni Mukerji v. Nirmal Sukh (1), but that was not a case like the present and the circumstances of that case are wholly distinguishable from those of this case. The case, which is applicable to the appeal before us, is that of Hari Raj Singh v. Ahmad-ud-din Khan (2). In that case it was held that a suit for contribution could be brought only against the holder of the portion of the mortgaged property which had remained unsold. In this view the decree of the Court below cannot be supported and this appeal must prevail. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the suit with costs and fees on the higher scale as against the appellants.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 16 OF 1920.

RESPONDENTS.

Adverse possession as between co-sharers—Joint property—Rights of co-tenants—Possession of one co-tenant, when adverse to others—Ouster—Exclusive possession—Erection of substantial building on joint property if conclusive evidence of ouster—Joint owner effecting in good faith valuable improvements upon common property—Equitable considerations upon partition—Trustee, claiming adversely—Burden of proof—Adoption, direct evidence of, if necessary.

In order to establish adverse possession as between co-sharers, there must be evidence of an open assertion of a hostile title by one of them to the knowledge of the others; mere non-participation in the profits by one party and exclusive occupation by the other is not conclusive. [p. 36, col. 1.]

If possession may either be lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former. [p. 36, col. 2.]

JAGANNATH MARWARI v. CHANDNI BIBI.

Possession is never considered adverse, if it can be referred to a lawful title. [p. 36, col. 2.]

Every co-tenant has the right to enter into and occupy the common property and every part thereof, provided that in so doing he does not exclude his fellow tenants or otherwise deny to them some right to which they are entitled as co-tenants; and they on their part may safely assume, until something occurs of which they must take notice and which indicates the contrary, that the possession taken and held by him is held as a co-tenant; and is in law the possession of all the co-tenants, and not adverse to any of them. [p. 36, col. 2.]

But one co-tenant may oust the others and set up an exclusive right of ownership in himself, and an open, notorious and hostile possession of this character for the statutory period will ripen into title as against the co-tenants who were ousted. [p. 36, col. 2.]

In order to render the possession of one co-tenant adverse to the others, not only must the occupancy be under an exclusive claim of ownership, in denial of the rights of the other co-tenants, but such occupancy must have been made known to the other co-tenants, either by express notice or by such open and notorious acts as must have brought home to the other co-tenants' knowledge of the denial of their rights. [p. 37, col. 1.]

No comprehensive formula can be framed to test whether the possession of a co-tenant in a particular case is adverse to the other co-tenants. But the evidence to show adverse possession by one co-tenant must be much clearer than between strangers to the title, and the hostile intent of the co-tenant in possession must be shown by unequivocal conduct. [p. 37, col. 1.]

The erection of a substantial building on joint property by one co-owner cannot be regarded as conclusive evidence of ouster. [p. 35, col. 2.]

If a joint owner has in good faith effected valuable improvements upon the common property at his own expense, equity takes that fact into consideration upon a partition and in some suitable way makes an allowance to him therefor, in addition to his rateable share of the property. [p. 38, col. 1.]

The burden lies upon the trustee to establish when he became faithless to the trust imposed upon him and asserted a hostile title in himself to the knowledge of the rightful owner. [p. 35, col. 2.]

It is not necessary to produce direct evidence of the fact of an adoption: where it has taken place long since and where the adopted son has been treated as such by the members of the family, and in public transactions every presumption will be made that every circumstance has taken place which is necessary to account for such a state of things as is proved or admitted to exist. JUDGMENT.

MOONJEET, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has resulted in this appeal consists of two parcels of land situated in the Town of Raniganj. The plaintiffs claim an one-fourth share of a leasehold interest in the land created by the Bengal Coal Company, the admitted landlords. The contesting defendants deny the alleged title of the plaintiffs and claim an independent right in themselves in the entire property. The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff, on the question of title; he has also held that such title was in subsistence at the date of the commencement of the suit and had not been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the defendants. In this view, the Trial Court has made a decree for possession upon declaration of title and has further directed partition by metes and bounds. On the present appeal, the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the plaintiffs have failed to prove the existence at any time of the specific title set up by them; and, secondly, that even if the plaintiffs had such title at some remote period of time, it had been extinguished long before the date of the suit by adverse possession on the part of the defendants. For the determination of the questions in controversy which are closely connected and may be conveniently discussed together, a brief recital of the history of the devolution of the title to the disputed property is essential.

On the 14th August 1855 the Bengal Coal Company granted a permanent building lease in respect of two plots of land in the Town of Raniganj, at an annual rent of Rs. 24, to one Ram Singh Chaudhuri. There was some controversy in the Court below upon the question, whether the two plots covered by this lease are identical with the two parcels now in dispute. The schedule attached to the lease sets out the boundaries of the two plots, but, as might have been anticipated, the Subordinate Judge found it difficult to identify all the boundaries after the lapse of sixty years; there can, however, be little room for reasonable doubt as to the identity of the land. Ram Singh Chaudhuri continued in possession upon payment of rent to the Bengal Coal Co. till 1874 when he transferred his leasehold interest to JAGANNATH MARWARI & CHANDNI BIBI.

Mangalehand Baldeodas, who took a half share, Jainarain, who took an one fourth share, and Panna Lal, who took the remaining one-fourth share. These persons continued in occupation, upon payment of rent to the superior landlords at the rate of Rs. 24 annually for at least a quarter of a century. As there is no indication whatever that they held other lands under the Bengal Coal Co. at the same rate, the Subordinate Judge has, in our opinion, correctly held, notwithstanding the difficulty in the identification of boundaries, that the land now in dispute is precisely the same land as is covered by the lease of the 14th August 1855 granted by the Company.

We have next to consider the history of the share of Panna Lal which forms the subject matter of this litigation. The relationship of the members of his family is set out in the following genealogical table :

PANNA LAL, died 1892,
Surajmal, died during life- time of Panna Lal	Mahadeo, (adopted son) died 12th September 1898,
	Ramnibas (adopted 1892) plaintiff No. 2.

The evidence leaves no room for doubt that Mangalehand Baldeodas, Jainarain and Panna Lal were jointly in enjoyment of the lease hold property from 1865 till 1882. In the latter year, Panna Lal who had lost his son Surajmal and had taken Mahadeo in adoption, retired to Benares. With a view to make provision for the maintenance of his widowed daughter-in-law, Lashmi Bibi, he executed on the 25th June 1882 a deed of gift whereby he gave her a life-interest in his share of the disputed property; he further directed that his adopted son Mahadeo would become full owner upon the death of Lashmi Bibi. The document was not registered, though it transferred interest in immoveable property of value exceeding Rs. 100. The transaction took place, it will be observed, shortly before the Transfer of Property Act came into force on the 1st July, 1882, and was consequently not affected by the operation of section 123 which provides that for the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument, signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses. The deed of gift was, however, compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, and, consequently could not, under section 49, affect any immoveable property comprised therein or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property. It was, however, admissible in evidence for a collateral purpose, namely, to explain the reason why Lashmi Bibi received the income as if she were a joint owner in possession of the property; Lalla Gopee Chand v. Sheikh Likut Hossein (1), Thakors Fateeingi v. Bamanji Ardeskar Palal (2), Venkatachari v. Rangaswami Iyengar (3), Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4). It may also be added that if there had been evidence of delivery of possession, the intended gift might have been validated under the Hindu Law which was then in force: Kailas Mullick v. Kanahya Lal (5), Dharmodas Das v. Nitarni Dasi (6), Lokshimori Dasi v. Nityananda Day (7), Ram Chandra v. Ranjit Singh (8). The true position then was that the intended gift by Panna Lal in favour of his widowed daughter-in-law, Lashmi Bibi, did not take effect in law. But the evidence makes it abundantly clear that the first defendant Jagannath (the son of Mangalehand), who managed the property on behalf of the joint owners, regularly paid to Lashmi Bibi the surplus income in the one-fourth share of Pannalal. This continued unquestionably during the lifetime of Pannalal who died, as we have seen, in 1892. It is, we think, also indisputable that as the Subordinate Judge finds, Lashmi Bibi continued to receive the income also during the lifetime of Mahadeo who might before his death on the 12th September 1896 have repudiated the unregistered deed of gift; but there is no indication that he took such a step; on the other hand, he apparently acquiesced in the arrangement which his father had made for the maintenance of his sister in law. In this connection, we may add that the Subordinate Judge had before him ample materials to justify the conclusion that Mahadeo had been duly adopted by Pannalal and that Ramnibas had in his turn been validly adopted by Mahadeo. As has been repeatedly ruled, it is not necessary to produce direct evidence of the fact of adoption; where it has taken place long since and where the adopted son has been treated as such by the members of the family and in public transactions, every presumption will be made that every circumstance has taken place which is necessary to account for such a state of things as is proved or admitted to exist; Rajendro Nath Holdar v. Jogendro Nath Banerjee (9), Achal Ram v. Razim Hussain Khan (10), Bup Narain v. Gopal Devi (11), Scho Bawa v. Nuloghun Myles (12), Hur Dyal Negv. Roy Krishna (13), Vysa Ohim-an Lal v. Vysa Ramchandra (14). The Subordinate Judge has further found that Lashmi Bibi continued to receive from Jagannath one-fourth share of the surplus income for several years after the death of Mahadeo, down to 1901. He has, however, held that there is no satisfactory proof that thereafter Lashmi Bibi received the income; but under what circumstances payment came to be discontinued has not been explained by Jagannath, who is the first defendant in this suit. We next find that disputes broke out between Lashmi Bibi and Chandni Bibi; that is, the widows of Surajmal and Mahadeo, and the daughters-in-law of Pannalal. Matters in difference were referred to arbitration on the 14th July 1909 and the arbitrators made their award on the 12th June 1912. The substance of the award was that Chandni Bibi and Ramnibas would pay to Lashmi Bibi for her life Rs. 12 per month, and Lashmi Bibi would, for a consideration of Rs. 1,000, release whatever right or claim she might have to the Raniganj property under the deed of gift, of the 25th June 1882. This award was confirmed and embodied in a formal memorandum, which was executed by all parties concerned on the 31st March 1913, and was registered on the following day. The present suit was then instituted on the 13th October 1917 by Chandni Bibi and Ramnibas against the representatives of Mangalchand, Baldeodas and Jainarain, the three co-sharers of Pannalal. Upon the question of title, there can, in our opinion, be no vestige of doubt that the claim is well-founded. The only question which requires consideration is, whether the title of the plaintiffs as joint-owners with the contesting defendants had been extinguished by adverse possession on their part for the statutory period before commencement of the suit. The Subordinate Judge has pronounced in favour of the plaintiffs, and after careful examination of the evidence, we have arrived at the conclusion that his view is correct.

It is plain that Pannalal was originally a joint owner of the disputed property along with his three co-sharers, the predecessors of the defendants. Even before his retirement to Benares, he did not usually reside at Raniganj. From 1865 to 1882 the property was looked after by Baldeodas, one of the co-sharers, from whom Pannalal regularly received his proportionate share of the surplus income, after payment of rent to the superior landlord, the cost of repairs and other incidental charges. The evidence establishes clearly that there was great intimacy between Pannalal, Baldeodas, Mangalchand, and his son Jagannath, the first defendant, and that the wives of Pannalal and Mangalchand treated each other as if they were sisters. The management by Baldeodas during this period was plainly on behalf and for the benefit of all the joint owners, and Pannalal must be deemed to have been in possession. At the end of the period just mentioned, Pannalal retired to Benares. At that time, his family consisted of his wife, his widowed daughter-in law, Lachmi Bibi, and his adopted son Mahadeo. He was naturally anxious to make suitable provision for Lachmi Bibi, and on the 25th June 1882 he executed in her favour the deed of gift under which she was to take a life interest in his share of the Raniganj property and Mahadeo was to take a vested remainder. The deed was neither registered nor accompanied by delivery of possession, with the consequence that it did not take effect in law. But it has been proved beyond doubt that the parties acted on the assumption that a valid gift had been made. Pannalal, at the time of his retirement to Benares, requested the first defendant Jagannath, the son of his intimate friend Mangalehand, to look after the property, to realise rent from the tenants, to make necessary repairs, to pay rent to the superior landlord and then to give Lachmi Bibi her proportionate share of the profits. Jagannath appears to have faithfully carried out the trust reposed in him and to have regularly paid to Lachmi Bibi her dues down to 1901. Here it may be stated that down to 1890, the property had stood in the books of the landlord in the names of the four persons who had got themselves substituted on their purchase from the original tenant Ramsingh Chaudhri. But in 1891, Jagannath managed to have the names of Pannalal and Jainarain removed from the books of the landlord. It seems probable that this was done in pursuance of a design to appropriate the entire property on a convenient opportunity. But even if he did entertain such a dishonest purpose at the time, he did not venture to carry it into immediate execution and continued to pay the surplus profits to Lachmi Bibi down to 1901. The Subordinate Judge has held that the evidence of payment during the period subsequent to 1901 is not reliable. It is a matter for comment that the account-books produced by Jagannath for this period could not be scrutinised in the Trial Court, as they were written in the peculiar script used by Marwari merchants. We are thus left with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that receipt of surplus income by Lachmi Bibi has not been proved for the period subsequent to 1901. On these facts, the contesting defendants have argued that the title of the plaintiffs has been extinguished by adverse possession for the statutory period.

We are of opinion that this contention is not well-founded. The evidence clearly establishes that Jagannath was not only a joint owner, but that he undertook to look after the share of Pannalal at his express request. The burden lies upon him to establish when he became faithless to the trust imposed upon him and asserted a hostile title in himself to the knowledge of the rightful owner. He has not ventured upon an explanation of his conduct; on the other hand, he has repudiated the title set up by the plaintiffs as altogether unfounded and has falsely denied that he had ever paid a proportionate share of the usufruct to Lachmi Bibi as claiming title through Pannalal. The two circumstances relied upon by the defendants in proof of assertion of hostile title to the knowledge of the rightful owner are by no means conclusive. The fact that a substantial building has been erected on one of the plots by the defendants is clearly not conclusive proof of ouster. As was pointed out in Dijendra Narain v. Puranendu Narain (15) the erection of a substantial building on joint property by one co-owner cannot be regarded as conclusive evidence of ouster, and this accords with the view indicated in Anand Chandra Sen v. Parbati Narain Sen (16) and Upendra Nath Banerjee v. Unesh Chandra Banerjee (17). The fact that the surplus profits, if any, have not been received by Lachmi Bibi since 1901 is equally inconclusive, in view of principles settled beyond controversy by recent decisions of the Judicial Committee: Core v. Appuhami (18), Muttunayagam v. Brito (19), Hartit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (20) and Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4). Reference may also be made in this connection to the observations of Lord Denman in Ouley v. Doe d. Taylors (21) which were quoted with approval in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case last mentioned:

JAGANNATH MARWARI v. CHANDNI BIBI.

"Generally speaking, one tenant-in-common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant-in-common, because the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of the other, and, to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining. But, where the claimant tenant-in-common has not been in the participation of the rents and profits for a considerable length of time and other circumstances concur, the Judge will direct the Jury to take into consideration whether they will presume that there has been an ouster; as to which see the cases of Dee d. Fisher v. Prosser (22), Dee d. Helings v. Ford (23) and Deo d. White v. Coff (24)."

Among the cases in this Court, reference may be made to the decisions in Jogendra Nath Roy v. Baladeo Das (25), Ayennessa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (26), Lokenath Singh v. Dhawalshwar Prasad Narayan Singh (27), Jatendra Nath Roy v. Sabidannessa Khatun [Narendra Bhusan Roy v. Jogendra Nath Roy] (28), Palaram Guria v. Fyima Charan Mondal (29).

The fundamental rule is that in order to establish adverse possession as between co-sharers, there must be evidence of an open assertion of a hostile title by one of them to the knowledge of the others, mere non-participation in the profits by one party and exclusive occupation by the other is not conclusive. Apart from this, we have the important circumstance that in this case the rightful owner, the second plaintiff Ramnibas, who, when a child few months old, was taken in adoption in 1892, was a minor till at least 1910; it is thus difficult to appreciate how the contesting defendants began to hold adversely to the knowledge of the infant in 1901. Indeed before this action was brought, there was no attempt on the part of the defendants to rely on adverse possession; their pretence was that they were the rightful owners, and one of them, the first defendant, has pledged his oath in support of that untrue allegation in the witness-box in this suit; they cannot consistently urge that from 1901 the first defendant began to hold adversely to the knowledge of the rightful owner: See the observations of Lord Macnaghten in Corea v. Appiahmi (18). Reliance may further be placed on the judgments of Lord Buckmaster in Hardit Singh v. Gurnukh Singh (26), of Lord Danedin in Muttunayagam v. Bito (19) and of Viscount Cave in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4) which emphasise the principle that if possession may either be lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former, or, in the language of Wood, V. C. in Thomas v. Thomas (30) possession is never considered adverse, if it can be referred to a lawful title. Reference may also be made to the decision of this Court in Lokenath Singh v. Dhawalshwar Prasad Narayan Singh (27) where the cases on the subject were reviewed and the doctrine deducible therefrom formulated. Every co-tenant has the right to enter into and occupy the common property and every part thereof, provided that in so doing he does not exclude his fellow tenants or otherwise deny to them some right to which they are entitled as co-tenants; and they on their part, may safely assume, until something occurs of which they must take notice and which indicates the contrary, that the possession taken and held by him is held as a co-tenant, and is in law the possession of all the co-tenants, and not adverse to any of them. It cannot be questioned, however, that one co-tenant, may oust the others and set up an exclusive right of ownership in himself; and an open, notorious and hostile possession of this character for the statutory period will ripen into title as against the co-tenants who were ousted. Thus, although as a general rule, the possession of one co-tenant is not deemed adverse to the other co-tenants, the existence of the relation of co-tenants does not preclude one co-tenant from establishing an adverse possession in fact as against the other co-tenants; and though the co-tenant enters in the first instance without claiming adversely, his possession afterwards may become adverse. In order to render the possession of one co-tenant adverse to the others, not only must the occupancy be under an exclusive claim of ownership, in denial of the rights of the other co-tenants, but such occupancy must have been made known to the other co-tenants, either by express notice or by such open and notorious acts as must have brought home to the other co-tenants knowledge of the denial of their rights. The same principle is involved in the familiar statement that to enable one of several co-tenants to acquire title by adverse possession as against the others, his possession must be of such an actual, open, notorious, exclusive, and hostile character as to amount to an ouster of the other co-tenants, that is, must have been such as to render him liable to an action of ejectment at the suit of the co-tenants. No comprehensive formula can be framed to test whether the possession of a co-tenant in a particular case is adverse to the other co-tenants. But it has been stated that the evidence to show adverse possession by one co-tenant must be much clearer than between strangers to the title, and the hostile intent of the co-tenant in possession must be shown by unequivocal conduct. It is indisputable that acts, which might properly be held to show adverse possession as between strangers, do not necessarily have such effect as between tenant in common; acts of ownership by one co-tenant may not in themselves amount to the disavowal of the other co-tenants, and may, indeed, be so explained as to show a consistency with the joint title. But the ouster of the other co-tenants, in order to render the possession adverse, need not be by violent, or intimidating expulsion or repulsion; nor need notice of the adverse holding be actually brought home to the other co-tenants by personal or formal communication; it is sufficient, if the contrary is not proved, that the circumstances show that such knowledge may reasonably be presumed. From this point of view, it has been maintained that sole possession by a co-tenant becomes adverse to his fellow tenants by his repudiation or disavowal of the relation of co-tenancy between them; and any act or conduct signifying his intention to hold, occupy and enjoy the premises exclusively and of which the tenant out of possession has knowledge or of which he has sufficient information to put him upon enquiry, amounts to an ouster of the co-tenants; but what is essential is that the overt acts which constitute a definite and continuous assertion of an adverse right must be of an unequivocal character, clearly indicating an assertion of ownership of the premises to the exclusion of the right of the other co-tenants. Tested in the light of these principles, the contention of the defendants must be deemed unsubstantial. In 1882, the first defendant undertook, at the request of his co-sharer Pannalal when he left for Benares, to manage his share of the property, and carried out his obligations for a period of twenty years. He has never explained why, when, and how he cast off his character as co-sharer, manager and asserted a hostile title in himself to the knowledge of the rightful owner. If he renounced the trust in 1901, he is met by the difficulty that the rightful owner at the time was an infant who continued to be a minor for at least nine years thereafter. He may be pertinently asked, when did his repudiation take place, when was his hostile intent manifested by such overt and notorious acts of an unequivocal character, to the denial and exclusion of the right of his co-sharer, as could not be misunderstood by the latter? It may be conceded that a co-sharer cannot close his eyes and ears, nor by wilful inattention obtain an advantage from his lack of diligence. For this reason, it has been held sufficient that the acts of adverse possession are such in their character and attendant circumstances that a man reasonably attentive cannot but realize that an adverse right is asserted against him. But if no notice is given to the co-sharer of the denial of his right, the occupant must make his possession so visibly hostile and notorious, and so apparently exclusive and adverse as to justify the inference of knowledge on the part of the co-owner sought to be ousted and of lapses if he fails to discover and assert his rights. Tested from the point of view thus indicated, the defence of adverse possession for the statutory period to the knowledge of the rightful owner cannot possibly be deemed to have been established in this case and it has been rightly negatived by the Subordinate Judge.

BAGGU v. DANI.

We may add finally that much stress was laid by the appellants on the fact that they have built a costly structure on the parcel known as the Marwaripatti property. This, however, does not create any real difficulty. The Subordinate Judge has not overlooked the equitable considerations which have been held applicable in such circumstances, as was explained in the cases of Upendra Nath Banerjee v. Umesh Chandra Banerjee (17), Narayan Lal Gupta v. Chulhan Lal Gupta (31), where the rule recognised in Leigh v. Dickeson (32), and Brickwood v. Young (33) was applied. In such cases, if a joint owner has in good faith effected valuable improvements upon the common property at his own expense, equity takes that fact into consideration upon a partition and in some suitable way makes an allowance to him therefor, in addition to his ratable share of his property. The Subordinate Judge has given directions in this behalf which will adequately protect the defendants when the partition is actually effected.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 24th March 1919, reversing that of the Mansif, First Class, Chunian, District Lahore, dated the 28th November 1918.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. D. N. Mehra and Badr-ud Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present second appeal arises the plaintiffs-appellants sued for possession of certain land in which Allah Bakhsh had occupancy rights. Allah Bakhsh during his lifetime made a Will on the 21st May 1912 by which he left the land in suit to his daughter-in-law, Musammat Dani, and after his death it was mutated in her name with the consent of the landlords. The pedigree-table showing the relationship between the plaintiffs and Allah Bakhsh is as follows:—

The Courts below concurrently held that the land in suit was occupied by Rahmat, the common ancestor of the plaintiffs, and of Allah Bakhsh. The First Court held that the plaintiffs had locus standi to sue as they would have been entitled to succeed to the tenancy had there been no Will, and decreed the claim. The lower Appellate Court appears to have held that as the alienation was assented to by the landlords it could not be contested by the reversioners, and also that as there was no proof that Rahmat was either the proprietor or an occupancy tenant of the land in suit plaintiffs had no locus standi to sue. In support of this decision the Court referred to Abdulla v. Allah Dad (1). It (1 98 P. R. 1907 F. B.), 62 P. W. R. 1907; 18 P. L. R. 1908.

BAGGU v. PANI.

Accordingly accepted the defendants' appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The finding that Rahmat, the common ancestor, occupied the land is a finding of fact and is based upon evidence which is referred to by both the Courts in their judgments. Counsel for the respondent sought to uphold the judgment of the lower Appellate Court by contending that there was no proof that Rahmat occupied the land, but as the finding is one of fact and is based on evidence, we did not allow him to argue the point.

It is common ground that the landlords consented to the alienation by Allah Bakhsh in favour of his daughter-in-law, but there is ample authority for holding that this consent does not bind the reversioners. In Puran Chand v. Mahesha (2) it was held, following the Full Bench ruling in Karam Din v. Sharaf Din (3) "that the plaintiff as reversionary heir of an occupancy tenant was competent to dispute the validity of the alienation, in favour of a stranger, of his ancestor's occupancy rights although such alienation had received the assent of his landlords." Again in Nikka v. Musammatt Gurdai (4), it was held "that like the alienations of ancestral land under the Punjab Customary Law, a transfer of ancestral occupancy rights, without necessity or consideration, is liable to be contested by the alienor's collaterals, whose rights to object to the alienation remain intact, and are enforceable so long as the occupancy rights in question, which are extinguishable only by Statute, are not extinguished under the provisions of the Punjab Tenancy Act." It was further held "that where an occupancy tenant alienates his rights in the tenancy with the consent of the landlord, the occupancy rights do not become extinct by operation of law or by the act of the landlord and the alienor's collaterals can contest the alienation." In Bhag Singh v. Sharam Singh (5) it was held that "a reversioner is not debarred from suing to protect his reversionary interest against an alienation of occupancy rights merely because such alienation has also been challenged by the landlord as an invalid alienation." In Hardit Singh v. Gopal Singh (6) which is referred to by the lower Appellate Court, the tenancy was self-acquired of the alienor and, therefore, the case is not on all fours with the present one. We are, therefore, clear that the mere fact that the landlords have consented to the alienation of the land by Rahmat (Allah Bakhsh?) does not take away from the reversioners any right which they might otherwise have had to contest it under the Customary Law.

The next question is whether the plaintiffs, by reason of being the heirs of Allah Bakhsh, under section 59 of the Tenancy Act, have a right to contest the alienation, or whether it was necessary for them to prove that the common ancestor, Rahmat, was also an occupancy tenant of the land. In Hari Chand v. Dhera (7) it was laid down that "where a general agricultural custom is found to prevail as regards alienation of proprietary rights, the presumption is, unless the contrary can be shown, that such a custom is also applicable to the occupancy rights. The onus of proving a special custom antagonistic to such a rule rests on the party asserting the existence of such a custom." In Fate Bakhsh v. Ditta (8) it was held that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove that by custom he is entitled to question the validity of the alienation of occupancy rights made by his father. As it was considered that there was some conflict between this ruling and that in Hari Chand v. Dhera (7) the question was referred to the Full Bench in the case of Abdulla v. Allah Dad (1). The Judges in that case considered that there was no substantial conflict between the two cases referred to, and they laid down that "when a collateral seeks to restrain an alienation of any occupancy right by an occupancy tenant, proof that such a power of restriction exists in respect of proprietary rights would be relevant." They said that "when such a suit is brought, the initial onus lies on the plaintiff, but when he has proved first, that he is entitled to succeed to occupancy right on the death of the occupancy tenant; and, second that had the subject matter in question been a proprietary right instead of a right of occupancy he could have maintained the suit, the onus will be shifted and it will be upon the person, who asserts that no such custom obtains as to occupancy rights to prove that contention." Counsel for the respondents contends that if the subject matter of the present suit had been proprietary rights the plaintiffs could not have contested the alienation unless it had been proved that Rahmat was the proprietor, and, therefore, he contends that the plaintiffs cannot contest the alienation of occupancy rights unless they prove that Rahmat was an occupancy tenant. The lower Appellate Court seems to have adopted this view but, in our opinion, the Full Bench in the case of Abdulla v. Allah Dad (1) did not intend to lay down any such rule. It certainly did not dissent from the decision of the Division Bench in Hari Chand v. Dhera (7), and according to that decision all that the plaintiff has to prove is that a general agricultural custom prevails as regards the alienation of proprietary rights and the presumption then is that such a custom is also applicable to occupancy rights. Now, it is not contended in the present case that if Rahmat had been the proprietor of the land in suit and the proprietary rights had been alienated by Allah Bakhsh, the plaintiffs could not have contested that alienation. We, therefore, find in the present case that (1) plaintiffs are the reversionary heirs of Allah Bakhsh and (2) that if the land had been the ancestral property of the plaintiffs they could have contested the alienation. In our opinion, therefore, the two essentials laid down by the Full Bench in Abdulla v. Allah Dad (1) are fulfilled and the plaintiffs are entitled to contest the alienation.

The remarks in the penultimate paragraph of the lower Appellate Court's judgment as to the custom of the parties in matters of inheritance are obiter and do not affect the question for decision.

We accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court restore the decree of the First Court with costs throughout.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 70—Hindu reversioner, whether a person lawfully interested in making payment to save property from sale under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (III of 1919).

A Hindu reversioner is not a person lawfully interested in making a payment to save a property in the hands of the widow from sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act. His direct interest accruing only upon the widow's death, he cannot be said to be a person lawfully interested, at the moment of making the deposit so as to bring him within the purview of section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Birbhum, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes.

Babu Sarat Chandra Mitter, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule which was granted, at the instance of the plaintiff, by my learned brothers Mr. Justice Richardson and Mr. Justice Cuming calling upon the opposite-party to show cause why the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Birbhum complained of in the petition should not be set aside.

The plaintiff sued to recover a certain sum of money which he alleged he had paid on behalf of a widow called Brojo Sundari Devi, and he claimed to be reimbursed in respect of that sum of money. I take the facts as to which there is no dispute from the judgment of the learned Small Cause Court Judge. The learned Judge said, "Brojo Sundari has 6-anna share in Lot Bakulia as heir of her husband. On account of that share she has to pay Rs. 29 odd as road cess in each kist; she defaulted in making payments for ket and her share was advertised for sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The plaintiff who is the reversionary heirs of her husband paid the amount and claims to be reimbursed. The question is whether she is entitled to be reimbursed. The plaintiff's Pleader relied upon section 70 of the Contract Act. The learned Judge held that this case did not come within the provisions of section 70 of the Contract Act and dismissed the suit. The terms of that section are as follows: "where a person lawfully does anything for another person, or delivers anything to him, not intending to do so gratuitously, and such other person enjoys the benefit thereof, the latter is bound to make compensation to the former in respect of, or to restore, the thing so done or delivered." There is no doubt that the plaintiff paid the money on behalf of the widow defendant. In my judgment there is also no doubt that the defendant enjoyed the benefit of that payment; and, the sole question which arises in this case is whether the plaintiff can be said to be a person who lawfully made the payment; and, to confine the question even to narrower limits the point really turns upon the meaning of the word "lawfully." It has been held in this Court in the case of Panchcouri Ghosh v. Hari Das Jati (1), which was decided by my learned brother, Mr. Justice Mookerjee, and myself that the word "lawfully" in section 70 cannot be regarded as mere surplusage, and that the meaning is that a person must have a lawful interest in making the payment, and that it must be considered in each individual case whether the person making the payment had any lawful interest in making it. The passage to which I wish to draw attention is at page 330.* There I find I said as follows: "The test as regards the meaning of the word 'lawfully' was laid down by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case of Raja Brikunto Nath Dey Bahadur v. Uday Chand Maity (2). The word 'lawfully' in section 70 of the Contract Act is not merely a surplusage. It must be considered in each individual case, whether the person, who made the payment, had any interest in making it; if not, the payment cannot be said to have been made 'lawfully'." Then I proceeded to say "I expect my learned brother would agree with me, when I say he meant 'had any lawful interest in making it.'" My learned brother did not deliver judgment in that case but he said that he entirely agreed. It is interesting to note that in the commentary on the Indian Contract Act by the learned Commentator Sir Frederick Pollock at page 388 (4th Edition) he refers to the matter as follows: "The word 'lawful' in this section is not mere surplusage. It must be considered in each individual case whether the person who made the payment had any lawful interest in making it, if not, the payment cannot be said to have been made 'lawfully.'"

The whole question in this case is whether the reversioner can be said to be a person who had a lawful interest in making this payment. The words of the section are very wide. Our attention was drawn to what was said by the late learned Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Moh n'la Ghoshal v. Bhuban Mardana [Suchand Ghosal v. Balaram Majdana] (3) where he said: "The terms of section 70 are unquestionably wide, but applied with discretion they enable the Courts to do substantial justice in cases where it would be difficult to impute to the persons concerned relations actually created by contract. It is however, especially incumbent on final Courts of fact to be guarded and circumspect in their conclusions and not to countenance acts or payments that are really officious". The learned Judge sitting with the learned Chief Justice said that in interpreting this section it is very necessary to remember the almost elementary rule of law that "it is not in every case in which a man has benefited by the money of another that an obligation to re-pay the money arises." The terms of this section, as I have said, are very wide, but in my judgment the Court ought to be careful that it does not extend the meaning of the section and apply it to cases which were not intended to be covered thereby. In my opinion the plaintiff in this case does not come within the terms of this section. The interest which he has is merely that of a reversioner, the interest being expectant upon the death of the widow defendant. It is an interest which the plaintiff may never be able to realize because he may die before the defendant herself.

The learned Vakil who showed cause against this Rule pointed out that it was within the power of the widow to sell her widow's estate under certain circumstances and that the reversioner could not interfere with it. That was an argument which, to my mind, was relevant to the point which he was urging, namely, what was the real nature of the plaintiff's interest in this property. The only way in which I can see it could be said that the plaintiff had a lawful interest within the meaning of the section is as follows:—It might be said that if the plaintiff had not paid the money the property would have been put up to sale; a stranger might have bought the property and got possession of it; the plaintiff might survive the widow, and when he came into his property he might find the stranger in possession and he might have difficulty in getting the stranger out of possession and, consequently, having regard to those contingencies it might be said that the plaintiff had a present lawful interest in paying the money on behalf of the defendant. It seems to me that what I have stated is the most favourable way in which the case could be put for the plaintiff. That, however, in my judgment, is too problematical and hypothetical for us to hold that the plaintiff at the time he made this payment had a lawful interest within the meaning of the section. Consequently, in my judgment the decision of the learned Small Cause Court Judge was correct and this Rule should be discharged.

I think it is right to notice that in this case the learned Judge set out fully and completely what was the issue between the parties what was the decision arrived at and the reasons for arriving at that decision. The judgment compares in that respect very favourably with some of the judgments which have come before us from other learned Judges when exercising the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Courts.

The Rule is discharged with costs hearing fee one gold mohur.

CHOWDHURY, J.—I am in full accord with the judgment just delivered by my Lord the learned Chief Justice. There seems to be only one point which has to be decided in this case and that is whether a Hindu reversioner is a person lawfully interested in making a payment to save a property from sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The interest of a Hindu reversioner is a contingent and expectant interest. His direct interest only accrues upon the widow's death; and, therefore, it seems difficult to hold that he is a person lawfully interested at the moment of making the deposit so as to bring him within the purview of section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. It was said in the case of Mohendra Ghoshal v. Bhuvan Mordana [Uchandi Ghosal v. Balaram Mardana] (3) "The terms of this section are unquestionably wide, but applied with discretion they enable the Courts to do substantial justice in cases where it would be difficult to impute to the persons concerned relations actually created by contract." In my view the section does not give the reversioner in this case the right he claims. The question as to the position of a Hindu reversioner has never been decided directly by this Court. The learned Vakil for the petitioner referred us to the case of Sambasiva Pillai v. Leethalakshmi Ammal (4) I may point out in passing that the decision was given by a single Judge. The head-note to that case is in these terms: "A Hindu reversioner is interested in the payment of Government Revenue in respect of the estate held by the widow (the life holder) within the meaning of section 69, Contract Act, and he is consequently entitled to recover the same from the widow." With great respect to the learned Judge I should say that he has given a Hindu reversioner an interest to which he is not entitled under the law. In the present case the reversioner's interest is not directly affected by the sale and in my judgment he was not competent to make the payment which he did make. I agree, therefore, with my Lord that the Rule must be discharged with costs.

Bombay Irrigation Act (VII of 1879), s. 35—Loss due to interruption of supply of water—Suit for compensation—Civil Court, jurisdiction of.

A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit against Government for compensation for loss alleged to have arisen out of interruption to the supply of water to land by the Irrigation Department, as the remedy for such a loss is provided by section 35 of the Bombay Irrigation Act under which the decision of a Collector is final unless there is an appeal to the higher authority.

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmednagar, in Suit No. 2 of 1919.

Mr. P. V. Nisare, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit to recover damages for the alleged wrongful failure of the officers of Government in charge of the water supply to give a sufficient supply of water to his Survey Numbers during the years 1916 to 1918. Under section 35 of the Bombay Irrigation Act, VII of 1879, the holder of land may apply to the Collector for compensation for any loss arising out of such interruption provided that such interruption does not come under section 31 clause (d). This case cannot come under section 31 (d) and, if it did, compensation could not be awarded; but the person suffering loss might be entitled to such remission of water rate payable by him as might be authorised by the Governor in Council. If there is loss, under section 35 the holder of land may present a petition for compensation to the Collector, and the Collector, after consulting the canal officer, shall award to the petitioner reasonable compensation for such loss.

Under section 36 the decision of the Collector either under section 34 or 35 as to the amount of the compensation to be awarded shall be final, unless there is an appeal to a higher authority, in which case the decision of the higher authority shall be conclusive. These words, in my opinion, show that it was intended that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts should be ousted, so that the holder of land should not be entitled to bring a suit, similar to the present one, for compensation for loss alleged to have arisen out of interruption to the supply of water to his lands. It seems to me that this was the obvious intention of the Legislature. Otherwise, numerous suits might be filed by cultivators dissatisfied with the operations of the irrigation officers, though questions which arise between cultivators and irrigation officers are clearly questions which, in the first instance, must be dealt with by the officer in charge of irrigation operations on the spot, and then in appeal by the Revenue Officers. That being, in my opinion, the intention of the Legislature, I think it has been given effect to by the words used. Therefore, I think that the jurisdiction of the Courts is ousted and the decision of the Court below was right. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SHAH, J.—I think it is clear that the compensation which the plaintiff claims if it falls under section 31, proviso clause (d) cannot be allowed at all except the amount, if any, claimed by way of remission of water rates under the last paragraph of that proviso. But his claim is not for such remission, but for compensation. He is not entitled to such compensation so far as it falls under clause (d) of the proviso. But if it does not fall under clause (d) of the proviso to section 31, it is clear that his claim is one which would fall under section 35. The claims falling under that section are to be dealt with by the Collector, or by the higher officer to whom an appeal would lie under the rules framed, and the decision of that officer is conclusive. The effect of that provision, in my opinion, is to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in respect of such claims. The jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is not ousted in terms; but in view of the scheme of the Act and the special procedure laid down for compensation for interruption to the supply of water to any land irrigated by a canal, it seems to me that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is ousted.

Appeal—Ground not taken in memorandum of appeal, whether, and when permissible.

Although an appellant may, with the permission of the Court, be heard on grounds not taken in the memorandum of appeal, this should ordinarily not be allowed after the period of limitation for appeal has expired.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 25th February 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Gujrat, dated the 28th November 1919.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellants.

Mr. Abdul Ghani, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are collaterals who sue for a declaration that a gift of land made by a widow in favour of her married daughter shall not affect their reversionary rights. The defendants, i.e., the widow and the donee, pleaded ignorance as to whether the land was ancestral. The first of the issues framed was, whether the land was ancestral, and the First Court decided this issue in plaintiffs' favour. Other issues also were decided in plaintiffs' favour and the suit was decreed. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, but their memorandum of appeal does not challenge the finding as to the land being ancestral. But the District Judge took up this question and, holding that the land was not proved to be ancestral, accepted the appeal and dismissed the suit without going into other grounds.

It is true that an appellant may, with permission of the Court, be heard on grounds not taken in the memorandum of appeal, but there is nothing in the District Judge's judgment to show that such permission was ever asked for or obtained, or even that the point was argued before him. Still, I am not prepared to assume that the point was not raised in arguments. But to allow such a point to be raised in arguments long after the period of limitation for appeal had expired would practically amount to allowing the defendants to set up a new appeal and I do not think this should ordinarily be allowed after limitation has expired.

I accept this appeal and, setting aside the decision of the learned District Judge, I return the case for re-hearing of the appeal on the points raised in the memorandum of appeal. Stamp on appeal to this Court will be refunded, other costs in this Court will follow the event.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this suit is whether the contracts sued upon former part of an account consisting of forward dealings in Java sugar. There were in all

5 contracts between the parties viz. :—

Sold.	Bought.

9.6-17 75 tons @ 16.10.0 per cwt. July-September 3 lots.
14.7-17 300 tons @ 17.12.0 per cwt. July-September 3 lots.
1.8.17 150 tons @ 19.7.0 per cwt. July-September 3 lots.

The plaintiffs' suit is on the difference between the first contract of sale and the first contract of purchase. In other words, he takes those two contracts as cross-contracts and sues on the difference. Now, the defendants' Pleader frankly admits that these two contracts may be regarded as cross-contracts. In all probability they are so, being for the same shipment, in the same lots, and the same quantity, and the application by analogy of the rule in Olayton's case (1), regarding the appropriation of the earlier items on one side of an account to those on the other in order of date would strengthen this conclusion. The point for decision, however, is whether plaintiff can pick these two contracts out of the dealings for July-September shipments between the parties and sue on them alone without bringing all the other transactions for those shipments into the suit. This is exactly the position I have referred to in Jethalal Kallimji v. Parsaram Khemandas (2).

The question turns on the existence of an account of July-September shipments between the parties. If there be such an account, the plaintiffs cannot pick out a contract and cross-contract in the account and sue on it. From one point of view it would be better if all their dealings with one another for the same vaidika could be determined by one rather than by a dozen or more suits.

Now, the test for determining the existence of an account furnishing one and only one cause of action has been referred to by Jenkins, C. J., in Kedar Nath v. Denobandhu Shaha (3). If the items in the account are so connected together that it appears the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item, if not paid, shall be united with another and form one continuous demand, the whole together forms but one cause of action and cannot be divided. Were the contracts between the parties in this suit for July-September shipments so interdependent that it can firmly be assumed the parties intended only one liability to accrue at due date? The investigation may be still further narrowed. These transactions were on "Office Dhara" terms and according to the terms of the indents of the offices such shipment constitutes a separate contract. The defendant does not carry his case further than this—that all shipments of a particular month are settled when the due date for that shipment arrives. Thus July shipment would be settled when the last shipment carrying July goods would arrive because until then the seller may make "Miti Khari" simultaneously, with regard to August and September shipments. It is clear that the amount due on a contract and cross contract in any case is not payable until the due date because, as pointed out by me in Firm of Pokedas v. Firm of Vishinji (4), the effect of a cross contract is to fix the liability for the due date. I believe there is a decision of Fawcett, J.O., to the contrary but I must respectfully dissent from that decision on this point. The question, however, before me is whether that liability can then be recovered separately from the rest of the transactions for the same shipment and this question turns, as I have said, on the question whether there was an account between the parties of all transactions for that shipment or not. There may, of course, be an express agreement to keep an account between the parties or there may be an implied agreement to that effect which is to be determined from the acts and conduct of the parties. The defendant in the present case disclaims any intention of setting up an express agreement. He says there was an implied agreement and refers to the correspondence and the accounts between the parties as proving it. The point is also important because important questions have arisen with regard to the rights and liabilities under outstanding contracts for July-September 1917 shipments in Java sugar and a commission has issued to Java in those cases and some time will elapse before those cases come up for adjudication. The decision in Firm of Gobindram v. Firm of Khushaldas (5) has only partly adjudicated on those transactions.

Was there, therefore, any understanding between the parties that only the amount due at the foot of an account of the dealings in each of these shipments should be recoverable? Where delivery is actually taken—or what is tantamount to the same thing "pic's pic's" is effected—the question does not arise because the price is paid when the goods are delivered. The question only arises where certain liabilities are fixed by cross-contracts or are outstanding under contracts which still remain open.

There is no question of June shipment between the parties because plaintiffs paid for June shipment and took delivery. Defendant shows that he settled June shipment with another merchant, Adamji Jafferji, when the last steamer carrying June shipment arrived and that the settlement included the amount due on a contract and cross-contract as well as the amount due on outstanding contracts. Defendants' witness, Mahomedally, who effected the contracts with plaintiffs, says an account of all the contracts between the parties was intended to be kept and the liability on the whole account and not on each separate contract was contemplated. He says that is the custom. Merchants do not expect to file suits on each and every transaction but on the result of all the transactions for the particular shipment. They would send "Miti Khari" notices only for the number of bales outstanding between the parties and not for the total number of bales sold whether the contracts of purchase were cross-contracts or not. This shows the inter-dependency of one contract in the account with another which forms one of the tests for determining whether an account only is intended to be kept between the parties. Plaintiffs themselves have entered their dealings with defendants in one khata (Exhibit 10). Plaintiff supports his argument by a reference to his transactions for 1st April shipment but of the 75 tons sold for that shipment 25 were given delivery of and, therefore, paid for there and then and 25 were settled by "pic's pic's" which has the same effect. These are settlement in part of the account. The remaining 25 tons were settled by a cross-contract. Similarly the plaintiffs made "Miti Khari" for 50 tons June shipment on 29th July 1917 and that was discharged by "pic's pic's" on 30th July 1917. Neither of these cases are, therefore, in point. Moreover, the 1st April shipment was go-down delivery, not Bunder delivery like the contracts in suit, and under 1st April go-down delivery the purchaser may take delivery at his option at any time up to 1st April. That is, therefore, not a case of settlement on the due date.

Defendant shows that he has kept one Sodha Khata (Exhibit 4) of his transactions with plaintiff. The profits and losses on all these transactions have also been entered by defendant in one account of the plaintiffs. In their letter of 23rd August 1917 plaintiffs have claimed delivery of the outstanding 175 tons of July shipment (25 under contract of 9th June 1917) 100 under contract of 14th July 1917, and 50 under contract of 1st August 1917) "accounting for contract both of purchase and sale between yourselves and our client" i.e., the contract and cross contract for 75 tons. They have, therefore, treated all the transactions for July shipment as an account after setting off the contract of 19th May 1917 and the cross-contract of 22nd July 1917 in the account.

The plaintiffs' demand in their printed notice of 15th October 1917 is for all the outstanding sugar sold by defendants to them for July shipment. There is no separate demand under such contract. Then in their letter of 23rd January 1918 plaintiffs demand the sum they say is due to them at the foot of an account of 600 tons between the parties. This account shows the 75 bales settled at the rate of the cross-contract and the other tons at the market or the panchayat rate. Clearly, therefore, the plaintiffs treated the transactions as embodied in an account. The parties continued to correspond in a similar manner, the plaintiffs sending demands for all the sugar of such shipment. Then, in their letter of 19th March 1918, plaintiffs demand the balance of tons outstanding, viz., 525 tons. On 15th March 1918 defendants allege plaintiffs have failed to take delivery of the 175 tons July shipment, thereby again evidencing their acceptance of the position of one demand for all the tons outstanding under all the July shipment contracts. On 3rd April 1918 defendants write demanding damages for the 525 bales outstanding under all the uncovered contracts for July-September shipments. Plaintiffs agree that this shows an intention to treat the contract and cross contract separately and at any rate his letter shows that all the outstanding contracts were treated by defendants as furnishing one demand. Probably as they had lost over the contract and cross-contract and the plaintiffs were disputing the liability under the outstanding contracts the defendants demanded the sum due to them on the outstanding contracts at what they claimed as the market rate without giving credit for the sum due by them on the contract and cross contract in the account. Plaintiffs on 9th April 1918 replied by repeating their demand contained in their letter of 23rd January 1918 which, be it noted contained an account including the sum payable to them on the contract and cross-contract. Defendants replied through their Pleaders on 10th May 1918 repeating the demand in their letter of 3rd April 1918 and again on 30th September 1918 to the same effect. Then, for the first time on 4th July 1919 plaintiffs demand the sum due on the contract and cross-contract alone. In their reply of 9th July 1919 defendants demand the balance due after giving credit for the amount payable by them on the contract and cross-contract.

This correspondence shows that if the defendants had accepted the position taken up by the plaintiffs in their letter of 23rd January 1918 of one account of all the transactions including the contract and cross-contract, the plaintiffs, would not now have been permitted to say that the amount due on the contract and cross-contract was separable but the defendants did not accept that position until after plaintiffs had made a separate demand for the amount due on the contract and cross-contract. They insisted on only claiming the amount due on the outstanding tons without giving credit for the amount due on the contract and cross-contract. The defendants cannot now, therefore, be heard to say that they were led into believing that only one account of both the outstanding and the covered contract for 75 tons existed. The position is exactly similar to that which exists where a suit is brought on one hundi and the defendant contends there is a hundi "khota" consisting of several hundi items on all of which only one suit may be brought. The defendant in such a case can only succeed if he shows not only that the plaintiff has kept one account of all such hundies but that he has led the defendant to treat the dealing between them as on an account [Simson v. Ingham (6)]. If the defendant can show this there is an implied contract between the parties that all the transactions will furnish but one cause of action. In the present case the most the defendants could successfully plead is that the outstanding contracts should form but one account. The defendant has not up to the plaintiff's demand of 4th July 1918 acted as if the amount due on the contract and cross-contract were part of the account. He has deliberately excluded it from his demands upon the plaintiff. I, therefore, hold on the facts of this case that the plaintiff can sue for the amount due on the contract and cross-contract.

No custom has been proved that the amount due on a contract and cross-contract is, necessarily, included in an account of the other shipment dealings between sugar merchants in the Karachi Bazar, although probably, as a matter of convenience, the amount due on a contract and a cross-contract is taken into account in adjusting the claims due on the outstanding contracts at the time of settlement.

I, therefore, answer the preliminary issues:—

Punjab Pre-emption Act, (I of 1913), s. 15 (c), secondly—“Patti or other sub-division,” meaning of—Taraf or patti created for purely fiscal purposes.

A taraf or patti of a village created at the time of Settlement for purely fiscal purposes, i. e., for the purpose of convenience in collecting the land revenue, is not a patti or other sub-division, within the contemplation of section 15 (c), secondly, of the Punjab Pre-emption Act. [p 49, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st April 1921, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 13th November 1920.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Harbhajan Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff in this case claims to pre-empt on the ground that he is a proprietor in the patti in which the land in suit is situated. The lower Courts have agreed in dismissing the suit on the finding that there are no recognised sub-divisions of this village for the purpose of pre-emption.

The history of the village as recorded at the 1884 Settlement shows that there were originally two sails known as Haji Khan and Ghezi Khan. These sails were named after two brothers and undoubtedly at one time these sails were real sub-divisions. But the history of the village goes on to show that later on some of the proprietors had to leave the village owing to poverty and ancestral shares disappeared and possession became a measure of right. In 1884 the names of the two sails were still kept up, but the sails were spoken of as tarafs. Persons of different castes had come into both tarafs and the present plaintiff himself is, as the learned District Judge points out, a scion and not descended from either Haji Khan or Ghezi Khan who were Rajputs. There is no shamilat patti in the village and the fields of each patti are scattered about promiscuously throughout the whole village.

Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant relies on Bhagat Hira Nand v. Lal Khan (1) where it was held that there is nothing in section 12 of the Punjab Laws Act to show that the term “sub-division” should be construed with reference to any particular principle of division. He also relies on Uttam v. Buta (2) which lays down that in villages a proprietor holding land in any sub-division recognised by the Settlement Record, be it taraf patti, thulla or dheri, should have, as regards land sold in that sub-division, a right superior to any one whose land is outside it. This, however, does not seem to have been the test laid down in Sadda v. Maja Singh (3) where a certain thulla was recognized as a sub-division because it was held on the evidence to be a real sub-division of the patti and not merely a name representing the distribution of the proprietors for convenience in collecting revenue or similar purposes. Bija v. Bishan Singh (4) seems to me a case somewhat similar to the present though there the Settlement record did not recognise any pattis. There were two sections in the village who held their land for the most part in different portions of the village though some land lay intermixed. Each section had its Lambardar through whom its revenue was paid, but there was no shamilat patti and nothing common to one group of proprietors in which the members of the other group had no interest. It was held that the two pattis were not recognised sub-divisions of the village within the meaning of the Punjab Laws Act. In Sher Singh v. Maluk Singh (5) it was held that in order to justify treatment of a section of the village as a sub-division for the purpose of pre-emption there must be some well-defined attributer, such as homogeneity of area or descent of the proprietors. In Basawa Singh v. Natho Singh (6) it was held that certain thullas into which a patti of the village had been sub-divided were sub-divisions of the village for the purpose of pre-emption. I note that in this case each thulla had a separate shamilat in which the proprietors of the other thulla had no share. Waryam Singh v. Mahtab Singh (7) was a case of pre-emption being claimed in a village which was of recent date and was peopled by persons of various caste whom the Government had selected as persons to whom grants of land might fitly be made pattis had been created, in the village but merely for fiscal purposes and it was held that such pattis were not sub-divisions for the purposes of pre-emption. This case is, of course, not on all fours with the one before me, but I note that in this judgment the correctness of the proposition laid down in Bhagat Hira Nand v. Lal Khan (1), which is to the effect that if there is in point of fact a recognised sub-division of a village, such sub-division must be accepted as such for the purposes of the Pre-emption Act irrespective of any question of principle, is doubted, and it is noted that later authorities take a different view and place a far more limited construction upon the words "patti or other sub-division."

In the present case it seems to me obvious that the two tarafs or pattis created at the Settlement of 1884 were merely nominal divisions created for purely fiscal purposes, and that in fact there is no real sub-division of the village except that some proprietors have been allotted to one Lambardar and some to another merely for the purpose of convenience in collecting land revenue. The decision of the lower Courts seems to me in accordance with the later decisions of this Court, and I uphold their orders dismissing the suit, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

LETTERS PATENT APPEALS NOS. 109 TO 111 OF 1921.

W. M. GRANT AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

EKLAL JHA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Appeal, second—Finding of fact, when will be interfered with—Parties, duty of—Document not valid for purpose intended, whether can be used as evidence—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 27—"Specially," meaning of—Applicability of section—Documents, part legal and part illegal, enforcement of.

A finding of fact cannot be interfered with in second appeal, unless it can be shown that there was no evidence to support it. If either of the parties raise the point that there is no evidence to justify the finding, it is their duty to place that evidence on the record, to enable the Court of second appeal to decide the question, and not merely to rely upon certain references thereto in the judgments of the lower Courts. [p. 52, col. 2; p. 53, col. 1.]

The mere fact that a document may not be valid for the purpose for which it was intended would not prevent it from being used as evidence of an admission by a person executing it where its execution has been admitted and proved. [p. 54, col. 2.]

The word "specially," as used in section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, has no reference to the quantum of the reduction of rent allowed for the consideration there mentioned, but merely requires that owing to special circumstances, viz., the agreement to cultivate a particular crop, the rent is lower than it otherwise would have been. Mere proof that the rent was a low rent would not be sufficient to comply with the section unless it were also proved that the low rate was arrived at in consideration of cultivating a particular crop. But once it is proved that this is the case, then the actual amount whereby the rent is reduced below what it otherwise would have been if no such obligation had existed is not a matter to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the proviso has been complied with. [p. 53, col 2.]

Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to an increase in the amount of rent by reason of an increase in the area, it applies only to an increase in the rate of rent. [p. 55, col 2.]

Although a party cannot ask the Court to make a new contract in place of that which is illegal, but where in the same instrument there are distinct engagements by which a party binds himself to do certain acts, some of which are legal and some illegal, the performance of those which are legal can be enforced although the performance of those which are illegal cannot. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—These three appeals are brought under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross dated the 22nd November last year reversing the decision of the lower Appellate Court.

The suit out of which the appeals arise were tried together along with three others of a similar nature before the Munsif at Bhagalpur and determined by the same judgment. The plaintiffs, who are the proprietors of the Lattipur Indigo Factory, at Narainpur, are the same in each case. The defendants, who are the same in two cases but different in the other, are tenants holding under the factory and the same questions for determination arise in each of the cases. The claim of the plaintiffs, who are the appellants before us, is for the recovery of rent payable under the terms of certain kabuliyats executed by the defendants respectively in the year 1909 whereby they agreed to pay an enhanced rent amounting to about 4 annas in the rupee in excess of the rent formerly payable under the earlier kabuliyats in consideration of being released from the obligation imposed by the earlier kabuliyats of cultivating indigo on a portion of their holdings.

It is the plaintiffs' case that the defendants held their land at a specially low rate of rent before the date of the kabuliyats sued on in consideration of cultivating indigo for the landlords' convenience within the meaning of the third proviso of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that in consideration of being released from that obligation, they agreed to pay the increased rent which they deemed fair and equitable. Section 29 of the Act, in so far as it is material, reads as follows:—

"The money rent of an occupancy raiyat may be enhanced by contract, subject to the following conditions.

(b) The rent must not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than 2 annas in the rupee the rent previously payable by the raiyat:

Provided as follows.

(iii) When a raiyat has held his land at a specially low rate of rent in consideration of cultivating a particular crop for the convenience of the landlord, nothing in clause (b) shall prevent the raiyat from agreeing, in consideration of his being released from the obligation of cultivating that crop, to pay such rent as he may deem fair and equitable."

It is the defendants' case that there is no proof that they held their lands at a specially low rate of rent in consideration of cultivating a particular crop within the meaning of the proviso, and that, therefore, although they executed the kabuliyats agreeing to pay the rent claimed, such an agreement cannot be enforced as the enhancement was in excess of the maximum allowed under clause (b) of section 29 of the Act. The defendants further rely upon sections 23 and 178 (3) (b). The former section gives occupancy raiyyats the right to use the land in any manner which does not materially impair its value or render it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy, whilst the latter section provides that nothing in any contract made between the landlord and the tenant after the passing of the Act shall take away or limit that right. It is important to bear in mind that the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed in the year 1885, before which date it is conceded that the restrictions imposed by section 29 upon the freedom of contract had no operation. The first kabuliyats of which there is any evidence in the case are dated the 3rd June 1883. These documents refer to the lands settled as sibek jote nij, but when the lands were first settled upon the defendants or their predecessors there is nothing to show. It has been found, however, that the defendants are co-occupancy raiyyats.

The kabuliyats in the case of each of the defendants are of the same tenour. Those of 1883 are for a period of 10 years from 1295 to 1304 F. They provide in paragraph 6 that "I, the raiyyat, will from year to year till the expiration of the term of this kabuliyat sow indigo only, or indigo with certain mixed crops such as linseed and mustard, upon one-fourth of the said holding after taking indigo seeds from the factory without payment of any price for the same according to the choice of the sahibs and amlas of the Lattipur Indigo concern". Then follow certain stipulations as to the landlord's rights if this obligation is not complied with and as to the harvesting of the indigo and the price to be paid for it. Paragraph 7 says "The conditions in paragraph 6 above are according to the old custom of the village and upon these conditions the rent of the holding has been fixed. If I, the raiyyat, refuse in any year to set apart one-fourth of the land at the time of measuring the same for the purpose of sowing indigo, I, raiyyat, will pay excess rent at the rate of Rs. 1 per bigha for the entire area of the holding from that year until the expiration of the term of this kabuliyat." Paragraph 9 provides: "In the beginning of the year, when the term of this kabuliyat will expire, I shall appear before you the patandars and shall put in a kabuliyat for a fresh settlement and shall obtain a patta for the same, and if I do not put in a kabuliyat and obtain a patta then until I obtain a settlement I shall pay rent at the rate of Rs. 1 in excess for the entire area as provided by paragraph 7 hereof." When these kabuliyats expired, they were renewed for a further term which expired in 1315 F., that is, in September 1908. A few months later, on the 14th January 1909, fresh kabuliyats were executed after a fresh measurement of the land. These were for 9 years from 1317 to 1325 F. inclusive. It was found by the method of measurement adopted that there had been an increase in the area, in excess of the area mentioned under the previous kabuliyats and for this the tenants agreed to pay an additional rent. They further agreed to pay an enhanced rent at a rate which worked out at about 4 annas in the rupee. The stipulation as to growing indigo finds no place in these kabuliyats. Clause 14 provides as follows: "Be it known that for my having grown indigo on one-fourth of my nagdi holding the maliks had settled the land with me at a low rate, but the maliks have now closed the indigo business, therefore, the excess rate which has been assessed upon my nagdi holding according to my wish neither I nor my heirs and representatives have or will have any objection to pay".

One of the questions which arose for determination by the Munsif was, whether in fact under these kabuliyats the area had been properly measured. The lagga used, as stated in the kabuliyats themselves, was a lagga of 5½ cubits, whereas the tenants contended that the standard lagga in use in the village was 6½ cubits and when measured by this standard no increase in area had in fact taken place. This question was decided by the Munsif in favour of the defendants and the additional rent proportionate to the excess area was disallowed. The learned Munsif also came to the conclusion that the agreement to enhance the rent in excess of 2 annas in the rupee was in contravention of section 29 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and was not taken out of the operation of the section by the third proviso. He considered that, although it was proved, that the rent was low in consideration of growing indigo, it was not shown that it was specially low. He further held that the kabuliyats of 1883 were executed in respect of lands held by the tenants previously and that there was nothing to show that there was any obligation upon them to cultivate indigo at the inception of the tenancy, and, unless this could be shown, the proviso had no application. He also found that there was nothing to show that the defendants deemed the rent agreed upon to be fair and equitable. I may mention here that in some of the other cases, which are not the subject of this appeal, where similar kabuliyats were proved showing the original settlement with the tenants, he found upon exactly the same evidence that the rent was specially low and that the tenants deemed the enhancement to be fair and equitable. A further point was taken and decided against the landlords that the *kabuliya*s sued on represented a bona fide settlement of a dispute for rent between the parties and should not, therefore, be treated as a case of enhancement.

The plaintiffs appealed from this decision to the District Judge who affirmed the decision of the Munsif as to the claim for excess area, but allowed the appeal in so far as it claimed an enhancement in respect of the area allowed, being of the opinion that on the evidence the case came within the terms of the third proviso of section 29. There was no direct evidence to show whether the obligation to grow indigo was one binding on the tenants at the inception of the tenancy, but the learned Judge considered that, as the origin of the tenancy was lost in obscurity, he was entitled to consider the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the parties and the inferences to be drawn from the *kabuliya*s themselves in determining whether the obligation to grow indigo was an incident attaching to the tenancy at its inception. The fact that the *kabuliya*s, as far back as 1888, recited an obligation to grow indigo on a fourth part of their holdings according to the custom of the village, he considered indicated that no new obligation was then imposed but that it was pre existing and in accordance with custom and usage, and the conduct of the parties, in agreeing to pay an enhanced rent in 1909 and for several years afterwards complying with that agreement, was also indicative of the nature of the tenancy in its origin. He further relied upon a petition in connection with a fresh settlement with one of the defendants in 1905 as showing that indigo cultivation was one of the purposes for which the land was settled. He also found upon the oral evidence, as well as from the defendants' own admission in the *kabuliya*s, that the lands had been settled with the tenants at a specially low rate in consideration of growing indigo and that the new rate was fair and equitable.

On second appeal to this Court by the tenants the learned Judge, before whom the appeal came, reversed the decision of the learned District Judge. The evidence upon which the lower Appellate Court's decision was based, in so far as it was given orally, was not before the learned Judge in second appeal, but he referred to certain passages in the Munsif's judgment in which some of the oral evidence was dealt with and arrived at the conclusion that this was no proof that the *raiya*s held their land at a specially low rate of rent in consideration of cultivating indigo. He further considered that the admission that they had previously held at a low rate, in consideration of this obligation contained in the *kabuliya*s sued on, could not be relied upon as the *kabuliya*s themselves were repudiated as void, and that, in these circumstances, the admission itself would not prove the truth of what it states. He further considered that the admission itself was not sufficient as it did not show that the purpose of the tenancy was the growing of a particular crop or that, in consideration thereof, the rent was specially low. He considered, however, that at the time of the *kabuliya*s in 1888 a less rent was fixed than would otherwise have been fixed because the proprietors wanted indigo on one-fourth of the land. He also considered that, although there was an obligation to grow indigo under the *kabuliya*s of 1888 and again under the renewal, in 1902, this obligation came to an end with the *kabuliya*s of 1902 and had ceased to exist when the new *kabuliya*s agreeing to the enhanced rent were executed. It would follow, therefore, under section 23 of the Act, that the tenants were then entitled to use the land for any purpose they chose consistent with the provisions of that section and the agreement to pay enhanced rent in consideration for the release of a non-existing obligation was void under the provisions of section 178 (3) (b).

The determination of these appeals ultimately depends upon the answer to the question whether there was evidence to support the conclusions of fact arrived at by the first Appellate Court. The findings must be accepted in second appeal unless it can be shown that there was no evidence to support them. In the present case the evidence was both oral and documentary. The *kabuliya*s which were relied upon by both parties in support of their respective contentions have been placed before us, but we are not in a position to deal with the oral evidence nor can we say to what extent it justified the finding except in so far as appears from the judgments of the Munsif and the learned District Judge. Had either of the parties intended to raise the point that there was no oral evidence to justify the findings in so far as they are based thereon, it was their duty to have placed that evidence on the record to enable the Court to decide this question and not merely to rely upon certain references thereto in the judgments of the lower Courts.

I should have had little hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the findings of the lower Appellate Court could not be disturbed but for the fact that the learned Judge of this Court, in second appeal, has taken a different view and considers that there was no evidence upon which those findings can legally be supported. His opinion is entitled to all respect. He concisely states the question for decision when he states that the enhancement being in excess of that allowed by section 23, the agreement by the tenants to pay the enhanced rent is void unless it is protected by the third proviso, and that in order to bring it within that proviso, three factors must be present (1) the raiyat must have held his land at a specially low rate of rent in consideration of cultivating a particular crop for the convenience of his landlord, (2) he must have been released from an existing obligation of cultivating this crop, and (3) he must have deemed that the rent which he agreed to pay was fair and equitable. The learned Judge thought that neither of the first two factors existed upon the evidence and that it was unnecessary, therefore, to consider the third. With regard to the first point, the two earlier kabuliyats contain an admission that the tenants are under an obligation to grow indigo on a part of their holdings according to the old custom of the village and that upon these conditions the rent of the holdings has been fixed. They further agree that if they refuse in any year to set apart a fourth of the land for the purpose of sowing indigo, they will pay an excess rent at the rate of one rupee per bigha for the entire area of the holding. It appears from the Munsif's judgment that the plaintiffs' witnesses said that the tenants were under an obligation to grow indigo and three of them stated that the rent was low in consideration of so doing. They do not appear, however, according to the Munsif, to have stated that the rate was specially low. The learned District Judge, on the other hand, found in these words: "The former rates at which the respondents held are specially low as appears from the oral evidence as well as from their own admissions in the kabuliyats." I may mention here that in the kabuliyat of 1909 there is a further admission that in consideration of growing indigo the muliks had previously settled the land at a low rate. In my opinion, this evidence was amply sufficient to justify the finding that the land was previously held, that is to say, under the kabuliyats of 1888 and 1902, at a specially low rate of rent in consideration of cultivating a particular crop within the meaning of the third proviso of section 29. The word, "specially" as used in the section has, in my opinion, no reference to the quantum of the reduction of rent allowed for the consideration there mentioned, but merely requires that owing to special circumstances, viz., the agreement to cultivate a particular crop, the rent is lower than it otherwise would have been. Mere proof that the rent was a low rent would not be sufficient to comply with the section unless it were also proved that the low rate was arrived at in consideration of cultivating a particular crop. But once it is proved that this is the case, then the actual amount whereby the rent is reduced below what it otherwise would have been if no such obligation had existed is not a matter to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the proviso has been complied with. I may also point out that this appears to have been the view of the learned Munsif although it would seem that in deciding the question he subsequently lost sight of it. In considering this point he first of all says, "the first thing to be shown is that the defendant in this case has been holding at a specially low rate of rent, or, in other words, at a rate lower than what it would have been if there were no obligation to grow indigo", but, in considering the evidence in order to ascertain whether it proved such a state of affairs, he found that it did not, merely because the witnesses did not use the words "specially low", and as already pointed out in one of the other cases not now on appeal before us in which he came to a different conclusion of fact he says, "the kabuliyats, however, do not state expressly that the rent was fixed at a specially low rate of rent in consideration of this obligation but that a specially low rate of rent was partly the consideration for the settlement is clear". It would appear, therefore, that upon precisely the same evidence he came to two diametrically opposite conclusions of fact. In my opinion the decision arrived at by the learned District Judge upon this question was amply justified by the evidence even if it be taken to have gone no further than appears from the judgment of the learned Munsif.

The decision of this question, however, merely goes to the state of affairs existing from 1888 onwards and it still remains to consider whether in 1909, when the new kabuliyats were executed after the old ones had expired, the obligation to grow indigo still existed. If it did not, there was no consideration for the agreement to pay enhanced rent beyond that prescribed by the Statute, and any obligation undertaken by the tenants to do so would not have been binding upon them. Whether that obligation existed or not depends upon whether, either at the inception of the tenancy or, at least, at sometime before 1885, when the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, the tenants were under an obligation to grow indigo. I think it must be conceded that it is not necessary to go back to the inception of the tenancy. If, at any time before 1885 this obligation was a part of the terms under which the tenants held, then it would be a binding obligation as there was no law to prevent the freedom of contract. It is conceded that there is no direct evidence as to the terms upon which the tenants held before 1883 and the question for consideration is, whether the learned District Judge was justified in drawing the inferences from the evidence contained in the kabuliyats themselves and from the acts of the parties that the obligation was one of old standing and not newly created by the kabuliyats of 1888. I have already stated the grounds upon which the learned District Judge arrived at his finding upon this question. The reference in the earlier kabuliyats to the custom of the village, the agreement by the tenants to pay an enhanced rent of one rupee per bigha if they failed to comply with their obligation and the fact that in 1909 they willingly agreed to pay excess rent after due consideration and without any coercion on the part of the landlord, which was found as a fact in the case, coupled with the admission in the kabuliyats of that date that the maliks had settled the land with them at a low rate for having grown indigo, all seem to me to lead to the inference that the obligation was not imposed for the first time in 1888 but was in existence at all events, before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1885. It will be observed that the admission referred to speaks of the land being settled with the tenants upon certain terms, and to my mind this clearly points to the original settlement. There were other matters also referred to by the learned District Judge arising on the evidence, but which we are not in a position to deal with as the evidence is not before us, and which pointed towards the same conclusion, viz., that indigo cultivation was one of the purposes for which the land was settled. Added to this, there is not a scintilla of evidence adduced by the defendants to show that the obligation arose for the first time under the kabuliyats of 1888. In my opinion, therefore, the findings of the learned District Judge on these two points were in fact supported by the evidence.

The only other question is, whether the tenants can be said to have deemed as fair and equitable the enhanced rent which they agreed to pay. The mere fact that they entered into a formal written agreement with the landlords to pay it is sufficient to raise the presumption that they deemed it fair and equitable. There is nothing in the rate of enhancement which militates against this view, and the parties were dealing at arms length and without any coercion on the part of the landlords. The question was one of fact and, in the circumstances, I can see no ground upon which the finding can be disturbed.

The learned Judge of this Court whose decision is now under appeal took the view that the admission contained in the kabuliyat of 1909 could not be regarded as evidence because the kabuliyat itself was challenged as void. If the kabuliyat was valid, as I have found it to be, this question does not arise but in any case I am unable to follow the learned Judge's reasoning that, because a document may not be valid for the purpose for which it was intended, it cannot be used as evidence of an admission by the person executing it when its execution has been admitted or proved. The admission therein contained that the lands were previously held at a low rent was made by the tenants without coercion and even if the document, as an agreement to pay enhanced rent should not be binding, I cannot see any reason why it should be rejected as an admission of the facts stated.

A further question was raised before us in argument by the learned Government Pleader on behalf of the respondents which was not taken in any of the Courts below. It was contended that the whole agreement of 1909 was void, because one of the considerations for paying an enhanced rent, viz., an increase in the area had been found not to exist and even if the other consideration, viz., the release from the obligation, should be valid, the promise to pay an enhanced rent could not stand. Reliance was placed upon sections 23 and 24 of the Contract Act. It was contended that part of the consideration for the enhancement of rent was the increased area shown to exist by the form of measurement adopted, whereas in fact it was found that the area had not increased at all, a wrong method of measurement having been employed. It was argued that, in this state of affairs, a part of the consideration for the enhancement of rent having failed, it must be treated as unlawful under section 23 of the Contract Act, as if permitted it would defeat the provisions of section 29 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to enhancement. I agree that under section 24 of the Contract Act if one of the several considerations for a single object is unlawful the agreement is void but even assuming that the consideration in the circumstances stated was unlawful it would appear that the increase of area alleged to exist was no part of the consideration for the enhancement of rent. As this point had never been taken in any of the lower Courts, the schedule attached to the kabuliyats of 1909 had not been placed in evidence before us, but we were informed by the learned Counsel for the appellants, and it was not contradicted, that the schedule clearly shows how the rent was arrived at. It sets out the original area and the original rent and the additional area and additional rent and then shows the enhancement of rent in consideration of the release from the obligation. The additional rent was disallowed by the lower Court, and although there was a cross-appeal by the plaintiffs on that question to this Court the cross-appeal was not pressed as no point was taken about separating the legal from the illegal part of the consideration. The engagements to pay additional rent and enhanced rent are entirely separate and distinct. One cannot ask the Court to make a new contract in place of that which is illegal, but where in the same instrument there are distinct engagements by which a party binds himself to do certain acts some of which are legal and some illegal the performances of those which are legal can be enforced although the performance of those which are illegal cannot. Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to an increase in the amount of rent by reason of an increase in the area. It applies only to an increase in the rate of rent and the engagements by the defendants to pay additional rent for an additional area and an enhanced rent for release from an obligation are entirely separate and distinct. The tenants are not entitled to say, because we have undertaken to pay additional rent for an additional area which cannot be enforced, therefore, we shall not pay enhanced rent in consideration of being released from an existing obligation, although that consideration is perfectly good.

I am further of opinion that at this stage although the question raised is one of law we ought not to entertain it in the particular circumstances which have arisen. The present appellants, who were respondents in the Court below, entered a cross-appeal in that Court challenging the findings as to the additional rent and further contending that the kabuliyat sued on represented a bona fide settlement of a dispute for rent between the parties and that the case should not be treated as one of enhancement, but as no point was taken before Mr. Justice Ross about separating the legal from the illegal part of the consideration they were content not to press their cross-appeal. For both these reasons I think that this question should be determined against the respondents and in favour of the appellants. In my opinion, this appeal should be allowed, the decree appealed from should be set aside and that of the District Judge restored. The appellants are entitled to their costs of this appeal and to the costs of the appeal of the defendants before Mr. Justice Ross.

Three Hindu brothers carried on a joint business. A decree was obtained against the eldest brother and certain applications for execution of the decree were made against him and after his death against his legal representatives. Subsequently execution was applied for against the other brothers also :

Held, that the brothers being joint and carrying on a joint business, the decree against the eldest brother must be taken to have been passed against the firm and that previous applications for execution, therefore, operated to save limitation. [p. 57, col. 2; p. 57, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree, which was passed on the 23rd July 1902, against Peshori Lal, Brothers, sons of Jairam Das. At the last hearing of this appeal I remanded the case and sent for the records of the original suit, but I learn that these records have been destroyed. The decree-holder applied for execution on the 13th November 1914. Notice issued and Kandhari Lal, a brother of Peshori Lal, appeared in Court and said that Peshori Lal had died in September 1914. These execution proceedings were eventually dismissed. On behalf of the minor sons of Peshori Lal an application was presented for setting aside the decree, but this application was rejected. The decree-holder started fresh execution proceedings in July 1917. Lahori Mal, another brother of Peshori Lal, then appeared both for himself and as guardian of the minor sons of Peshori Lal. He then stated that Peshori Lal had left no property except some self-acquired property but that it was joint property which had descended from Peshori Lal's father. He also stated that there was no firm of the name of Peshori Lal Brothers. These execution proceedings were eventually dismissed on the 21st March 1918. In October 1919 the decree-holder again applied for execution of decree. On behalf of Lahori Mal and the minor sons of Peshori Lal an objection was raised that the application was time-barred, as the execution proceedings taken in 1914 were invalid and could not be used to keep limitation alive. The First Court held this objection to be correct and dismissed the application as time-barred. The learned District Judge on appeal overruled the objection as to limitation and hence the judgment-debtors have lodged a second appeal to this Court.

Peshori Lal was, so I understand, the eldest of the three brothers. He was a Khatri shop-keeper, and the presumption is that he and his brothers were joint. In his statement in Court in 1918 Lahori Mal admitted that the property which had descended from his father was still joint, and there is not the slightest evidence nor is it suggested that Peshori Lal and his brothers separated. The presumption, therefore, is that the family was a joint Hindu family and that the business carried on by Peshori Lal under the name of Peshori Lal Brothers sons of Jairam Das, was a joint family business. Lohori Mal's bare denial in 1917 as to the business being joint I regard as insufficient rebuttal. I take it then that the decree was against the firm and not against Peshori Lal only, and I think that the District Judge is right in holding that the proceedings of 1914 were proceedings in execution of decree and kept limitation alive. The learned District Judge has also held, on the authority of Manna Lal v. Samandu (1), that as the plea of limitation was not raised in the former execution proceedings taken in 1917, it cannot be raised now. This also appears to me to be perfectly correct. The question is dealt with on page 171 of the judgment just referred to. What the appellants are trying to do is to plead that the present application is time-barred because the previous application was also time-barred. No objection on the ground of limitation was raised at the time of the previous application and so it cannot be urged now that the previous application was time-barred.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Sambhu Saran, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sivanarain Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal raises the question whether any authority was given to Musammât Chandrama Kuer, one of the defendants-appellants, by her deceased husband, Brij Nandan Singh, to adopt a son to him and whether Musammât Chandrama Kuer did in fact adopt defendant No. 2, the other appellant before us, as a son to her deceased husband. The plaintiffs, who are the respondents before us, claim to be the reversioners of Brij Nandan Singh and their case is that Brij Nandan Singh died suddenly on the 24th Baisakh 1308 corresponding with 27th April 1901 and that he gave no authority to his widow to make any adoption to him. Their case further is, that there was, in fact, no adoption and that they are entitled to a declaration to the effect that the widow was neither entitled to, nor did she in fact, make an adoption to her deceased husband. The defendants resist the plaintiffs' action and they contend that Brij Nandan was ill for about twenty-four days and that on the 21st Baisakh 1303, corresponding with the 24th April 1901, that is to say, three days before his death, he gave authority to Musammât Chandrama Kuer to adopt a son to him and that Musammât Chandrama Kuer did in fact, in pursuance of the authority given to her by her deceased husband, adopt the second defendant as a son to him on the 17th May 1916.

CHANDRAMA KUER v. RAMGAYAN.

On the pleadings, the learned Subordinate Judge framed the following issues.

1. Is the suit as framed tenable?
2. Have the plaintiffs right to sue? Are they reversionary heirs to Brij Nandan Singh?
3. Whether defendant No. 2 has been adopted as alleged by the defendant No. 1?
4. Did Brij Nandan Singh give defendant No. 1 authority to adopt?
5. Is the suit barred under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act?
6. Is the adoption of defendant No. 2 illegal and invalid and without the permission of Brij Nandan Singh?
7. Is the suit tenable against the principle of factum valet?
8. Are the plaintiffs entitled to any relief.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that plaintiff No. 1 was the reversionary heir of Brij Nandan Singh and was entitled to maintain the action. He thought that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act did not bar the suit and accordingly answered Issue No. 5 in the negative and Issue No. 1 in the affirmative. He considered Issues Nos. 4 and 6 together as in fact they raised the same question and answered those issues in favour of the plaintiffs. On a review of all the evidence in the case, he came to the conclusion that Brij Nandan Singh did not give any authority to his widow to adopt a son to him and he also came to the conclusion that the widow did not in fact make any adoption. In the result, he decreed the plaintiffs' suit and made the declaration in favour of plaintiff No. 1 substantially as claimed by him in the plaint.

The questions raised in this appeal are questions of facts, and I entirely agree with the learned Vakil for the respondents that we ought not to differ from the Trial Court unless there are strong and weighty reasons for doing so. We have, however, certain responsibilities as an Appellate Court and we are bound to examine the evidence with a view to see whether, in giving judgment in favour of the plaintiff No. 1, the learned Judge did not misdirect himself. Now, the way in which the learned Judge dealt with the whole case has been severely criticised by Mr.

Kulwant Sahay on behalf of the appellants. It was pointed out that, although the learned Judge refused to consider the evidence of Musmmat Chandrama Kuer, Musammatt Jagatraj Kuer, the sister-in-law of Musammatt Chandrama Kuer, and Mahadeo Singh, who was in the service of Musammatt Chandrama Kuer, on the ground that they were interested witnesses, he strongly relied upon the evidence of Ram Gayan Singh, plaintiff No. 1, and Keshwar Singh, another of the plaintiff, although they were far more interested in the result of the suit than the witnesses whose names I have just mentioned. Now, in supporting the case of adoption, Musammatt Chandrama Kuer was really asserting that she had divested herself of any proprietary interest in the estate of her deceased husband. There is, therefore, no prima facie ground for rejecting her evidence which was really against her pecuniary interest. On the other hand, the result of the suit would have serious effect on the fortunes of the reversioners. This was the first argument of Mr. Kulwant Sahay on the judgment itself. Next, he argued that the witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants deserved some consideration whereas the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed them with the remark that some of them were relatives of Brij Nandan Singh whereas others were partisans of Gokula Prasad Singh, the father of defendant No. 2. It was pointed out that there is absolutely no evidence on the record to establish that any of the witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants is a partisan of Gokula Singh and that to be a relative of Brij Nandan Singh is no disqualification whatever since a relative of Brij Nandan Singh is likely to know the facts of the case. But, as a matter of fact, out of seventeen witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants only four are relatives of Brij Nandan Singh—defendant No. 4 who is the brother of Musammatt Chandrama Kuer, defendant No. 12, who says that he is a relative of Brij Nandan Singh, but does not say what the relationship is, Gokula Prasad Singh, the nephew of Brij Nandan Singh, and the father of defendant No. 2 and Jagatraj Kuer, the widow of his brother. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge has not dealt fairly with the evidence which was adduced on behalf of the defendants. But it is remarkable that, although he rejected the testimony of witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants on the ground that they were relatives of Brij Nandan Singh, still he made it a matter of comment that the defendants did not examine any of the gotais of Brij Nandan Singh residing in the village. The failure to examine the gotais who resided in the village is capable of a very simple explanation. It is not likely that the gotais could contemplate with equanimity the prospect of the property passing out of the family to the family of the sister's son of Brij Nandan Singh. It is not unreasonable to assume that they would have a great deal of sympathy with the reversioners. In regard to the witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants, it may be pointed out that they were mostly men of wealth, position and respectability and were not in the slightest degree interested in the result of the suit. Even a cursory examination of the evidence of the witnesses examined will establish that those for the defendants were drawn altogether from a better class of society. Lastly, it was contended that the reasons assigned by the learned Subordinate Judge for accepting the only documentary evidence produced by the plaintiffs are, to say the least, somewhat peculiar. He conceded that there were circumstances in connection with the document which threw a great deal of suspicion on the critical entry on which the plaintiffs relied, but he thought that these very circumstances established the genuineness of the document. In connection with this document it was further pointed out that the learned Subordinate Judge advanced a theory which fitted with nobody's case and that he acted upon the theory to the prejudice of the defendants.

These and other arguments that arose on the face of the judgment have compelled us to scrutinize the evidence with more than ordinary care and anxiety; and we have come to the conclusion that the decrees passed by the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported and ought to be set aside.

The plaintiffs' case is, that Brij Nandan Singh dies suddenly after his evening meal on the 24th Baisakh corresponding with the 27th April 1901. The defendants' case, on the other hand, is that Brij Nandan suffered from a protracted illness which lasted for 21 days and that he actually gave Chand-rama Kuer authority to adopt a son on the 21st Baisakh 1303 in the presence of many respectable persons. It must be conceded that if the plaintiffs establish that Brij Nandan Singh died suddenly after his evening meal on the 24th Baisakh 1308, the defendants' case must fail.

Now, what is the evidence upon which the defendants rely? In the first place, they rely upon an entry in the katchita form of death, Exhibit '1', kept by a Chaukidar, named Bilal Ahir who has given evidence in support of the document. Now, it will appear on an examination of the document that the first entry printed in the paper book is of the 27th April 1901—that giving information as to the death of Brij Nandan Singh. The second entry is dated the 10th of May, the third entry is dated the 24th of May, the fourth is dated the 21st June and the fifth is dated the 13th May. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that it was a matter of some suspicion that the entry of 13th May follows the entries of the 24th and 21st June respectively. But taking the view that, had the plaintiffs wanted to produce a forged document, they would probably have steered clear of such difficulties as there are on the face of this document, he accepted the suspicious nature of the entries as in itself establishing the genuineness of the document. In my opinion, there is really no reason to suspect the genuineness of the document. The entry of the 13th May no doubt follows those of 24th May and 21st June respectively. It is quite possible that the information as to the death of Haloman Singh who, according to this document, died on the 13th May 1901 may have been received by the Chaukidar after he had made the entries on the 24th May and 21st June respectively.

But that was not the ground upon which Mr. Kulwant Sahay asked us to reject the document. The plaintiffs rely upon this document in so far as it establishes that the cause of the death of Brij Nandan Singh was apoplexy. The actual word which appears in the document is not apoplexy but "epopegey" which, according to the learned Subordinate Judge, stands for apoplexy although there is no support for it in the evidence. But I will assume for the moment that "epopegey" stands for apoplexy. The critical question is, who is responsible for the words in the katchita? Now, the only witness who has been examined by the plaintiffs to prove this document is Bilat Ahir the Chaukidar of the village. He says in his evidence that he got the fact of the death of Brij Nandan noted in the document by Ram Lagan, Chaukidar. His evidence is that Ram Lagan wrote the entry in his presence and then he says "I do not know what is meant by 'epopegsy'". Asked as to the cause of the death of Brij Nandan he said that he died of 'gash' and that he got that noted in his bahi. Now, that is the whole of the evidence of Bilat Ahir which establishes, first, that the cause of death according to him was 'gash' and that is what he asked Ram Lagan to note in the hatchita; secondly, that he does not know what is meant by 'epopegsy,' lastly, that Ram Lagan wrote the entries in his presence. Now, it seems to me on this evidence that it is impossible to rely upon the document in so far as it establishes that Brij Nandan died of apoplexy. The word 'gash' means 'fit' as the learned Subordinate Judge himself says. That would be perfectly consistent with the case of the defendants. If the cause of the death of Brij Nandan was stated in the hatchita to be 'gash' (no objection could be taken to it by the defendants as it would be perfectly consistent with their case. How comes it then that we find the word 'epopegsy' there although Bilat Ahir repudiates it and states that Ram Lagan wrote the entries in his presence. Now, the learned Subordinate Judge has a theory of his own, "it is true" the learned Subordinate Judge says, "that this word could not have been written by Ramdagan of his own accord but there can be no wonder if this word which corresponds to apoplexy was supplied by the Daroga at the Thana when it would have been told to him that Brij Nandan had died suddenly after having fits." Now, there is absolutely no evidence to support the theory of the learned Subordinate Judge. But assuming that the theory is a good one, the question arises who told the Daroga at the Thana that Brij Nandan had died suddenly after having fits. If it were the plaintiffs, the entry cannot be used by them in their support. If it were by the defendants, then, of course, the entry can be used as against them. There is absolutely no evidence on the point. All that we know is that the Chaukidar whose duty it was to make the entry in the hatchita knew that Brij Nandan had died of 'gash' and that is what he asked Ramdagan to note in the hatchita. In my opinion, the entry, as it stands, cannot be used as evidence against the defendants.

In the next place, I have very grave doubt whether the entry was at all admissible in evidence. It was urged by the learned Vakil for the respondents that it was admissible under section 32 (2) of the Evidence Act, but that clause is clearly not applicable. It was held by the late Chief Justice of this Court and Ho, J., in the case of Naina Koor v. Gobardhan Singh (1) that entries in the diary of a deceased illiterate Chaukidar, not by the Chaukidar himself, but by other persons at his instance, are not admissible under section 32(2) of the Evidence Act. Had the entry in this case been made by Bilat Ahir, then no doubt it would be admissible under section 32 (2); but it was not: and it has not been established that it was the duty of Ram Lagan in the ordinary course of business to record these matters. But in the view which I take of the entry, the question of law does not arise.

There only remains the oral evidence and that evidence, in my opinion, is of the weakest kind. Two of the plaintiffs have examined themselves and their evidence is that Brij Nandan took his meal at about 10 P. M. on the night of his death and that as soon as he went to his bed he lost his power of speech and became unconscious. According to them, he expired shortly after he became unconscious. According to plaintiff No. 1, he went to the house of Brij Nandan Singh as soon as he heard that he was taken ill suddenly and he took with him 8 or 9 persons. There is no reason whatever why these 8 or 9 persons should have accompanied him to the house of Brij Nandan unless it be that they were required to give evidence afterwards. He says that he sent for a doctor from Nasriganj and that the doctor came and told him that Brij Nandan was suffering from "Sarsam" or "Gushi" (delirium or fainting). Now a case of apoplexy is hardly consistent with the case of delirium and it is noteworthy that it did exercise the curiosity of the learned Subordinate Judge that this doctor, who, according to the evidence of plaintiff No. 1, was, when the case was going on before the learned Subordinate Judge in Hasua, Bihar, a station on the Bihar Light Railway, was not called by the plaintiffs to give evidence in the case. As the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, his evidence would have been of very great value, but for some reason which has not been explained, he was not cited as a witness. The failure on the part of the defendants to examine the Baid who, according to them, attended Brij Nandan, is not open to the same comment. The order-sheet shows that the defendants took the earliest opportunity to summon him as a witness, and asked the Court to adjourn the hearing of the suit for two weeks when the Baid failed to put in an appearance as a witness in the case. Now the evidence of plaintiff No. 1 and Keshwar Singh, another plaintiff, in the case ought to be received with very great caution. They are vitally interested in the result of the suit and it is a good working rule not to act upon the evidence of persons who are vitally interested in the result of the case unless that evidence receives corroboration from surrounding circumstances. The failure to examine the doctor is not a circumstance in favour of the plaintiffs; nor is the insertion of the word "epopeggy" in the hathskita. But the plaintiffs rely upon the evidence of some witnesses who followed him into the house of Brij Nandan Singh and it is necessary to consider their evidence. The first of these witnesses is Pahalwan Singh who admits that there are two suits between Chandrama Kuer and his family and that rent for one year was at that time due from him to Chandrama Kuer. He describes himself as a cultivator, and it does not appear from his evidence that he is a substantial cultivator. There is, however, nothing in his evidence which really hurts the defendants except his assertion that Brij Nandan met with a sudden death and that he did not die after a protracted illness. He admits that on the night of Brij Nandan's death cow, land etc., were being gifted to Brahmins. This is a fact which has been spoken to by some other witnesses who have been examined on behalf of the plaintiffs and accords with the evidence that has been produced on behalf of the defendants. In my opinion, this circumstance namely, that cow, land, etc., were being gifted away to the Brahmins, establishes beyond reasonable doubt that Brij Nandan could not have died suddenly. The gifting of cows at the time of death is a ceremony and requires preparation and it is impossible for such ceremony to take place in the case of a sudden death. The next witness is Bhirgu Nath Singh who describes himself as a cultivator and admits that he is a distant gotia of the plaintiffs. There is nothing in his evidence except his assertion that Brij Nandan died after an illness of 2 or 3 hours. The next witness is Ohhabi Singh, a cultivator. He admits that he is a distant gotia of the plaintiffs. He further admits that Musammam Chandrama Kuer sued him for rent for one year. The next witness is Doo Saran Singh who admits that he is paying the plaintiffs the expenses of the litigation. He is obviously interested in the result of the litigation and his evidence cannot be of much value. The next witness is Bashnoo Singh whose evidence is purely hearsay. The next witness is Parmeshwar Upadhyaya who describes himself as a cultivator. He says that Brij Nandan died after an illness of two hours. He admits that cows, calves, grains etc., were gifted to the Brahmins at that time and that he himself got a gift of one cow and a she-calf at that time besides cloth. In his cross-examination he admits that his uncle Lal Bihari was sued by Chandrama Kuer for rent and that he is now in possession of the hast land of Lal Bihari. He also admits that rents are due by him to Chandrama Kuer for three years. The next witness is Ram Kirit Upadhyaya, a Brahmin cultivator, who says that he got a gift of two cows and some rice on the night of the death of Brij Nandan Singh.

These are all the witnesses who have been examined on behalf of the plaintiffs and, in my opinion, it is quite impossible to rely on this class of witnesses if there is nothing in the surrounding circumstances connected with the adoption to excite our suspicion. I shall consider the surrounding circumstances in a moment. It is necessary, first, to see what is the nature of the evidence that has been produced on behalf of the defendants.

The defendants rely, in the first place, upon the extract from the jama kharach bahi of 1308. The learned Subordinate Judge says that this book was written up at one sitting for the purpose of the case. The suspicion of the learned Subordinate Judge was roused by the fact that there is no entry in this book subsequent to the death of Brij Nandan. It must be remembered, however, that the jama kharach book relied upon by the defendants is not the Zamindari account-book but the deroi account-book, that is to say, a book kept for household expenses. I have examined the book with very great care and, in my opinion, there is nothing at all in it to excite suspicion. It is a complete account-book of 1303 from the first day of the year up till the day of the death of Brij Nandan Singh. The fact that there are no entries in the book subsequent to the death of Brij Nandan may be due to a variety of reasons. It may be due to the fact that, for some days subsequent to the death of Brij Nandan, they did not think of entering such expenses as they incurred in any books of account. Chandrama Kuer and her sister-in-law, Jagaraj Kuer, were the only two members of the family and it may be that, for days together, they incurred no expenses which had to be entered in the jama kharach book. I am not prepared to reject the book on an argument so speculative as that which has been advanced by the learned Subordinate Judge.

Now, the book, if it is genuine, establishes the case of the defendants that Brij Nandan was ill for a number of days and that he could not have died suddenly as is alleged by the plaintiffs. There is an entry on the 30th Chait to the effect that Sukhnandan Singh was sent to call Baidji of Pasaur on account of malik's illness and that the expense incurred in respect of this was Rs. 2-8. Then there are number of entries for purchasing such articles as are given to a person who is ill. On the 24th Baisakh the entry runs as follows :

Babu Sahab's death, hence pur chase of Sakal	...	1	0 0
Ghee	...	2	0 0
Pitambari cloth	...	7	0 0
Bleached malmal	...	1	5 0
Dome for lighting the fire	...	1	4 0
The account-book, taken as a whole, strongly supports the case of the defendants.

I now come to the oral evidence. The first witness examined on behalf of the defendants is Mahadeo Singh who says that he was a companion of Brij Nandan Singh since his birth and was in his service and is now in the service of the widow. There is no cross-examination to suggest that he was not on such intimate terms with Brij Nandan and his widow as he asserts. His evidence is that Brij Nandan was ill for 25 days before his death, that he was treated by Ram Kirit Panday of Pasaur for his illness and that he authorised his wife, Chandrama Kuer, to adopt a child and that he was present when he gave the authority. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected his evidence on the ground that he was an interested witness. According to him, to quote his own words, "there is a wide field for his profit should the alleged adoption stand", but it seems to me that if the plaintiffs' case is true, namely, that Mahadeo had a great influence over Chandrama Kuer there was equally a wide field for his profit even if there was no adoption. Chandrama Kuer was entitled to retain possession of the properties until her death and Mahadeo, as her Chief Officer, might be expected to make some profit out of that estate if, as the learned Subordinate Judge says, he put forward the adoption in order to make profit out of it. It may be pointed out that the plaintiffs' case in the plaint is that Mahadeo Singh was the Tashildar of Brij Nandan and that on the plaintiffs' complaint against him Brij Nandan had dismissed him from service and that after the death of Brij Nandan Mahadeo Singh won over Jagatraj Kuer and Chandrama Kuer and got himself engaged as their agent and that he obtained full control over the ladies and exerted undue influence over them. But it is remarkable that this case was not put to Mahadeo Singh in the witness-box. In my opinion, there is no substantial reason for rejecting the testimony of Mahadeo Singh especially as he was intimately acquainted with Brij Nandan and presumably knew his affairs. If, indeed, the boy who is alleged to have been adopted was in any way related to or connected with Mahadeo Singh, there would be ground for viewing his evidence with some amount of suspicion. But that is not the suggestion of the plaintiffs. Their suggestion, on the other hand, is that Mahadeo was so enraged by reason of the fact that at the instance of the plaintiffs he was dismissed from service by Brij Nandan that he entered into a conspiracy with Gokula Prasad Singh to introduce Gokula's son into the family as the adopted son of Brij Nandan. This case was not put to Mahadeo, and we cannot investigate it. The next witness is Ragbunath Singh, who is a Zamindar and a co-sharer of Brij Nandan, having an income of Rs. 5,000 a year. His evidence is that, upon receiving the information of Brij Nandan's illness, he went to his house to see him. He says that he stayed with Brij Nandan for two days and left his house three days before his death. He says, further, that Brij Nandan was ill with fever and there was a rise and fall of his fever during the time that he stayed there. He asserts that, in his presence Brij Nandan called Chandrama Kuer before him and gave authority to adopt a son to him. The next witness is Sheonandan Singh, brother of Chandrama Kuer. It is somewhat difficult to rely on his evidence as he could not have been more than 15 years at the time of the death of Brij Nandan. But it must be remembered that his evidence is against his apparent interest, the fact which the learned Subordinate Judge did not at all take into consideration. If the adoption did not take place, his sister remained the proprietor of the properties. If, however, it took place, then she was divested of any interest which she might possess in these properties. The next witness is Basudeo Singh who describes himself as a Zamindar and a cultivator. His evidence is that his father, on receiving the news of Brij Nandan's illness, sent him to Brij Nandan's house and that he was actually present when the authority was given by Brij Nandan to his wife to adopt a son to him. The only thing that can be said against this witness is, that there was a criminal case between Mahabir Singh, his wife, and plaintiff No. 1. The next witness is Indra Dawan Singh, a substantial Zamindar, having an income of Rs. 12,000 a year. There is no reason whatever why his evidence should not be accepted, especially as he is not in the slightest degree interested in the case. His evidence is that three days before the death, Brij Nandan's servant came to him with a message that his master was seriously ill and that he wanted to see him. Brij Nandan obviously had sent for him and the others who have given evidence in the case in order that he might give permission to his wife to adopt a son to him in the presence of respectable witnesses. His evidence is that, in pursuance of the message which had been sent to him, he went to Brij Nandan's house and was actually present when the authority was given to Chandrama Kuer to adopt a son. It is suggested that this witness was an accused in the case brought by plaintiff No. 1, but the suggestion was not put forward to him and it would be most unfair to consider it in connection with a witness who apparently has no sort of interest in the dispute between the plaintiffs and the defendants.

It is unnecessary to go through all the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants. It is sufficient to say that it appears to us to be reliable and of a class superior to that to which the witnesses called on behalf of the plaintiffs belong. Their evidence receives strong corroboration from the account-book which has been adduced in the case and there is no reason whatever why it should not be acted upon. I ought to mention that the evidence of the ladies who were examined on commission have made a deep impression on me. They seem to have given their evidence in a straight forward manner and there is no prima facie reason to reject their testimony. I quite concede that, if Chandrama Kuer had attempted by adoption to benefit her father's family, her evidence might be open to very grave suspicion; but the adoption which she sets up is that of the son of a nephew of her husband. The adoption was a natural one and against her pecuniary interest. There is no suggestion in the case that there was any enmity between her and the plaintiffs and there is no reason at all why she should have divested herself of her proprietary interest in the estate in favour of one who did not belong to her father's family, but was a relation of her husband; specially as there is no suggestion that there was any enmity between her and the plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge thought that the surrounding circumstances stood against the case of an adoption. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the following facts for his decision on the point. Brij Nandan had no issue by his first wife though he had lived with her for 12 years from the time of the marriage. He then married defendant No. 1 and his married life with Chandrama Kuer did not last more than six or seven years. In the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge, it is improbable that Brij Nandan should have given an authority to his wife to adopt a son as there was no reason why he should not have a child by her before his death. If the case of the plaintiffs that Brij Nandan died suddenly be accepted, then there may be something in the view which has been taken by the learned Subordinate Judge; but, in my opinion, the plaintiffs have entirely failed to establish that Brij Nandan died suddenly. I accept the case of the defendants that Brij Nandan had a protracted illness lasting for 24 days. If that be so, then what are the facts? First, that Brij Nandan married Chandrama Kuer, obviously with the intention of having son by her; secondly, he was seriously ill and it may be that he took the view that he will not recover. It is not possible to say what was in the mind of Brij Nandan as he lay ill for 24 days: but, in my opinion, there is nothing improbable in the story set up by Chandrama Kuer that after an illness lasting for 24 days Brij Nandan gave authority to adopt a son to him. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that as on the evidence of defendants the condition of Brij Nandan had not materially changed on that critical day, namely, the 21st Baisakh it is improbable that he could have given her permission that day. That is the first line of attack adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge. The question, in my opinion, is not what view the defendants and their witnesses took of the illness of Brij Nandan, but what view Brij Nandan himself took of it. As to that there can of course be no evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge, then, changing his line of attack, thought that Brij Nandan must have had brain complications on the 21st Baisakh and, therefore, he was not in a proper state of mind to give any authority to his wife to adopt a son. The foundation for this opinion is, that there are entries in the book of account showing that Kasturi and Attar were purchased on the 20th and 21st Baisakh. The learned Subordinate Judge says that everybody knows that Kasturi and Attar are given to a patient when there are brain complications and that accordingly if the defendants' account-book be genuine, Brij Nandan was suffering from brain complications on the 21st Baisakh. In my opinion the reasoning is far too speculative to merit any examination. It may be that these articles were purchased for future use, if occasion arose for them, but no conclusion can be founded on the sole fact that Kasturi and Attar were purchased on the 20th and 21st Baisakh. In my opinion, having regard to the fact that Brij Nandan has lived through at least 18 years of married life without having a son the story told by the defendants becomes inherently probable. I hold that Brij Nandan did give authority to Chandrama Kuer to adopt a son to him.

The next question is, did Chandrama Kuer adopt a son in pursuance of the authority which was given to her? Now, on this point the evidence is all one way; but the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the extraordinary conclusion that there was no adoption by the widow. Now, it may be pointed out that if, in fact, Chandrama Kuer wanted to set up defendant No. 2 as her husband's adopted son, there is no reason at all why she should not have gone through the ceremony of adoption. The question would have stood on a different footing had it been raised after the death of Chandrama Kuer. There is absolutely no reason to hold that there was in fact no adoption when it was in the power of Chandrama to go through the ceremony of adoption. The evidence, in my opinion, is conclusive on the point. It appears that, before the adoption, Chandrama Kuer took the precaution for asking for Police help as she thought that the plaintiffs might create disturbances. Exhibit A is a personal diary of Sub-Inspector B. K. Roy and his report shows that he "left the Police station for Burdiha with constable Suleman and Sukhdeo Missir to see that no breach of the peace takes place at the time of adoption of a son to Chandrama, as ordered by the Magistrate." The Sub-Inspector has given evidence in the case, and he says that he did not go to Burdiha in order to preserve peace. The learned Vakil for the respondents has argued that his evidence of adoption (etc) for he does not say that he was present at the ceremony of adoption. This is true; but the evidence of the Sub-Inspector proves that Chandrama Kuer had made preparations for the adoption. In my opinion, it is impossible to say that no adoption in fact took place if Chandrama Kuer had in fact asked for Police and was prepared to go through the ceremony of adoption. With what object, it may be asked, would Chandrama Kuer not go through that ceremony if it was her desire to do so? There is no evidence on the other side worth considering. They were admittedly not present at the adoption and their evidence cannot possibly establish anything. In my opinion, there is abundant evidence to establish that defendant No. 2 was in fact adopted by defendant No. 1 on the 17th May 1916.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Malicious prosecution, action for—Evidence, necessary—Judgment of Criminal Court, whether sufficient;

In an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has to prove first that he was innocent and that his innocence was pronounced by the tribunal before which the accusation was made and it is not sufficient to put in the judgment of the Court which acquitted him. [p. 66, col. E.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 11th November 1919.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. K. Muter i and Dr. K. N. Katu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against a decree of the learned District Judge of Benares upholding a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge dismissing a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. The defendant-respondent made a report at a Police Station to the effect that certain persons had committed a riot and had assaulted him, being directed to do so by the plaintiffs-appellants. The Additional Subordinate Judge found that the witnesses for the plaintiffs who deposed that no such riot as that described in the report had been committed, were not worthy of credit. He found that the witnesses for the defendant who deposed that such riot had taken place were worthy of credit and he dismissed the suit for damages for malicious prosecution on the clear finding that the complaint made by the defendant was in fact true. He took a completely different view to the view taken by the Criminal Court which had found that the complaint was not substantiated.

The learned District Judge would have been better advised to have confined himself to the point to which the Additional Subordinate Judge had directed his attention. The view that he took must, however, be supported. It is as follows: He decided that inasmuch as the evidence produced by the appellants was unworthy of belief, their suit could not succeed. They set out to prove a specific case that nothing of any kind had happened as alleged in the plaint. They undoubtedly are found by the learned District Judge to have failed to prove that case.

In appeal it has been argued that all that the appellants had to do for the purpose of proving the falsity of the accusation was to put in the judgment of the Criminal Court which terminated in their acquittal. We do not, however, accept this view. In the words of Bowen, L. J. in Abrath v. North Eastern Railway Company (1): "In an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has to prove first that he was innocent and that his innocence was pronounced by the tribunal before which the accusation was made."

In any circumstances, we cannot disturb the finding of the learned District Judge. We accept his view that in the circumstances of this particular case the plaintiffs had failed to surmount their first obstacle inasmuch as the evidence which they produced in support of their case was unworthy of belief and did not establish their innocence. We would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)—Under-tenancy—Ejectment—Law applicable.

Where it is established that the jama of an under-tenancy, from its inception, contained agricultural as well as homestead land, a suit to eject the under-tenant is governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and not by those of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 67, col. 1.]

Where the terms upon which a tenancy was created cannot be proved by direct evidence, the subsequent conduct of the parties may be considered with a view to determine the nature of the tenancy. [p. 67, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 24th of March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, at Berhampore, dated the 23rd of December 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Monmohan Bose, for the Appellants.—I submit that it is for the defendant to establish that the jama of 10 cottahs contained at the time of its creation agricultural land as well as homestead. If he can conclusively prove that he can invoke the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The onus of proof lies upon the defendant.

I further submit that the learned Judge should not have reversed the decision of the primary Court without coming to a full and clear finding that the jama of 10 cottahs contained at its inception agricultural land. There has been no direct evidence given regarding the inception of the tenancy. So your Lordship is not to be bound by the finding of the learned Judge which he has come to on insufficient evidence. I challenge the finding by reason of its inadequacy. A mere ipse dixit of the lower Appellate Court cannot fetter your Lordship's decision. Your Lordship cannot read more things in the judgment than it contains. What I insist on is a remand for proper adjudication on evidence to be adduced by the defendant.

Babu Atul Chandra Dutt for Babu Pegin Chandra Mullick, for the Respondent.—I admit that the learned Judge is not happy in his language and that has created confusion in the mind of my learned friend. What can be the relevancy of Babu Ram Roy v. Mahendra Nath (1) as quoted by the learned Judge? The subsequent conduct of the parties also must be considered when no direct evidence is available. Remand is out of the question in view of the finding of the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court.

Babu Monmohan Bose replied in short.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred against a decree of the District Judge of Murshidabad, reversing decree of the

(1)—8 O. W. N. 454.

S. BAL SINGH v. SALIK RAM SINGH.

Munsif, First Court, Berhampur, for ejection of the defendant. The facts of the case are as follows:—The land in suit is an area 4 cottas and two chittaks and forms part of a jama of 10 cottaks which at one time belonged to one Patai Sheikh and was purchased at an execution sale by the father of the plaintiffs. After his purchase the plaintiff's father sub-let a portion of it to the defendant who occupied it as homestead. The plaintiffs brought this suit on the ground that the defendant's tenancy had been terminated by notice to quit under the Transfer of Property Act. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that the Bengal Tenancy Act and not the Transfer of Property Act is applicable.

On behalf of the appellant the following statement of law in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is not disputed: "If the defendant can establish that the jama of 10 cottaks contained at the time of its creation agricultural land as well as homestead, the contention that the Bengal Tenancy Act applies must prevail." It is contended on behalf of the appellant that though the lower Appellate Court has in the statement of the law rightly thrown the onus on the defendant he has in discussing the evidence shifted the burden on to the plaintiffs, and further that that Court has not come to a finding that the jama of ten cottaks contained at the time of its creation agricultural land.

There does not seem to be much substance in the first objection. There is no direct evidence as to the commencement of the tenancy. But in discussing the evidence as to the use to which the land was put since the time of Patai Sheikh the lower Appellate Court has considered the evidence on both sides and has come to a finding that since that time the jama of ten cottaks included the agricultural or horticultural land. That finding I must accept in second appeal.

The question remains whether that finding is sufficient. It is not a finding which expressly complies with the condition set out by the learned Judge on the earlier part of his judgment. There is not a distinct finding that the jama of ten cottaks contained agricultural land at the time of its creation. But reading the judgment as a whole, I hold that the learned Judge meant to come to such a finding. After coming to the finding stated above the learned Judge said: "Therefore, in accordance with the ruling in Babu Ram Roy v. Mahendra Nath (1) the defendant must be held to be an under-tenant under the Bengal Tenancy Act." The ruling cited could not be made applicable unless the tenancy contained agricultural land at the time it was created. In the case of Bamapada Roy v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. Ltd., (2) it was held that where the terms upon which a tenancy was created cannot be proved by direct evidence the subsequent conduct of the parties may be considered with a view to determine the nature of the tenancy. I think the learned Judge by oversight has omitted to state that from the use of the land since the time of Patai Sheikh he draws a further inference that the jama from the time of its creation was an agricultural tenancy. Taking this view I hold his decision is right and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Where the finding of an Appellate Court proceeds upon an erroneous view of the law, and is inconsistent with the facts accepted by that Court as established, the High Court will interfere to set aside the finding. [p. 68, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Azamgarh.

SABAL SINGH v. SALIK RAM SINGH.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai for Mr. K. N. Laghate,
for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The question in issue in this suit was whether two brothers, Sarju Singh and Salik Ram Singh, were or were not members of a joint undivided Hindu family at the time of Sarju Singh's death. The Trial Court found that there had been separation and had given very strong reasons for that opinion. The learned District Judge has, on appeal, recorded a contrary finding and it has been pressed upon us that we ought to accept that as a finding of fact. He has undoubtedly endeavoured to record it as a finding of fact; but in arriving at his conclusion, he has misrepresented the law on the point and he has used expressions in his judgment inconsistent with own finding. The principal point against Salik Ram Singh, who was the plaintiff in the suit, was that he had made statements while under examination which virtually amounted to admitting that there had been separation. We know that there had been separation in residence and in mess, for Salik Ram Singh had gone to Calcutta and taken up service there, while Sarju Singh was living at home and looking after his cultivation. Sarju Singh sold a specified half share in the ancestral property, describing the same as his own share; and later on Salik Ram Singh himself sold the remainder and described it as his own share. The learned District Judge himself, in discussing the plaintiff's deposition, says that what the plaintiff deposed was that in the joint property in suit he and his brother, Sarju Singh, each had a half share. If each of them was the owner of a defined half share, then there had been a specification of shares sufficient, under the circumstances of the present case, to complete the break up of the joint family and to constitute each of the brothers a separated Hindu. It has been contended before us that the lower Appellate Court has acted upon the evidence as a whole, and there is, no doubt, some force in this argument. What the learned District Judge, however, says regarding the rest of the oral evidence is that the Munsif "admits" that the defendant's witnesses also say that Sarju Singh was joint with the plaintiff. Now, the Trial Court had noted that certain witnesses for the defendant had made statements against the defendant and in favour of the plaintiff's contention. He went on to say that those witnesses had, in his opinion, been won over by the other side and were deposing falsely. The lower Appellate Court has not said that it believes those witnesses, and it is certainly unsatisfactory in a high degree to see a carefully reasoned judgment dealt with on appeal as that of the Trial Court has been in this instance. It is sufficient, however, for us to say that, in our opinion, the finding of the lower Appellate Court proceeds upon an erroneous view of the law and that it is not a consistent finding, inasmuch as in his review of the evidence, and more particularly of the plaintiff's own deposition, the learned District Judge has recited, and apparently accepted as established, facts which would be sufficient to support the conclusion arrived at by the First Court and which are inconsistent with the finding of jointness recorded by the lower Appellate Court. Under the circumstances we think we are warranted in setting aside what we consider a clearly erroneous finding and restoring the decision of the Trial Court. We do accordingly set aside the order and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance, with costs throughout.

WALSH, J.—I agree. I think the case* relied upon by Mr. Uma Shanker Bajpai, although not an authority for anything but itself, as it does not purport to lay down any principle, and indeed the Judicial Commissioner from whom the appeal was brought had overruled the District Judge on a question of fact, so that their Lordships were free to take their own view of the matter, does, on the other hand, justify the view that where fundamental facts are admitted by a party inconsistent with his case and with his testimony, it does become a question of law whether, for example, jointness or separation can legitimately be found on such evidence, or to put it as their Lordships put it in the case in question:

"The conclusion in this case before us that the plaintiff was a member of a joint family is not a sound or a legitimate conclusion on the facts proved and it, therefore, may be interfered with as an erroneous legal conclusion."

*See Amritrao v. Mukundrao, 58 Ind. Cas. 866 (P.C.)—[Ed.]

The learned Judge himself has done his best to support this view of the matter inasmuch as a sentence in the basis reasoning of his judgment contains a complete misstatement of the law, namely, the reference to the separate dealing of the half share in the joint property. I should not have thought it necessary to add anything to what my brother has said had it not been for the singular features of this judgment which may be due, it is true, to carelessness, but for which at present I am unable to suggest any reasonable explanation. The learned Judge uses this expression, which in itself is a misuse of language, in reference to a Judge whose judgment he is reviewing in appeal.

"The learned Munsif admits that the defendant's witnesses say that Sirja Singh was joint with the plaintiff."

A learned Judge or Munsif does not "admit," and the use of such language is totally misconceived and out of place in an Appellate Court's judgment. But the fact is that the learned Munsif was careful to state what was the sworn testimony of the defendant's witnesses to whom the District Judge refers and to add that in his opinion they were unworthy of belief because they had been got at by the other side. If that is so, it would appear that in the opinion of the Munsif there has been a certain amount of activity on the plaintiff's side independently of the proceedings in Court, and it would be well, in my opinion, if the learned Judge, to whom a copy of this judgment should be sent, would send an explanation, at any rate, to me, of the passages to which I have referred in his judgment.

A man may carry on business either personally or through an agent, and although the manager of a joint Hindu family is not liable to account to the sleeping partners in precisely the same way as the manager of an ordinary business, his position approximates more nearly to that of an agent than to any other. He acts on behalf of the family and in its interests and it must be held that each individual member of the family carries on business wherever a branch of the family firm is in active existence. He is, therefore, liable to be sued even in a purely personal suit at any of these places just as a partner in an ordinary partnership is liable to be sued wherever a branch of the business exists. Letters Patent Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Broadway, dated the 29th November 1920, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 5th January 1920.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Pandit Shro Narain, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this case is whether the Amritsar Courts have jurisdiction and what is the meaning to be attached to the words "carries on business" in section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure when applied to individual members of a joint Hindu family. A suit for damages for malicious prosecution was instituted by the plaintiff Jamna Das against Murlidhar personally in Amritsar. The plaint was returned by the Senior Subordinate Judge for prosecution in a competent Court. The plaintiff appealed and it was held by the learned Single Judge in Chambers, who heard the appeal, that the Amritsar Courts had no jurisdiction and that the plaint had been rightly returned. From this order the present appeal has been lodged. There is no dispute as to the facts. The suit is purely personal in its character and seeks damages for a tort alleged to have been committed by the defendant who took unsuccessful proceedings against the plaintiff under section 500, Indian Penal Code, in the Hissar District. This defendant, Murli Dhar and his father, Tara Chand, form a joint Hindu family carrying on a business as such with headquarters at Bhiwani in the District of Hissar. Tara Chand, the father, is the manager and as such not only directs and controls the business at Bhiwani but also a branch which exists in Amritsar. It is argued with considerable force that inasmuch as the defendant has admittedly no personal control over either branch and as the business is entirely conducted by his father, who is not responsible to him in the same way as a managing partner or an agent in a partnership based on a contract he can only be said to have had an interest in the business and that this is not the same as carrying on business. This view was accepted by the learned Judge in Chambers. Now, a man may carry on business either personally or through an agent, and although the manager of a joint Hindu family is not liable to account to the sleeping partners in precisely the same way as the manager of an ordinary business, his position approximates more nearly to that of an agent than to any other. He acts on behalf of the family and in its interests and, in our opinion, it must be held that each individual member of the family carries on business wherever a branch of the family firm is in active existence. He is, therefore, liable to be sued even in a purely personal suit at any of these places just as a partner in an ordinary partnership is liable to be sued wherever a branch of the business exists. The words used in section 20 are perfectly clear, and it is conceded by the learned Counsel for the respondent in this case that were his client a member of a partnership carrying on business at Bhiwani and Amritsar in the same way as this firm, managed by his father, carries on business he would be liable to be sued in his personal capacity in either place. He is, therefore, liable as a member of the joint Hindu family. We accept the appeal with costs and set aside the order of the learned Judge in Chambers and that of the Subordinate Court. We hold that the Subordinate Judge in Amritsar had jurisdiction to try the suit and we direct him to proceed with it and to dispose of it on the merits,

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Cause of action—Plaintiff deprived of goods by erroneous order of Magistrate—Suit for damages against Secretary of State, whether maintainable.

Plaintiff was lawfully in possession of certain ornaments as pawnee, which under the orders of a Magistrate he made over to the Police for production in Court in a criminal case; subsequently the ornaments were made over by an erroneous order of the Magistrate to the original owner. Plaintiff obtained an order from the Criminal Court directing the person to whom the ornaments were made over to re-place them in the possession of the Court, or else to make good their value; after only a trifling sum had been realised from him on account of their value, he became insolvent, whereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit for damages against the Secretary of State.

Held, that the plaint disclosed no cause of action against the Secretary of State, and that as the Criminal Courts were not the servants or agents of the Secretary of State he was not liable for damages if they made a mistake [p 71, cols. 2 & 3.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Allahabad.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju and Mr. Kashi Narain Malaviya, for the Appellant

Mr. Lalit Mohan Baxi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for damages against the Secretary of State for India in Council. The plaintiff firm states that it was lawfully in possession as pawnee of certain ornaments; that it made them over to Gopal Ram, Court Inspector, Fyzabad, upon his stating that the production of the same "was necessary under an order of the Magistrate in Re King-Emperor v. Shimbhu Dayal and Girdhari Lal under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code, which was pending in the Criminal Court at Fyzabad." Subsequently according to the plaint, the ornaments in question were made over to their original owner, one Pashpat Nath, "by the Court of the Pargana Officer" at Fyzabad. The criminal case in question had been tried by the Court of the Assistant Sessions Judge of Fyzabad, and that was undoubtedly the proper Court to pass orders regarding the disposal of property in respect of which the offense or offenses set forth in the charge tried by it had been committed. The plaintiff firm very properly applied to the Assistant Sessions Judge for relief and obtained an order from that Court directing Pashpat Nath to re place the ornaments in the possession of the Court, or else to make good their value. This would, of course, have satisfied the plaintiff; but it so happened that Pashpat Nath was unable or unwilling to re place the ornaments and that he became insolvent, after only a trifling sum had been realised from him on account of their value. The plaint asserts that "the Criminal Court at Fyzabad showed negligence and slackness in realising the remaining amount due from Pashpat Nath;" but admits that, once he had been "declared insolvent," nothing more was to be realised from him.

It is clear, therefore, from the plaint that the acts or omissions by which the plaintiff alleges himself to have been damaged were perpetrated by:—

(i) Gopal Ram, Court Inspector, Fyzabad.

(ii) The Court of the Pargana Officer at Fyzabad.

(iii) The Court of the Assistant Sessions Judge at the same place.

(iv) The Criminal Court at Fyzabad, which may or may not be identical with the second or third of the above.

It is nowhere alleged in the plaint how any of these four was acting, under the alleged circumstances, as servant or agent of the Secretary of State for India in Council, or how the said defendant is liable for damage suffered through the act of any one of them. In short, the plaint discloses no cause of action against the Secretary of State for India in Council. The case is very much on all fours with Secretary of State for India v. Sukhdeo (1); indeed the present plaintiff's position is much weaker than that of the plaintiff Sukhdeo.

The Courts below have, however, inquired into the facts of this case. It has been proved that Gopal Ram, Court Inspector, obtained possession of the ornaments under a warrant lawfully, and very properly, issued by a Court of competent jurisdiction; the plaintiff has no cause of action on this ground. The return of the ornaments to Pashpat Nath was effected under an order, improperly passed by the Magistrate who had committed the criminal case for trial: the proper Court, that of the Assistant Sessions Judge, did its best to rectify the mistake. These Courts are not the servants or agents of the Secretary of State and he is not liable for damages if they make a mistake.

The suit has rightly been dismissed by both the Courts below; we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 12th June 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Hissar, dated the 5th November 1917.

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs have sued for pre-emption of a house in the town of Fatehabad in the Hissar District. The lower Courts have concurred in dismissing the suit on the ground that the existence of the custom of pre-emption in that town has not been proved. The view of the Trial Court was that the custom had originally existed, but had been abrogated, and that it was dying out in the seventies and eighties, since when there have been no instances of the exercise of the right. The lower Appellate Court has not expressed an opinion on this point, but has only decided that the plaintiffs have not succeeded in proving that any custom of pre-emption prevailed in the town of Fatehabad when the Pre-emption Act of 1913 was passed, and the point for determination in this second appeal is whether that decision is correct.

It is pointed out that Fatehabad is a town of Muhammadan origin, but this fact does not materially help the plaintiffs, as it does not relieve them from the burden of proving the existence of the custom.

A judgment in a contested suit of 1885 is relied upon, but as observed by the learned District Judge that suit was decided with reference to a decision in another suit a copy of the judgment in which has not been filed, and it appears that the claim was based on a condition in the wajid-ul-uz, which is not the case here. The judgment of 1885 is, therefore, of no value in the present case as evidence of the existence of the custom.

There are three cases of the years 1874, 1882 and 1890, in which decrees for pre-emption of houses at Fatehabad were passed on compromises, but as has been held in Imperial Oil, Soap and General Mills Co. Ltd. Delhi v. Mirbah ud din (1), a judgment based upon a compromise or confession, though of some probative force, cannot be placed on the same footing as one in which after contest a custom was held to be proved or negatived.

The oral evidence as to the existence of the custom is scanty, and the statements of witnesses as to instances of the exercise of the right are not supported by documents, except the statement of Dalla, who says he acquired a house from one Sultan by right of pre-emption and produces the sale-deed, dated the 18th December 1895, in support of his statement. That also was a case of the vendee admitting the right of pre-emption and it is possible that the reason why Sultan re-sold the house to Dalla was that he got a higher price than the price he had himself given. He sold the house to Dalla for Rs. 200, and although the same price was entered in the deed by which he purchased the house in November 1895 only Rs. 150; were paid at the time of the registration of the deed, the remaining Rs. 50 being entered as having been received before.

Counsel for the appellants has referred to Bhagwanti v. Sohan Lal (2), in which the custom of pre-emption was held to be proved only on the strength of a few judgments in cases in which the question of custom was not fought out. But that case related to the sale of a house in Delhi City, and it was pointed out that there was ample authority for the proposition that the custom prevails very generally throughout the City of Delhi. The ruling referred to is quite inapplicable to the present case.

The plaintiffs have in our opinion not succeeded in proving the existence of the custom of pre-emption in the town of Fatehabad, and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XI, r. 14—Production of documents, non-compliance with order for, effect of.

The mere non-compliance with an order for the production of books and documents in Court, made under Order XI, rule 14 of the Civil Procedure Code, does not warrant the striking off the defence of the party which is guilty of the non-compliance of the order. [p. 75, col. 1.]

First appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There are three connected appeals before us to-day pending between the same parties, namely, Nos. 319 and 186 of 1919 and one other appeal from order which has been admitted by us to-day but which has not been numbered by the office. This last appeal which we have admitted and No. 186 of 1919 are appeals from orders. The appeal No. 319 of 1919 is a regular first appeal from an ex parte decree.

The facts which have given rise to the three appeals are as follows:—The parties to the three appeals are the Ramchandra Gur Sahai Cotton Mills Co., Ltd., as plaintiffs, and the Lyalpur Sugar Mills Co., Ltd., through their manager L. Jai Ram Das, and the Cotton Ginning Factory at Lyalpur through their proprietors L. Mathura Das and Thakur Das as defendants.

The plaintiff Company sued for the recovery of Rs. 32,759 8-0 as damages on the allegation that the defendants had promised to supply the plaintiff firm with 320 bales of Lyalpur cotton at Rs. 45 8 0 per maund to be delivered at Lucknow in the months of November and December 1917 and in the month of January 1918. The contract was entered into at Cawnpore on the 14th November 1917. The defendant failed to deliver the goods at the specified time. The plaintiff firm had to go into the market and purchase the bales of cotton that were required, and as in the meantime the price of the bales of cotton had gone up, the plaintiff firm suffered a loss of Rs. 32,759 8-0.

The suit out of which these appeals have arisen was instituted in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, on the 12th August 1918, presumably because the contract was entered into at Cawnpore and because Jai Ram Das, defendant No. 1, lives at Cawnpore and carries on his business there. Jai Ram Das purchases sugar from Messrs. Begg Sutherland & Co., Cawnpore, and carries on the business of selling sugar at Lyalpur. Thakur Das and Mathura Das admittedly live at Lyalpur where they have got a Cotton Ginning Factory. The suit was resisted on various grounds. The issues were fixed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge on the 23rd October 1918. On the 23rd November 1918 the plaintiff firm made an application purporting to be under Order XI, rule 14. By the said application the plaintiff firm asked the Court to require the defendants to produce into Court certain books and other documents which were detailed in the application. On the 29th November 1918 the learned Subordinate Judge made an order to the effect that notice should be issued. On the 13th January 1919, a notice on the said application was issued and was served upon the Pleader for the defendants. The notice was in the form No. 6 given in Appendix C to the Code of Civil Procedure. As the notice was not complied with, a second application was made on behalf of the plaintiff firm on the 4th April 1919. The Pleader for the defendant No. 1 stated to the Court that the papers called for by the Court will be produced if all or any of them were found in the possession of Jai Ram Das. No papers seem to have been filed. On the 21st April 1919, a third application was made on behalf of the plaintiff firm to the same effect. A notice was issued which was affixed to the gate of the house of Jai Ram Das as the latter was not found at home. This application also proved infructuous. On the 2nd June 1919 a fourth application was made on behalf of the plaintiff firm to the same effect. The learned Subordinate Judge allowed the defendant No. 1 to produce the documents called for within ten days. The order was not complied with. On the 28th July 1919 the plaintiff filed an application purporting to be under Order XI, rule 15. The learned Subordinate Judge directed that notice should issue. The notice was served upon the Pleader for defendant No. 1 on the 4th August 1919. The case came up for hearing on the 12th August 1919 and the plaintiff firm applied to the Court for an order striking off the defence of the two defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge put off the case to the 15th August 1919, directing the production of the books and the documents called for from Jai Ram Das. On the 15th August 1919, Jai Ram Das filed an application stating that he had the books with him in Court and implying that he had brought them also into Court before but stating that none of the books or documents was in any way relevant to the dispute between him and the plaintiff firm. He, however, offered to make over the books to the Court and allow their inspection. This offer was not accepted by the plaintiff firm which insisted upon its prayer to the Court to strike off the defence, and the learned Subordinate Judge assented to the request of the plaintiff firm.

So far we have recited the facts that led to the striking off the defence of Jai Ram Das. The facts relating to the striking off the defence of Mathura Das and Thakur Das are somewhat different. On the 24th April 1919, interrogatories were filed on behalf of the plaintiff with a request that they should be served upon Mathura Das and Jai Ram Das for replies. The interrogatories for Mathura Das were served upon his Pleader. Jai Ram Das made replies to the interrogatories that were served upon him and they were filed on the 23rd May 1919. No replies were received from Mathura Das. The plaintiff firm again applied to the Court to compel Mathura Das to file answers to the interrogatories. The Pleader for Mathura Das stated that there was Martial Law at Lyalpur and he could not get into touch with his client. On the 17th June 1919, the learned Subordinate Judge made an order that the replies to the interrogatories should be filed into Court within ten days after the termination of the Martial Law at Lyalpur.

On the 23th July 1919, no replies having been received, the plaintiff firm asked the Trial Court to strike off the defence of Mathura Das. The Pleader who was appearing for him stated that though Martial Law had been withdrawn yet the whereabouts of his client were not known. He had made all attempts to get into communication with him but had failed. Thereupon the case was put off to the 12th August 1919. On the 12th August 1919, the Pleader for Mathura Das stated that he had received a wire from his client that he (Mathura Das) was suffering from fever and could not reach Cawnpore in time. The Pleader asked for an adjournment which request was rejected. The defence of Mathura Das was thereupon struck off on the 12th August 1919. In respect of the application against Jai Ram Das referred to above, the learned Subordinate Judge, according to the learned Counsel for Jai Ram Das who appears before us, made an oral order on the 13th August 1919, striking off the defence of Jai Ram Das also. The written order was, however, made on the 28th August 1919. The statement of the learned Counsel for Jai Ram Das that the defence of his client was struck off really on the 15th August 1919, is borne out by the fact that the claim of the plaintiff firm was tried on the 16th August 1919 ex parte. The suit was tried and the 16th August 1919, and decreed ex parte the same day.

Jai Ram Das and Mathura Das have preferred two separate appeals from the orders striking off their defence. The appeal of Jai Ram Das is No. 186 of 1919 and the other appeal is the one that has not yet been numbered. The third appeal, i. e., the one from the ex parte decree, No. 319 of 1919, is jointly by Jai Ram Das and Mathura Das. They contend that the orders of the learned Subordinate Judge striking off their defences are invalid in law and in any case were passed without the exercise of proper discretion.

We will take up the case of Jai Ram Das first. There is no doubt that several attempts were made by the plaintiff firm to compel Jai Ram Das to produce in Court certain documents. All the applications on behalf of the plaintiff firm except the last one dated the 28th July 1919, were applications under Order XI, rule 14. They were merely for the production of documents into

LYALPUR SUGAR MILLS & CO. v. RAM CHANDRA GUR SAHAI COTTON MILLS & CO.

Court. At the first blush it does appear that the conduct of Jai Ram Das was contumacious, but we find that there is evidence on the record to show that as early as the 31st May 1919 in answer to the interrogatories served upon him by the plaintiff firm he had stated distinctly that the documents that were called for from him were not in his possession. But if it be conceded for the sake of argument for a moment that Jai Ram Das was guilty of disobedience of the order of the Court, was the Court justified in striking off his defence? The order of the Court to Jai Ram Das to produce the books was an order made under Order XI, rule 14. The non-compliance of that order does not warrant the striking off the defence of the party which is guilty of the non-compliance of the order. The grounds upon which the discretion is given to a Trial Court for striking off the defence of a defendant are given in rule 21 of Order XI of the Civil Procedure Code. According to the said rule there are three grounds only upon which a Trial Court is justified in striking off the defence of a defendant or dismiss the suit of a plaintiff, namely, (1) the refusal to answer interrogatories, (2) the refusal to make discovery of documents, (3) refusal to permit inspection of documents. Now, rule 14 of Order XI of the Code of Civil Procedure does not relate either to the answering of interrogatories or the discovery or inspection of documents. The rule relating to discovery is embodied in rule 12 of Order XI and the rule relating to the inspection of documents is to be found in rule 13 of the same Order. In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge made no order either under rule 12 or rule 13 of Order XI of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is, however, contended on behalf of the plaintiff firm that the notice which was issued to Jai Ram Das was one that required inspection of documents called for from him. The form of notice to be issued under Order XI, rule 14 is given in appendix C, Form No. 6. The notice that was issued in the present case does not comply with the Form given in Appendix C. The said Form begins thus:—

"Upon hearing ...and upon reading the affidavit of...filed...the day....."

for which the books were summoned from Jai Ram Das or showing in what manner were they relevant to the dispute between the parties. It is, however, contended that when a set form is given by the Legislature for the issue of notice and that form is complied with, the notice, if not bad, would entail the penalty exacted by the Trial Court from Jai Ram Das. The argument may be called a technical argument. The obvious reply, a technical one also, is that the notice which we find on the record is not strictly in accordance with Form No. 6. As we find that the learned Subordinate Judge had made no order for the inspection of documents and indeed he could not have made one as the provisions of rule 13 of Order XI had not been complied with, the non-compliance of the order to produce books or documents into Court did not justify the Trial Court to strike off the defence of Jai Ram Das.

Now we take up the case of Mathura Das. The interrogatories were served upon his Pleader. There is no material on the record to show whether the Pleader sent those interrogatories to Mathura Das. It may, however, be said that if they were not sent that was the fault of the Pleader, and the omission by the Pleader would in no way affect the right of the plaintiff to demand the Court below to enforce the provisions of rule 21, Order XI against Mathura Das. However that may be, it is in evidence that Lyalpur was under Martial Law up to somewhere in the beginning of July 1919. Subsequent to the date the Pleader for Mathura Das lost touch with him and could not get into communication with him. On the 12th August 1919, before the order for striking off the defence of Mathura Das was made, his Pleader requested the Court to allow a few days to enable his client to come up to Cawnpore on the ground that his client had been ill with fever. The statement of the Pleader may or may not have been correct but we think that under the circumstances of the conditions of life in the Punjab at that time, the learned Subordinate Judge would have exercised a wiser discretion in allowing a few days' adjournment to Mathura Das. Moreover, if the case has to go back for the admission of the defence of Jai Ram Das, the trial would be quite incomplete

SUKHA RAM v. KOTU RAM.

If the defence of Mathura Das is kept out. We, therefore, allow both the appeals of Jai Ram Das, and Mathura Das and set aside the orders of the learned Subordinate Judge, dated the 12th August and the 28th August 1919, respectively, striking off the defence of Jai Ram Das and Mathura Das. The result, therefore, is that we set aside the ex parte decree in the connected Appeal No. 379 of 1919 and also direct that the case be restored to the file of the Court below, defences from Jai Ram Das and Mathura Das received, and the case tried according to law. As to costs we direct that they should be costs in the cause including fees in this Court of all the three appeals on the higher scale.

Pre-emption—Hindu Law—Joint family—Sale by father—Necessity—Son, whether can pre-empt.

The sons in a joint Hindu family cannot maintain a suit to pre-empt a sale of joint family property made by the father as managing member of the family and which is not alleged to be otherwise than for necessity. [p. 76, col. 2.]

Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lall, 55 Ind. Cas. 37; 4 A. 264; 18 A. L. J. 116; 2 U. P. L. R. (A) 32; relied upon.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 23rd January 1921, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 10th August 1920.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff, a Hindu shopkeeper living in a village, brought two suits for pre-emption in regard to two sales each of half a site with a kothi effected by his father on the same day in favour of two different vendees. The First Court dismissed the suits holding that they were collusive that the father and son were joint; that the managing member of the joint Hindu family could sell his son's share in family property, and that to allow the son to pre-empt such a sale would be tantamount to allowing him to pre-empt his own sale. The lower Appellate Court held that there had been no waiver and that there was no proof of collusion. It was of the opinion that the reason why a son in a joint Hindu family is debarred from pre-empting is because the son through his father is himself a vendor. It went on to say that the parties are certainly Argras; but in a case like the present the onus must lie on the plaintiff (probably the defendant was meant) to prove that the strict rules of Hindu Law apply to the case and debar the son from pre-empting. It held further that the place where the property in suit was situated was a village and decreed the plaintiff's claim with costs. The defendant in each case has filed a second appeal in this Court.

Counsel for the appellant cited Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lall (1) as an authority for the proposition that the sons in a joint Hindu family cannot maintain a suit to pre-empt a sale of joint family property made by the father as manager and for legal necessity. He urges that there is no reason in the present case to go deeply into the question whether there was legal necessity for the sale, because the plaintiff in his plaint never said that the sale was made without necessity. He admitted the factum of sale in each case and sued to pre-empt. Mr. Dev Raj for the respondents distinguishes the present case from the one reported as Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lall (1) on the ground that the sale there was one for necessity and not against the wishes of the co-sharers. As, however, remarked above, there was no allegation of the plaintiff that the sale was not for necessity, and I do not think that this point can be raised now.

Counsel for the respondent also urges that his client did not call evidence to prove that he was separate from his father because there was no issue on the point. It is true that there was no specific issue on this point, but the Trial Court found that the father and son were joint and in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, while this finding was contested, no objection was taken to the fact that no issue on the point had been framed, and that the plaintiff was thereby prejudiced. A perusal of the lower Appellate Court's judgment leads to the inference that the first Court's finding that the father and son were joint was probably not argued at all, and in any case the Court accepted this finding as correct. The initial presumption is that the father and son are members of a joint Hindu family, and there is evidence on the record to show that they were, and the initial presumption does not seem to have been rebutted. As already stated, the plaintiff and his father are Arora shop-keepers and the initial presumption is that they are governed by their personal laws, and I do not think the lower Appellate Court was right in saying that the onus lay on the party alleging it to prove that the strict rules of Hindu Law apply to the case and debar the son from pre-empting. I think the rules of Hindu Law must be held to apply to the present case as there is no proof to the contrary. Plaintiff's father is presumably the managing member of the family, and prima facie the sale by him, which was not alleged to be otherwise than for necessity, is binding on the son, and in accordance with the decision in Pratap Narain Singh v. Shiam Lal (1) the plaintiff cannot pre-empt such a sale.

I, therefore, accept the appeals, set aside the orders of the lower Appellate Court, and restore those of the First Court dismissing the plaintiff's suits, and I direct that the plaintiff should pay the costs of each defendant throughout.

Muhammadian Law—Wakf—Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913), s. 3 (b)—Wakf for payment of debts of settlor out of rents and profits of dedicated property, legality of—Provision for discharge of mortgage-debt if makes wakf invalid—Delivery of possession, if pre-requisite for validity of wakf—Marz-ul-maut—Disposition of more than one-third share of property without consent of heirs, whether valid—What constitutes death-illness—Mixed question of law and fact.

Under section 3 (b) of the Wakf Validating Act, it is lawful for a person professing the Mussalman faith to create a wakf for the payment of his debts out of the rents and profits of the property dedicated. [p. 79, col. 2.]

A wakf is not invalidated by reason of the circumstance that the property dedicated was under mortgage and that provision was made in the wakf-nama for the discharge of the mortgage-debt. [p. 80, col. 2.]

Under the Hanafi Law delivery of possession is not a pre-requisite to the validity of a wakf, and even if transmutation of possession is necessary, no formal delivery is essential when the settlor is himself the first mutwalli. [p. 82, col. 1.]

A Muslim who is in marz-ul-maut or death-illness cannot make a valid disposition of more than one-third of his property, and if he purports to make a wakf in such illness, unless his heirs assent, the wakf will affect only one-third of his estate and will be invalid in respect of the excess; this principle operates, notwithstanding that possession of the entire property dedicated has been delivered to the person nominated mutwalli. [p. 82, col. 2.]

In order to establish the existence of death-illness, there must be at least three conditions with regard to the illness which has caused death, namely, (a) proximate danger of death, so that there is a preponderance of apprehension of death; (b) there must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person; and (c) there must be some external indicia, such as inability to attend to ordinary avocations. [p. 82, col. 2.]

Whether or not a particular illness constitutes marz-ul-maut is primarily a question of fact but it may sometimes be a mixed question of law and fact, for instance, where the question arises whether the facts found as to the physical condition of the deceased at the date of execution of the deed constitute the essential elements of a marz-ul-maut as formulated by Muhammadian jurists. [p. 82, col. 2.]

JINJIRA KHATUN v. MAHOMED FAKIRULLA MEA.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 26th March 1918.

Babus Sarat Chandra Ray Chaudhuri, Krishna Kamal Mitra, Satyendra Nath Singha and Indu Bhushan Majumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the first two defendants in a suit instituted by the plaintiffs for a declaration that a wakf executed by the late Mahomed Elahi Buksh Sarkar on the 31st January 1915 is valid, that the first plaintiff is the duly appointed mutwalli thereof and that no title accrued to the seventh defendant under the conveyance executed in his favour by the first six defendants on the 11th April, 1916. The defendants resisted the claim upon every conceivable ground; the chief objections are indicated in the following three issues:

"6. Was Elahi Buksh Sarkar at the date of execution of the wakfnama suffering from death-illness? Was he physically and mentally incapable of executing the wakfnama when it is alleged to have been executed? Did Elahi Buksh Sarkar execute the wakfnama, if at all, with his free consent and with that of his heirs?"

"7. Did Elahi Buksh Sarkar belong to Shafi sect of Muhammadan? If so, is the alleged wakf valid?"

"8. Is the wakfnama propounded by the plaintiff genuine and legally valid?"

The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiffs upon all the points in controversy and has decreed the suit. Upon the present appeal, his decree has been challenged substantially on four grounds, namely, first that the wakf as is indicated by its terms was illusory and inoperative in law, secondly, that the wakf was invalid because the settlor was at the time heavily involved in debts and the properties dedicated were under mortgage; thirdly, that the wakf was invalid, as possession of the properties dedicated was not transferred to the mutwalli during the lifetime of the settlor; and fourthly, that the wakf in excess of a third share was invalid, as it was executed when the settlor was suffering from marz ul-maut or death-illness and without the consent of his heirs.

As regards the first point, it is plain that the legality of the dedication which, it is not now contested, was in the present case made by a Hanafi Mussalman, must be tested with regard to the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (Act VI of 1913). This Act came into force on the 7th March 1913, and in sections 3 and 4 provides as follows:

"3 It shall be lawful for any person professing the Mussalman faith to create a wakf which in all other respects is in accordance with the provisions of Mussalman Law, for the following among other purposes:—

"(a) for the maintenance and support wholly or partially of his family, children or descendants, and

"(b) where the person creating a wakf is a Hanafi Mussalman, also for his own maintenance and support during his lifetime or for the payment of his debts out of the rents and profits of the property dedicated:

"Provided that the ultimate benefit is in such cases expressly or impliedly reserved for the poor or for any other purpose recognised by the Mussalman Law as a religious, pious or charitable purpose of a permanent character.

"4 No such wakf shall be deemed to be invalid merely because the benefit reserved therein for the poor or other religious, pious or charitable purpose of a permanent nature is postponed until after the extinction of the family, children or descendants of the person creating the wakf."

We shall now analyse the provisions of the wakfnama, to show that they do not contravene the requirements formulated by the Legislature. The preamble recites that the settlor is a Hanafi Mussalman and that he is anxious to attain salvation, though he also realises the paramount duty of every one to provide for the maintenance and worldly expenses of his own self and family, children and descendants. He accordingly creates the wakf for religious purposes, for the mainten-ances of his own self and family, children and descendants, and also to prescribe a suitable means for the payment of all his debts. Then follow detailed rules in seven paragraphs. The first paragraph lays down that the settlor shall be mutwalli during his lifetime and then describes how the office of mutwalli shall be held by his descendants from generation to generation, or in the event of extinction of his line, by suitable persons selected by the District Judge. The second paragraph describes the expenses to be met from the gross collection of the wakf estate. The third paragraph provides that one-eighth of the net income is to be spent for specified religious purposes, such as, prayer in mosques, instruction in religion and morals, distribution of alms, feeding of the poor and the like. The fourth paragraph provides that one fourth of the net income is to be annually devoted for the liquidation of a mortgage debt of Rs. 20,000. After clearance of the debt, the amount is to be regularly applied in the payment of monthly allowances to poor Mussalman students. The fifth paragraph provides that one half of the net income is to be applied for the payment of maintenance allowances to the descendants of the settlor in specified proportions; on failure of the person or persons to whom allowances are directed to be paid, their share of the money is to be applied for one or more of the religious acts previously mentioned. The sixth paragraph provides that one-sixteenth of the net income shall be carried to a reserve fund for payment of rent and revenue, if at any time there should be no good collection of rent from scarcity of crops due to drought or inundation. The seventh paragraph provides that the remaining one sixteenth of the net income shall be received by the mutwalli as his remuneration. This summary of the leading provisions of the wakf leaves no room for serious controversy that the dedication cannot in any sense be deemed illusory. Although provision is made for the maintenance and support of the family, children and descendants of the settlor, the ultimate benefit is reserved for the poor and for other purposes recognised by the Muhammadan Law as religious, pious, or charitable purposes of a permanent character. Indeed, there is an immediate gift to charity of a substantial character. We hold accordingly that tested in the light of the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, no valid objection can be taken to the legality of the wakf.

As regards the second point, it is plain that under section 3 (b) of the Wakf Validating Act, it is lawful for a person professing the Mussalman faith to create a wakf for the payment of his debts out of the rents and profits of the property dedicated. This is in accord with the case of Luchmitput Singh v. Amir Alum (1), which is an authority for the proposition that a Hanafi Mussalman may execute a valid wakf by a deed which directs that the income of the property dedicated should be applied, in the first instance, for the payment of his debts, and after the discharge thereof, towards defined religious and charitable purposes. In an earlier case Shahazadee Hazara Begum v. Khoja Hossein Ali Khan (2) it had been held by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., that the existence of a mortgage at the time of creation of the endowment, does not render the endowment invalid under the Muhammadan Law. This view is supported by texts of the highest authority. Thus in the Fatawai Alamgiri (Text, Volume II, page 458, Baillie, Digest, Part I, page 563) it is stated on the authority of the Fath-ul-Kadir (Text, Volume II, page 638):

"It is not a condition that the property dedicated should be free from the rights of others (hakk-ul-ghair) as in the case of pledge and bailment, so that if one were to give a lease of his land and were then to make a wakf of it before the expiration of the term, the wakf would be binding according to its conditions, and the contract of lease would not be voided, but on the expiration of the term the land would revert to the purposes to which it was dedicated. In like manner, if a man were to mortgage his land, and then dedicate it before redeeming it, the wakf would take effect, but the land would not be withdrawn in the same way from the mortgage, and if it should remain for years in the hands of the mortgagee and then be redeemed, it would revert to the uses for which it was made wakf. And if the mortgagor should die before redemption, yet if he should leave sufficient inheritance to redeem the land, it is to be redeemed and the wakf would take effect. But if he should not leave enough for that purpose, the land may be sold and the wakf would become void. In the case of a lease, when either the lessor or lessee dies, the lease becomes void, and the wakf immediately takes effect; so in the Fath-ul Kadir."

The statement in the Durr-ul-Mukhtar (Text page 417, tr. Brijmohan Dayal, page 353) is expressed in similar terms:

"Wakf, during his (the dedicator's) death-illness, has the same effect as gift during that period, that is, it is valid to the extent of a third (of the dedicator's estate) when possession is delivered. Now if the wakf can take effect out of a third (of the dedicator's estate) or (his) heir sanctions it, it would take effect in full, otherwise it would fail so far as it exceeds the third. If the heir sanctions it in part, it would be valid to that extent. Wakf created by one who has mortgaged his property and is in bad circumstances as well as by an ill person who is heavily indebted is ineffectual, but not by a debtor who is not ill, provided he creates it before his becoming incompetent (for dedicating his property on account of his heavy debts). If a dedicator, who is indebted provides for the payment of his debts out of the usufruct, the wakf shall be valid, but should he make no such provision, the debt shall be paid out of surplus income, after meeting the expenses of the trust economically. If he dedicates the property for the benefit of a person other than himself, then the income of the dedicated property shall belong to him exclusively for whom it is dedicated—Fatwa of Ibn-i-Najeem.

I say that Ibn-i-Najeem has said that the debt must be heavy, because if it is not heavy, dedication shall be valid to the extent of a third of the dedicator's estate after payment of debt, in case the dedicator has got heirs, otherwise in respect of the whole of it. If a Kazi sells the endowed property (to pay off the debts) and then some money is found, another land shall be purchased instead of the one sold. The whole of this discussion is to be found in the Ist'ad, under the Chapter on Wakf by Sick People.

In the Wahbaniah it is said:

"If one dedicates mortgaged property and then redeems it is lawful. If he dies leaving behind money sufficient for redemption, no charge (in the dedication) shall be necessary; that is to say, if he does not leave behind so much money, the wakf would fail or (the defraying of the expenses of the trust out of) the usufruct will be suspended (till payment of debt).

I say that in the Maroccat of Mufti Abu Saïd it is recorded that he was enquired as to whether it was valid for a man to dedicate his property for the benefit of his descendants and thus avoid payment of his liabilities. His reply was that it is not valid and binding and that Kazis are forbidden from enforcing and registering such trusts so far as the liabilities extend. So remember this."

In our opinion, there can be no room for real doubt that the wakf in the present case is not invalidated by reason of the circumstance that the property dedicated was under mortgage and that provision was made in the wakfnama for the discharge of the mortgage-debt.

As regards the third point, it has been urged that the wakf must be pronounced invalid, in the absence of conclusive evidence to show that the possession of the properties dedicated was transferred to the mutwalli during the lifetime of the settlor. There is some divergence of opinion among classical Mussalman jurists on the question of the elements essential for the completion of a valid wakf. Under Hanafi Law, a wakf is completed, (a) according to Abu Yusuf, by the mere declaration; (Hedaya tr. Hamilton and Grady, pages 233, 239, 240, Baillie, Part I, pages 551, 591), Darul Ohuni, Mullick v. Syul Ker-mut Ali (3); (b) according to Imam Muhammad, it is completed, only if after the declaration a mutwalli is appointed and possession is delivered to him; Muthukana Ana Ramanadhan Ohezzar v. Vada Levvai Marakayar (4), (c) according to Abu Hanifa, it is completed, except in the case of a testamentary wakf, only when a decree of the Court declares that the property is the subject of a wakf, but not before; this is analogous to the in jure cessio of Roman Law and the fines of early English Law; (Hedaya tr. Hamilton and Grady, page 233; Baillie, Part I, page 550). In Doe d. Jaun Beete v. Abdulloh Barber (5), Ryan,

JINJIRA KHATUN V. MAHOMED FAHIBULLA MEA.

C. J., and Grant, J., held, after reference to the Muhammadan Law officers, that the exposition of Hanafi Law by Abu Yusuf on this point should be adopted, in other words, that a valid wakf is created by declaration of endowment by the owner and delivery of possession is not essential. This decision, so far as we have been able to trace, does not appear to have been doubted in this Court, and was followed in Ramzan Mistri v. Zakur Hossain (6), as an authority for the proposition that the appointment of a mutwalli is not essential to the validity of a wakf. It may also be observed that in Khviah Hossain Ali v. Shahzadee Hazara Begum (7), Mr. Justice Kemp, whose opinion prevailed against that of Mr. Justice Markby and was upheld on appeal under the Letters Patent Shahzadee Hazara Begum v. Khaja Hossain Ali Khan (2), observed that decisions are primarily given according to Abu Yusuf and next according to Imam Muhammad; and this preference to the opinion of Abu Yusuf is supported by the statement in the Fatawai Alamgiri (Text, Volume II, pages 454-455). Reference may also be made to the following passage from the Sazzat-ul-Fatawa, page 430:

"Though according to Muhammad, assignment of the dedicated property and separation of it (from the other properties of the wakf) are necessary to the completion of a wakf, according to Abu Yusuf, the wakf becomes absolute and binding, like emancipation, on the mere declaration of the wakf, and his right therein becomes extinguished at once. And in the Khulasa it is laid down that the jurists of Balkh decide according to the rule laid down by Abu Yusuf, and Sadr-ush-Shahid has stated that the Fatwa is according to him; and in the Fath-ul-Kadir it is mentioned that Abu Yusuf's opinion is the accepted doctrine and in the Munniah it is stated that the Fatwa is with Abu Yusuf, and this is the rule accepted by the jurists of Balkh. But the Bokharites have adopted Muhammad's opinion. And in the Shar-i-Vikayah and the commentary of Mulla Khusru (the Durrar ul-Ahkam) it is laid down that the Fatwa is with Abu Yusuf. In some places, it is mentioned in the Khanieh (Fatawai Kazi Khan) that the Fatwa is with Muhammad. But in the Muhit it is laid down that the universality of our jurists have adopted the rule laid down by Abu Yusuf—and this is correct."

In a recent case in the Allahabad High Court, however, Muhammad Aziz-ud-din Ahmad v. Legal Remembrancer (8), where the decision in Doe d. Jaun Beebe v. Abdullah Barber (5) was not brought to the notice of the Court, preference was given to the opinion of Imam Muhammad. We do not see sufficient reason to depart from the rule which was enunciated more than eighty years ago by the Supreme Court and is not shown to have been ever successfully challenged. We notice that the question was raised but not actually decided in Banubi v. Narasingrao (9), inasmuch as, in the circumstance of that case, there was neither declaration of wakf nor delivery of possession; a mere intention to set apart property for charitable purposes was clearly not sufficient to create a valid wakf: Mulla Veetil v. Subramania Ayyar (10). In the present case, there is a further difficulty in the path of the appellants. Here the settlor had appointed himself as the first mutwalli and in such a contingency, no formal delivery of possession from himself to himself would be necessary even according to Imam Muhammad: Abdul Raiah v. Bai Jimbabei (11). We must further remember that the wakfnama was executed on the 31st January 1915, and the settlor died on the 15th April 1915. It can hardly be expected that during this short period, there could be many transactions indicative of transmutation of possession. But such evidence as there is on the record points to the conclusion that, after the execution of the wakfnama, the settlor held the dedicated property, not as owner but as mutwalli. The direct oral evidence on the point is corroborated by the collection papers, the counterfoils of rent-receipts, the plaints in rent suits and the power-of-attorney which have been produced to show that after the date of the wakfnama Elahi Buksh held and managed the endowed property in the character of mutwalli. There is consequently no room for the application of the principle which has sometimes been recognised, namely, that where the declaration of a wakf is not acted upon by the settlor and its objects are not given effect to, it may be presumed that the wakf was not completed or that the settlor had no bona fide intention to create a wakf; Delrus Banoo Begum v. Newab Syud Asgur Alli Khan (12), Zowleka Bibi v. Syad Zynul Abedin (13). We hold accordingly that delivery of possession was not a pre-requisite to the validity of the wakf in the present case, and that even if transmutation of possession was necessary, no formal delivery was essential, as the settlor was himself the first mutwalli. The third ground consequently fails.

As regards the fourth point, it has been urged that the wakf was invalid to the extent of a two thirds share inasmuch as it was executed by the settlor in death-illness without the consent of the future heirs. The Subordinate Judge negatived this contention as, in his opinion, the evidence did not establish that the settlor was in death-illness at the time of execution of the deed of wakf. Before we refer to the evidence on the point, the requisites of the Muhammadan Law on the subject may be usefully re-called here. It is well-settled that gifts made by a Mussalman during marz-ul-maut or death illness cannot take effect beyond a third of the surplus of his estate, after payment of funeral expenses and debts, unless the heirs give their consent, after the death of the donor, to the excess taking effect: Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (14), nor can such gifts take effect if made in favour of an heir, unless the other heirs consent thereto after the donor's death: Akhtooroonissa v. Rowshan Jehan (15), Bafatun v. Bilaiti Khannun (16). Similarly, a wakf made in death-illness is valid only to the extent of a third of the net estate left by the deceased, unless the heirs consent: Billie, Part I, page 601, Part II, page 212; Ali Husain v. Fuzal Hussain Khan (17). The substance of the matter is that a Muslim who is in marz ul maut, or death-illness cannot make a valid disposition of more than one-third of his property, and if he purports to make a wakf in such illness, unless his heirs assent, the wakf will affect only one third of his estate and will be invalid in respect of the excess; and it is important to add that this principle operates, notwithstanding that possession of the entire property dedicated has been delivered to the person nominated mutwalli. In order to establish the existence of death illness, there must be at least three conditions with regard to the illness which has caused death, namely, (a) proximate danger of death, so that there is a preponderance of apprehension of death; (b) there must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person; and (c) there must be some external indicia, such as inability to attend to ordinary avocations. Whether or not a particular illness constitutes marz ul-maut is primarily a question of fact, as stated by Lord Robertson in Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (14), but it may sometimes be a mixed question of law and fact, for instance, where the question arises whether the facts found as to the physical condition of the deceased at the date of execution of the deed constitute the essential elements of a marz ul-maut as formulated by Muhammadan jurists. The leading authorities in this Court which support these propositions are the cases of Hasrat Bibi v. Goolam Jaffar (18) and Fatima Bibi v. Ahmad Bakhsh (19), which was affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Fatima Bibi v. Ahmad Bakhsh (20). In the case last mentioned, the three elements emphasised were (1) illness, (2) expectation of a fatal issue, and (3) certain physical incapacities which indicate the degree of the illness. The second condition, it was pointed out, cannot be presumed to exist from the existence of the first, while the incapaci-ties indicated in the third condition (with perhaps the single exception of the case where a man cannot stand up to say his prayers) are more or less of an empirical character, based upon an imperfectly developed science of diagnosis and cannot possibly serve as infallible signs of death-illness. The importance of the subjective element was emphasised in the course of argument and will be found developed in the texts set out by Mahomed Yusuf in his Tagore Law Lectures on Marriage, Dower and Divorce, Volume III, paragraphs 2919 2921, 2945 2947. This view, however, is repudiated by Sir Abdur Rahim in his Tagore Law Lectures on Mahammadan Jurisprudence (page 255) where reference is made to Kulsum Bibi v. Golam Hossain (21). A view similar to that adopted in this Court has been taken in the Bombay High Court in the cases of Sarabai v. Rabiabai (22) and Rashid Karmalli v. Sherbanoo (23) by the Allahabad High Court in the cases of Lakhi v. Bibbun (24), Muhammad Gulshere v. Marian Begum (25), Mahmud Hasan v. Anwar Hussain (26), Muhammad Sayeed v. Muhammad Ismail (27), Nazar Husain v. Rafiq Husain (28), Khursheed Hussain v. Faiyaz Hussain (29), Shrikk Muhammad v. Khadija Bibi (30), Wazir Jan v. Akbar Ali (31), Fazal Ahmad v. Rahim Bibi (32) and by the Patna High Court in Fazlur Rahman v. Muhammad Umar (33). (See also Durrul Mukhtar tr. Dayal, page 411. Hedaya tr. Hamilton and Grady, page 685 and Baillie, Part I, pages 551-552). We have now to consider, whether the evidence shows that, in the words of Lord Robertson in Ibrahim Goolam Areff v. Saiboo (14) the wakf was made "under the pressure of the sense of imminence of death." The deed of wakf, as we have seen, was executed on the 31st January 1915 and was registered on the following day. The defendants rely chiefly upon documentary evidence to show that from the beginning of November 1914 to the middle of January 1915, Elahi Bux was ill and that he was laid up again in the second week of March 1915. The defendants have also adduced oral evidence to show that Elahi Bux was ill continuously from November 1914 to April 1915 when his death took place. The Subordinate Judge has carefully analysed the oral evidence and has come to the conclusion that the persons who have come forward to depose in favour of the defendants cannot be regarded as witnesses of truth. After examination of this evidence in detail, we see no reason to doubt that the Subordinate Judge correctly estimated its value, specially as the witnesses, almost without exception, are not free from bias. As regards the documentary evidence, it appears that in a suit instituted by Elahi Bux against one Ataraddin Mandal and others for arrears of rent, the defendants cited him as a witness. The result was that on the 3rd November 1914 Elahi Bux applied for time to give his evidence, and four days later, he prayed that as he was an old man of 77, bedridden with fever for a week, he might be examined on commission. This was supported by an affidavit from kabiraj Sris Chandra Sen who certified that he was suffering from chronic intermittent fever; this kabiraj has been examined as a witness in this case. An order was made for the issue of a commission, but a postponement was obtained, as the Pleader was unwell on the date fixed (7th March 1915). Thereupon the Commissioner went to examine Elahi Bux on the 14th March, 1915 but he was asked to postpone the examination, as the illness had increased and the patient had very little hope of surviving. This was supported by a certificate from kabiraj Satis Chandra Sen stating that Elahi Bux was confined to bed from fever, piles and pain, that he was unable to speak and that there was danger of death if he gave his deposition. Neither the Commissioner nor the kabiraj has been examined as a witness, and the statements in the report by the Commissioner to the Court and in the certificate given by the kabiraj are not admissible in evidence. But, the statements, even if admitted, do not show the condition of Elahi Bux on the 31st January 1915 when the wakfnama was executed. The Subordinate Judge has further observed that Elahi Bux was perhaps reluctant to give evidence and that the allegations as to the state of his health were not improbably exaggerated. This finds some support in the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs, which relates to a point of time much nearer to the date of execution of the wakfnama than the evidence of the incidents mentioned by the witnesses of the defendants. The evidence led by the plaintiffs shows that in January 1915 Elahi Bux went to the house of his father-in-law at Rajarampore, which involved a journey by bullock cart over 12 to 14 miles of road. One of these journeys was shortly before, while the other was shortly after, the 31st January 1915. On his return journey, he lost a silver betel-pot and on the 6th February 1915, he lodged information at the Police Station. He had also an altercation on the way with Kadir Bux, a witness in this case, who laid an information with the Police against Elahi Bux and his son on the 21st January 1915. There can thus be no doubt on the oral evidence, supported by reliable documentary evidence, that between the 21st January and the 6th February 1915 the state of health of Elahi Bux was such that he was able to go from village to village to see his friends and relations, to arbitrate in the settlement of disputes of other people, and to follow the ordinary avocations of life. In cases of this character, when direct evidence of the state of health of the settlor on the date of the deed is not available, the evidence of antecedent and subsequent conditions of the settlor should converge to that point of time; this test is well-satisfied in the present case. Even if it be assumed that Elahi Bux was ill in November and December 1914 and in the first week of January, 1915, and further that he was ill again from the middle of March till his death in the middle of April, the validity of the wakfnama executed on the 31st January 1915 cannot be successfully impeached on the ground of marazul marut, when there is positive evidence to show that from the middle of January to the middle of February 1915, which includes the date of execution of the deed, he was in a fairly good state of health. In such circumstances, it cannot be urged that the wakfnama was executed under the pressure of the sense of imminence of death. We hold accordingly that the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on this part of the case cannot be successfully challenged.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Pattam is in some respects analogous to the stanom in Malabar. But it is not like the latter a mere dignity, but rather partakes of the nature of a religious office. The office is conferred by the Maghava villagers. Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Kanara, in Original Suit No. 21 of 1917.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Yegnanarayana Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIYA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. He brought this suit for maintenance against his brother, the defendant, on the ground that both parties belonged to an aliyasanthana family and that the defendant was in possession of the family properties as Yejman of the family and failed to give him maintenance. The defendant contended that he was not in possession of any property as Yejman of the family but only of certain properties as the person appointed by the Kular Magane community to the pattam of Kular Bidu. The second issue raised was "whether the suit properties belong to the aliyasanthana family of which the defendant is Yejman or to Kular Bidu pattam as alleged by the defendant."

At the trial, the plaintiff seems to have argued that, though the properties belonged to the Kular Bidu pattam, the pattam itself belonged to the family, and hence the properties also belonged to the family; and for this contention he relied upon the Vyavastha Patra, Exhibit A, dated 1899, executed between the defendant and the father of the plaintiff and of the defendant who was the previous pattamdar. This document, according to the plaintiff, made both the pattam and the property attached to it the family property of the plaintiff's mother's branch of their aliyasanthana family. This pattam right has to be conferred by the Maghava villagers though they are bound by custom to bestow it upon a member of the aliyasanthana family to which the last holder belonged; and, on the non-existence of any such member, they can bestow it on anybody they like. This pattam is indeed in some respects analogous to the stanom in Malabar. But from the evidence it appears that it is not (like a stanom) a mere dignity to which no obligations or duties are attached. On the other hand, the plaintiff himself in his evidence as plaintiff's witness No. 1 says: "My father resigned the Kular Bidu Pattam as he could not attend to the ceremonies there—the three ceremonies I have mentioned above;" then he says in another place, "There are annual ceremonies to be performed by the pattam-holder Mahalaya, Kambla and Paddarada Mashinoma." Then he says as regards the "Nema" ceremony, "The Nema ceremony lasts three days. All the Maghava people have to be invited for the ceremony." It appears from the defence evidence that several other ceremonies, —Ashtami, Vinayaka Chathurthi and others, have also to be performed by the pattam office-holder at some expense. The villagers who installed the pattam-holder in his office have to be invited and fed, or at least, given sannas according to the evidence. Thus, whereas the stani succeeds to the stanom by reason of his being the next eldest member of the family next to the deceased stane, that is not the case with this pattam dignity which rather partakes of the nature of an office to which the villagers appoint a man after an elaborate ceremony and the duties of which office are defined and entail expense out of the income derived from the lands forming the emoluments of the office.

As I said, the plaintiff admits that his father resigned the office because he was unable to perform the duties attached to it. That was in 1894; and the defendant was appointed to the office at once during his father's lifetime.

The next question is whether junior members of the family of the pattam holder can claim maintenance out of the income of the pattam lands. As I said, the holder of a pattam is in a less advantageous position than the holder of a stanom, so far as his rights are concerned in the properties attached to the pattam. So far as the holder of a stanom is concerned, he becomes cut off for the time being from connection with his main Tarwad; the other members of his Tarwad have no right whatever to or in the stanom properties. It seems to me that a fortiori the plaintiff cannot claim any interest in the pattam properties and it follows that he has no right to get maintenance out of the income of the properties. But it was argued that by reason of the arrangement, agreement or settlement under Exhibit A, dated 1899, the defendant became liable to treat these properties as his aliyasanthana family properties, and hence the plaintiff was entitled to claim maintenance out of their income. One answer advanced against this contention by Mr. Adiga (for the respondent) was that, as religious duties were attached to the office, the properties cannot lawfully be made the subject of any agreement by the holder of the office changing their nature so as to allow secular rights of maintenance to be claimed out of their income. Abdur Rahim, J., and myself, in a case decided at the end of last year, Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 21 of 1920 differed on the question whether the properties attached to a religious office can be attached and can form the subject of alienation by Court sale or private sale provided the service continues to be performed, and whether the alienation would be valid during the lifetime of the office-holder (judgment-debtor or alienor). The decision in that case has been appealed against under the Letters Patent.

Assuming, however, that even though the office of pattam has religious duties attached to it, and the properties can be alienated so as to be effective during the lifetime of the office-holder, the next question is whether Exhibit A was intended to effect such an alienation. Mr. Adiga argued that it was not so intended even according to its terms, though the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that it was intended thereby to so convert the pattam property into family property. There is much to be said in favour of Mr. Adiga's contention as the pattam and the properties are treated alike as intended to be held in the joint family right of the heirs of the defendant according to the aliyasanthana law of inheritance in the branch of the defendant's mother. It is difficult to believe that the pattam which belonged and could belong to one member of the family at a time was itself intended to be made the common property of the family. If so, the property attached to it which cannot be separated from it could not have been intended to be enjoyed as family property while the pattam can only be enjoyed by one member whom the Maghava villagers appoint to the office.

Then the provision of the agreement, Exhibit A, that so far as the asseration out of the income are concerned they should be treated as family properties and not merely to regulate the succession to the pattam and the properties into family properties. The true construction of Exhibit A on this point is, however, not free from difficulty. I shall consider the case, therefore, on the footing of that. Exhibit A was intended to convert the properties into aliyasanthana family properties and not merely to regulate the succession to the pattam so as to preserve it and the enjoyment of the attached properties in the aliyasanthana family. I shall here dispose of another minor contention of the appellant that Item No. 1 alone was attached to the pattam and that items Nos. 2 and 3 were not attached to the pattam. I think the matter is concluded against the appellant's contention by the very document, Exhibit A, which describes all the three properties as belonging to the pattam. Further the same contention was raised by the junior members of the previous pattam office holder in 1847 and was negatived—See Exhibits B and C.

Then we have to consider the question whether Exhibit A can be treated as an alienation by way of settlement or sale in favour of the family by the defendant. So far as sale is concerned, the consideration mentioned in Exhibit A has been found to be clearly fictitious; for the wife's family is not a party to the deed, as the plaintiff's and the defendant's father who professes to have entered into the transaction in the interests of his wife's family is not according to law a member of his wife's family at all. Secondly, taking it as an unilateral deed of settlement by the defendant in favour of the mother's aliyasanthana family, I think that there is sufficient internal evidence in the recitals of the document itself which support the evidence of the defendant that he executed the document not by his free will and consent but owing to the undue influence brought to bear upon him by his father.

I, therefore, agree with the lower Court's finding that this deed was not voluntarily executed by the defendant and that he could impeach its validity as a defendant.

SASHIMUKHI DASI v. MONMOHINI DASI.

In the result I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

SPENCER, J.—The learned Subordinate Judge has found on the second issue that the suit properties appertained to the Kulur Bidu Pattam and not to the aliyasanthana family of which the defendant is the Yejman. In support of this finding he relies on a good deal of documentary and oral evidence to which we have been referred in the arguments in appeal. I have no doubt he was right in his conclusion that the properties appertained to the pattam.

The argument advanced for the appellant that the pattam belongs to the family is negated by the previous history referred to in the lower Court's judgment and in the judgments in the litigations of 1851, Exhibits B, C and I. That history contains instances where the Maghava villagers have installed pattam holders selected from the family of the last pattam holder, and failing lineal heirs in that family, have appointed persons from outside the family.

The appellant relies on Exhibit A, a document signed by the defendant and his father at the time when the defendant succeeded to the office. Mr. B. Sitarama Rao argued that this agreement or settlement gave his client a good title at least for the lifetime of the defendant, and that it was too late for the respondent to repudiate it as being executed under undue influence as he did not set up such a case at the trial. The Subordinate Judge treated this Exhibit A as a purchase of membership in the pattam family and he held that it was invalid for want of consideration. The document itself is termed a deed of settlement. Whether it is an agreement or a family settlement, its purpose is clearly to appropriate for family purposes the property which belongs absolutely to the pattam and to alter the recognised custom of the trust under which the property had hitherto been enjoyed and managed. It states that "the extra immoveable and moveable properties belong to the self-acquisition of the pattam-holder and should be carried on under the joint permission of the family of those who acquired the same; it should not be subjected to the power of the pattam holder." In another place the defendant and the persons who are his heirs are declared to have a right of inheriting the property as joint heirs of all his rights and interests according to the aliyasanthana law. As the Subordinate Judge observed, this document evidences an intention on the part of the defendant's father to create rights to the pattam and properties in all his children and to convert the pattam properties into family properties. An appropriation for private purposes of properties attached to a religious office is clearly illegal and even a trustee who mortgages the trust property for his own purposes can subsequently as a trustee impeach the validity of the transaction and avoid the alienation in the interests of the trust, as we held in Seni Yasin Sahib v. Kadur Ettumbara Iyer (1).

I am, therefore, of opinion that Exhibit A is not valid even for the lifetime of the defendant and that the defendant is not now estopped from repudiating the validity of that transaction. The lower Court's decision is right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter, (with him Babu Bijoy Kumar Bhattacharjee), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The point is whether the deed of gift has been properly attested or not. The lower Appellate Court has found against me. I submit there being a gift to an idol the law of endowments does not apply, the idol is capable of holding and owning property. That being so, the deed ought to have been properly attested according to law. Refers to Pallayya v. Ramavathanulu (1), Jadu Nath Singh v. Sita Ramji (2), Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (3), Gour's Transfer of Property Act, 1882, on section 123.

Babu Sarat Ohandra Ray Ohoudhury (with him Babu Mohesh Ohandra Banerjee, for Babu Bijoy Kumar Chatterjee), for the Respondents.—The document does show that the property was not dedicated to the idol. The donor simply said that only for the expenses of the two pujas he reserved those properties and also the right of collection of rents, etc. to himself and his successors. There is a distinction between dedication and a gift. The former would imply endowments and trusts. Refers to Manchershaw v. Ardeshir (4). After the dedication a trust is created. He must either make a gift or a settlement appointing trustees. The deed has been named nirupan patra. These are the two modes by which a person can make over property to idol. The case in Jadu Nath Singh v. Sita Ramji (2) does not apply. I submit the present deed was not a deed of gift but of settlement creating a trust. Law requires attestation only in case of deed of gift under section 123, Transfer of Property Act. Assuming that sections 68 and 71 of the Evidence Act apply, I submit the deed has been legally proved. I submit the fact of my not having called other attesting witnesses would not stand in the way of my proving the document by other evidence.

Dr. D. N. Mitter replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—Upon the findings arrived at, we think that the attestation of the document, even taking it as a deed of gift, has been sufficiently proved.

The attesting witness, who was called, stated that he put his name as a witness after the execution of the document; in other words, that he was not an attesting witness. But the District Judge has found upon the evidence that the document was executed in the presence of that witness. The evidence, therefore, of the other witness was relied upon by the learned District Judge not for the purpose of proving execution of the document but for proving that the attesting witness who said that he had not seen the execution did as a matter of fact see it and was an attesting witness. The learned Judge also refers to the evidence of Hem Ohandra, another attesting witness, examined at an earlier stage of the suit, namely, when the application for leave to sue as a pauper was made.

We think, having regard to the findings arrived at, that the document was proved. The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

The Court-fees in this Court will be recovered by Government from the appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S, and Lala Sardha Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The house in suit was sold by Ram Gopal and his brother Nikka, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, to Kali Charn, defendant No. 3, and the son of Ram Gopal sued for possession of the house contending that there was no necessity for the sale. He was given a decree for possession of half of the house (on account of Ram Gopal's share) by the First Court, and for possession of the whole house by the lower Appellate Court, which found that the family was a joint Hindu family, that the sale was not effected for payment of debts and that no necessity for it had been proved. The vendee has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The first contention put forward on behalf of the appellant is that the plaintiff cannot challenge the alienation by his uncle, Nikka, but there is no force in this contention in view of the finding that the family is a joint Hindu family. The property belongs to the joint family, and Nikka has no defined share in it until partition takes place, so that the transaction cannot be split up and the sale by Nikka treated separately from the sale by his brother.

The second contention is that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree unless he shows that the purchase-money was taken for immoral purposes. This contention is not correct. Rulings to the effect that a money-decree obtained against a Hindu father can, if the debt is not illegal or immoral, be enforced by a sale of the co-parcenary estate and is binding on the son, are not in point, as there is in the present case no question of the execution of any decree obtained against Ram Gopal. The question is as to the right of the son to set aside an alienation by his father of the ancestral property which has not been effected for the payment of an antecedent debt or for any family necessity, and the authorities are clearly in the plaintiff's favour, see Bahadur Singh v. Desraj (1), Ram Dayal v. Ajudhia Prasad (2) and Madan Gopal v. Sati Prasad (3).

Next it is contended that the plaintiff cannot succeed without refunding the purchase-money, but this contention also is one with which we cannot agree. Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das (4), which is cited in support of it, was dissented from in Ram Dayal v. Suraj Mal (5) and in Madan Gopal v. Sati Prasad (3), in which a contrary view was taken.

Lastly, it is argued that as Ram Gopal is alive his son is not entitled to a decree for possession of the house, but only to a decree declaring the alienation to be invalid. This point was not taken in the grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court, and as the plaintiff is himself a co parsoner in the property we think he can maintain a suit for possession. It was, in fact, held in Madan Gopal v. Sati Prasad (3), where the sale by the father was not for family necessity or for the payment of debts, that his sons were entitled to recover the property.

The plaintiff is, however, entitled only to joint, and not to exclusive, possession, and in this respect the decree requires to be modified.

We accept the appeal and alter the decree to one for joint possession of the house. The appeal having failed except in respect of this slight modification, the appellant will pay the plaintiff-respondent's costs throughout.

Lease, construction of—Lessee's right to build—Boundaries well-defined in the lease—Area in lessee's possession less than that stated in the lease—Encroachment, whether permissible.

The portion of a lease which governed the lessee's right to build was as follows:—"You shall not be competent to make big excavations but you shall be competent to construct pucca wall, pucca privy and pucca plinth of the tin ghur".

Held, that reading the clause as a whole, it was the intention of the parties that the lessee's right to erect permanent structures should be limited to those specified in the condition, and that the condition amounted to a prohibition to build any other structures than those expressly mentioned, [p. 91, col. 1.]

The fact that the amount of land of which a lessee was given possession is less than the area stated in the lease, would give the lessee no right of encroachment beyond the well-defined boundaries given in the lease. [p. 91, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Jalpaiguri, dated the 20th of December 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, First Court at that place, dated the 18th September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Appellants.—The document should be construed in favour of the grantee and not in favour of the grantor. That is a well known canon of interpretation. I am not precluded from raising a wall. All preventions are expressly mentioned. Moreover a wall does not require big excavation. I am prevented from making big excavations only. My second submission is that oral evidence has been wrongly admitted. When the terms of the document are perfectly clear, no oral evidence should have been admitted. The provisions of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act are explicit on this point.

The area in possession of my clients is less than what is stated in the document and so my clients were justified in encroaching on the lessor's land.

Babu Fantosh Kumar Bose, for the Respondents.—The other side laid stress on the word bhitti which they said meant also a wall. Now they veer round. Moreover if they had a right to build a wall that would have been mentioned in the lease. We are to look to the intention of parties as it is revealed by the document. As to boundaries, in a competition between boundaries and area, the former are to prevail.

As to evidence, oral evidence can be properly admitted if it does not vary the terms of the document.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs-respondents have obtained a decree directing removal of a wall. The finding is that the wall must be removed on two grounds; partly by reason of its encroachment on the land in the possession of the plaintiffs and partly because it is built on the land leased to the defendant from the plaintiffs under a lease which prohibits them from erecting a pucca wall on the land.

to the mortgage in favour of the defendant; and all the rights she had, she surrendered in favour of the landlord. The landlord thereupon was entitled to possession of the jote and to hold it subject to the rights of the mortgagee. It is true that the defendant obtained possession but he was not a mortgagee in possession. Batashi had no right to convey nor confer any right to possession after the surrender in favour of the landlord in 1903. We are unable, therefore, to hold that the defendant is entitled to resist the claim for possession as against the plaintiff who claims under a settlement from the landlord.

The learned Pleader for the appellant has strongly pressed upon us to order the plaintiff to redeem the mortgage in this suit. But, apart from other considerations, the landlord who acquired the equity of redemption under the surrender is not the plaintiff. The plaintiff obtained a settlement of only a portion of the jote, namely, the disputed land from the landlord and we do not see how the plaintiff can be directed to redeem the entire mortgage.

The appeal must accordingly be dismissed. We make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2)— Decree—Order absolving defendant from liability to pay mesne profits—Appeal.

An order made upon the objection of a defendant and after hearing the parties, absolving him from the liability to pay mesne profits is a "decree" within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, and as such is appealable. [p. 94, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bogra, dated the 23rd of December 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court at Bogra, dated the 7th of April 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Ohandra Gupta, for the Appellant.—I submit that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in thinking that the Munsif's order is not a final order, but is only an interlocutory order. Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bijai Bahadur Singh (1) cannot be distinguished from the present case and that case clearly governs this case. I submit that it is clearly a decree. And the definition of the term 'decree' in the present Civil Procedure Code makes the thing quite clear and unambiguous. So far as the defendants were concerned they were absolved from any liability. Reads section 2, Civil Procedure Code. Refers to Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (2), Beni Ram v. Nanhu Mal (3), Raja of Ramnad v. Velusami Tevar (4).

Babu Bejan Kumar Mookerjee, for the Respondents.—The order of the learned Munsif cannot but be treated as an interlocutory order. It could not have been challenged by way of appeal. Reads Order XX, rule 12, Civil Procedure Code, it is a preliminary decree. It was an order preparatory to the passing of the final decree. Refers to Bharie Indu v. Yaqub Husain (5), and Ramini Debi v. Promotho Nath (6). The present case tallies with Bharie Indu v. Yaqub Husain (5).

It does not come under section 2 of Civil Procedure Code as it does not conclusively determine all questions at issue.

Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bejai Bahadur Singh (1) is clearly distinguishable, there the order was passed in execution proceedings. There cannot be a series of decrees in a suit to be challenged piecemeal by way of appeal.

Babu Atul Ohandra Gupta was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bagra remanding a case for assessment of mesne profits.

The question that arises in this appeal is whether any appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge in this matter. The plaintiffs-respondents brought a suit for declaration of their raiya right to an eight-annas odd share in a certain holding alleging that they were purchasers from some of the heirs of one Sona. In that suit heirs of Sona were made defendants and also one Baso and defendants Nos. 6 to 12, the present appellants, were joined as being in possession of the land. Their pleas were that they were burgadars of some plots under Baso and also mortgagees of Baso in respect of some plots. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance. On appeal that decision was reversed and the suit decreed. The plaintiffs' title to the share claimed was declared and they were granted a decree for possession after partition. It is also directed that defendants Nos. 6 to 12 would not be ejected from the land and that the decree in the suit would in no way prejudice the mortgage right, if any, of these defendants.

The case was then sent back to the lower Court the plaintiffs gave up their right to partition. On the 9th January 1919 an objection was taken by defendants Nos. 6 to 12, the present appellants, that they were not liable for mesne profits. That objection was heard in the presence of the parties and the Munsif held that the order of the Subordinate Judge remanding the case did not include defendants Nos. 6 to 12 and absolved them from the liability of paying the mesne profits. He ordered accordingly that the mesne profits against the remaining defendant should be ascertained and a Commissioner was appointed for this purpose. On the 7th April 1919 after the Commissioners' report had been received the Munsif finally disposed of the case and passed an order dismissing the claim for mesne profits as against defendants Nos. 6 to 12 on contest and dismissing it as against the other defendants for non-prosecution.

The contention on behalf of the appellants is that the order of the 9th January was a decree against which an appeal should have been preferred, and that no appeal having been preferred against that order it had become final before the appeal was presented to the lower Appellate Court. In my opinion that contention must be upheld. The order of the 9th January definitely determined that these defendants were not liable for mesne profits. In the case of Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bejai Bahadur Singh (1) it was held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that an order deciding the period for which mesne profits could be recovered was a decree within the meaning of the definition in section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure then in force. Since then there has been an alteration of the definition of the decree in the Code of 1908. But the alteration is to make it wider than before. The order now under consideration was an order finally deciding that these defendants were not liable for any mesne profits. That appears to me to be as much a final adjudication

MUHAMMAD RAFIQ v. QAMAR DIN.

Accordingly I decree this appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The appellants will get their costs in this and lower Appellate Court.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 247—Partnership based on contract—Minor, whether can create.

Although under section 247 of the Contract Act a minor may be admitted to the benefits of a partnership, and, if so admitted, his share is liable, but where the partnership is based on contract, the privilege conferred by the section does not give him the power to create a firm, that is to say, a partnership based on contract must be in existence before he can be admitted to its benefits, for he cannot be admitted to what does not exist. [p. 93, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 17th April 1919, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 20th November 1918.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellant.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff purports to sue the firm Muhammad Rafiq-Ilam Din for recovery of certain moneys said to be due properly on the strength of section 247 of the Contract Act. The suit was originally dismissed on the ground that Muhammad Rafiq being a minor at the time the firm was created and also having been a minor at the time of the transactions, he could in no way be held liable. On appeal the District Judge relying on Gopi Mal Durga Das v. Jain Bank of India Limited (1) has held that a minor can enter into a partnership in the sense that he can, acting with another major person, create a partnership and, has remanded the case for decision under Order XLI, rule 23.

On second appeal it is pointed out that the only other member of the partnership was a stranger Ilam Din, that this was not a case of a family partnership or of a Hindu joint family as the so called partners are Muhammadans and in no way related to each other and that, although section 247 provides that a minor may be admitted to the benefits of a partnership, it does not cancel or revoke section 11 of the Contract Act and make it possible for a minor simultaneously to create a partnership and to admit himself to the benefits of the same. We find this contention to be sound and convincing. Counsel for the respondent has quoted many rulings such as Makhun Lall Dutt v. Ram Lall Shaw (2), Mollow, March & Co. v. Court of Wards (3), Palaniappa Chetty v. Official Assignee of Madras (4) and Raghunathi Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (5), but nowhere do we find any authority for the proposition that a minor is given the power to contract. Reliance is also placed on Gopi Mal-Durga Das v. Jain Bank of India Limited (1) the authority quoted by the learned District Judge. This was a case of a Hindu joint family in which the father and his minor son carried on the business of the firm, and it explains that a minor can act as an agent under section 184 of the Indian Contract

Act and can bind the firm. The words of section 247 of the Contract Act are that a minor "may be admitted to the benefits of partnership" and, if so admitted his share is liable. If, however, the partnership be based on contract as is alleged to be the case here, the privilege conferred on the minor by section 247 will not give him the power to create a firm, in other words, a partnership of this nature must be in existence before he can be admitted to its benefits, for he cannot be admitted to what does not exist. It is clearly established law that a contract made by a minor is not only voidable but void, and whatever may be the position of a minor member of a Hindu joint family, where the partnership is not created by contract, and the minor at birth automatically becomes a co-sharer in a case such as this the minor cannot be admitted and his share, if any, cannot be held liable, inasmuch as the partnership to which he is alleged to have been admitted was not and could not be in existence until he had done an act which he was legally disqualified from doing and which would have been void ab initio.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of remand we restore the order of the Trial Court. The costs of the defendant Muhammad Rafiq will be paid throughout by the plaintiffs.

The mere fact that a consent order is hard is no ground for reviewing it. [p. 102, col. 2.]

The Counsel of a party to a suit entered into a compromise agreeing to deposit a certain sum of money in Court under the mistaken belief that he had the permission of his client to do so. The client who was present in Court stood by without making any protest, and even tried to raise up the required sum. Failing, he applied to set aside the consent order after the same had been drawn up and perfected:

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This is an application for setting aside a consent-decree passed by this Court on the 11th November 1921. The circumorder, appointing the applicant as the Receiver of a certain colliery business which was the subject-matter of the litigation between the parties. Against that order of the learned Subordinate Judge the applicant preferred an appeal to this Court. That appeal came on for hearing on the 5th November and Mr. Hasan Imam, appearing on behalf of the appellant, the applicant before us, made certain proposals for settlement. Mr. Manuk on behalf of the opposite party suggested that the case should stand over till the 11th November 1921 in order to enable the parties to consider those terms or any alternative terms that might be suggested. The matter accordingly stood adjourned till the 11th November 1921. On that date a consent order was passed to the effect that the appellant would deposit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad on or before the 16th January 1922 the sum of Rs. 6,05,642 to answer any decrees that might be passed against him in that suit and that on such deposit being made the order appointing him the Receiver of the colliery business would be discharged, but that on his failure to bring into Court the said sum on or before the 16th January 1922 the appeal would stand dismissed. This consent order was passed on the 11th November 1921 and on the 9th January 1922 the present application for setting aside the consent order of the 11th November 1921 was presented to this Court. The petition alleged that one Ramratan Das, who was in fact a broker but who represented himself to be the karpardas of the applicant, gave instructions to Mr. Hasan Imam on behalf of the applicant and that Mr. Imam in proposing the terms of settlement to the Court acted on instructions given to him by Ramratan Das and not in exercise of that authority which was vested in him as an Advocate of the applicant. It was suggested in the petition that Mr. Imam acted under a misapprehension in so far as he thought that Ramratan Das was authorized by the applicant to propose those terms to the Court and that, as Mr. Imam's consent was given under a misapprehension, there was in reality no consent at all and that accordingly the consent-decree ought to be set aside. The whole basis of the petition, as I have stated, is that Ramratan Das was a broker and not a karpardas of the applicant and had no authority from the applicant to propose any terms of compromise on his behalf and that as Mr. Imam acted entirely on the instructions given to him by Ramratan Das the consent decree could not stand. As I shall presently show, the introduction of the name of Ramratan Das has raised an entirely false issue in the case; for it now appears that on the 11th November 1921 when the consent order was in fact passed by this Court, it was not Ramratan Das who came to Patna from Calcutta to give instructions to Mr. Imam but one Provash Babu who admittedly took over after the applicant's business and was undoubtedly authorized to give instructions to Mr. Imam. The applicant has certainly shown a want of candour in so far as he has concealed the part which Provash Babu took in the matter from the Court in his petition. We are told that this petition was drafted in a Solicitor's office in Calcutta. I am loath to believe that any Solicitor of any position would deliberately give a wrong impression to the Court if the facts were disclosed to him. I am of opinion that the false issue which the applicant has deliberately raised in his petition has by no means improved his case.

NILMONI CHAUDHURI V. KEDAR NATH DAGA.

The petition then states that new circumstances arose subsequent to the passing of the consent order which made it impossible for the applicant to bring into Court such a large sum of money within the period fixed in the consent order. This paragraph again suggests, and the evidence in the case makes it perfectly clear, that the applicant tried his best to give effect to the consent order and that the application was presented only when it became clear to the applicant that the money could not be raised so as to enable him to bring into Court such a large sum of money on or before the 16th January 1922. It is only necessary to mention at this stage that the order which was passed by consent on the 11th November 1921 was duly drawn up and entered before the application was presented in this Court on the 9th January 1922.

The evidence shows that when the first proposal was made by Mr. Imam for settlement it was Ramratan Das who gave instructions to Mr. Imam on behalf of the applicant. Having given those instructions he left for Calcutta on the night of the 5th November. When the case came up for hearing on the 11th November, it was not Ramratan Das who came from Calcutta to instruct Mr. Imam. Provas Babu, who, as I have stated, is undoubtedly the agent of the applicant, was in Court and it was in his presence and not in the presence of Ramratan Das that Mr. Imam offered the terms which were accepted by Mr. Manuk. I am of opinion that the question whether Ramratan Das had authority from the applicant is entirely irrelevant; we have only to enquire whether Provas Babu took the responsibility for the terms of settlement that were proposed to the Court on the 11th November. Provas Babu's evidence in this Court is that when he came to Patna on the 11th November he was wholly unaware of the fact that any terms of settlement had been proposed to the Court on the instructions of Ramratan Das. I find it difficult to accept this testimony. Ramratan Das did give certain instructions to Mr. Imam and Mr. Imam did propose certain terms to the Court. Ramratan Das left for Calcutta immediately after and it is admitted that he saw the applicant as well as Provas Babu in Calcutta. It is admitted that Ramratan Das informed them that the case would be taken up on the 11th November. I find it difficult to believe that Ramratan Das failed to tell them that certain terms of settlement had been proposed to the Court by Mr. Imam on his instructions. There is no suggestion that Ramratan Das deliberately acted to the prejudice of the applicant. He undoubtedly thought that a settlement was best for the parties and, though he may have exercised an authority which he never had in fact, there is no explanation why he should not have told the applicant exactly what happened in Court on the 5th November. Babu Abani Bhuean Mukherji, a leading Vakil of this Court who appeared in the case with Mr. Imam has made a statement to this Court and we entirely accept that statement. He says in his statement that Provas Babu told him that it was not possible to bring into Court such a large sum of money within so short a time and that Abani Babu told Provas Babu that the other side would probably not accept the terms which had been proposed by Mr. Imam. Abani Babu's impression as to what happened on the 11th November is as follows:—"On the 11th before the Hon'ble Judges came to Court Mr. Manuk in Court room said that he agreed to the terms. This came upon Provas Babu as a surprise; but I advised Provas Babu to try and agree to it since the other side was agreeable, on the ground that the matter had advanced too far; the proposal had gone from us and it would not be wise to back out of it now and that judging from the rate at which they had been working and selling coal, I thought it would be possible for them to deposit the money if they tried honestly. Provas Babu said it would be difficult to put together such a large sum within such a short time; but I thought that in the interests of the client it would not be proper to reside at that stage and tried to make him submit to the terms. Provas Babu kept quiet and I understood him to agree. Thereupon I instructed Mr. Imam that the client was agreeable." I accept the statement as an accurate representation of what actually happened in Court. The question still remains that Provas Babu kept quiet and allowed his Counsel, Mr. Imam, to make the proposal in Court on the 11th November. He made no attempt to tell Mr. Imam, although he was actually present in Court, that the terms were such as could not be carried out. On the contrary, he went to Calcutta and made a genuine effort to raise the money. Circumstances, however, changed over which the parties had no control which made it impossible for the applicant to raise the money in Calcutta. The fact remains, however, that between the 11th November 1921 and the 9th January 1922 there was not only no challenge by the applicant on the consent order of the 11th November 1921, but, on the contrary, there was a submission to that order in the sense that the applicant tried to raise the money to enable him to carry out the order.

What then is the position? Two propositions are well-settled; first, that express authority is not needed for a Counsel to enter into a compromise within the scope of the suit; and secondly, that where there is limitation of authority and that limitation is communicated to the other side, consent by Counsel outside the limit of his authority would be of no effect. But the position is one of difficulty where the limitation is known to the other side or where Counsel acts on instructions as to a compromise under a misapprehension and not in exercise of that authority which is vested in him as an Advocate of the party to the litigation. It was urged before us by Mr.

NILMONI CHAUDHURI C. KEDAR NATH DAGA.

P. K. Sen that in this case Mr. Imam did not purport to exercise his discretionary authority at all; but that he purported to act on instructions and that as he was wholly unaware of the fact that his client had stated to his Vakil Abani Babu that it would be impossible for him to carry out the terms of the consent order; his consent was given under an entire misapprehension so that there was in reality no consent at all. Mr. Sen relied upon Swinfen v. Swinfen (1) in all its stages, on Lewis v. Lewis (2) and on Nundo Lal Bose v. Nisturini Dassi (3). So far as Swinfen v. Swinfen (1) is concerned, the subsequent case of Prestwich v. Polby (4) declined to refer to it as a decision which is to afford a guide in any case not similarly circumstanced. In Swinfen v. Swinfen (1) the circumstances were these: On the 15th March 1856, an issue directed by the Master of the Rolls, in a suit in Chancery of Swinfen v. Swinfen (1) to try the validity of the Will of one Samuel Swinfen, deceased, came on for trial before Oresswell, J., and a special Jury at the Assizes at Stafford. Negotiations for settlement took place between the leading Counsel for the respective parties at the close of the first day of the trial and ultimately certain terms were agreed upon and embodied in a memorandum which was signed by them in the presence of the Attorneys on both sides. The terms were that the estate was to be conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant free of incumbrance, if any, created since the death of Samuel Swinfen and that the defendant was to secure to the plaintiff an annuity for her life on the estate of £ 1,000 a year. This memorandum was embodied in an order of nisi prius, which was afterwards made a rule of Court. In order to give effect to the compromise the defendant's Solicitor addressed several letters to the plaintiff's Solicitor for certain documents and was ultimately informed by the plaintiff that she was not disposed to carry out the terms of compromise on the ground that the arrangement was made not only without her sanction but directly in opposition to her wishes. Thereupon the defendant obtained a rule calling upon Mrs. Swinfen, the plaintiff, to show cause why an attachment should not be issued against her for disobedience of the rule of Court. This was the first stage of the case and the decision of these proceedings is reported as Swinfen v. Swinfen (5). The application failed on a technical ground, namely, that it was not shown that there was personal service of the rule and a personal demand of performance before the rule was obtained; but Oresswell, J. in delivering the judgment came to the conclusion that the compromise was binding on Mrs. Swinfen. In the course of his judgment the learned Judge said as follows:—

"I think it would be most fatal to the due administration of justice, if we were to allow the authority of Counsel to be thus questioned. And there is not any hardship or inconvenience in this: for, if the client or the Attorney has any reason to think that the Counsel is taking a course that will prejudice his interests, he may withdraw his brief, and so put an end to his authority to represent the client before the Court." I may mention that in the case before us there was at no time any express dissent on the part of Provas Babu. All that he did was to make his protest not to Mr. Imam but to Abani Babu and then remained silent when it was pointed out to him by Abani Babu that it was possible for them to raise the money if they "tried honestly." He suffered the consent-decree to be passed without making any protest to Mr. Imam although he was sitting behind Mr. Imam and made an effort to comply with the terms of settlement. In my opinion the case of Swinfen v. Swinfen (5) as reported in 18 Common Bench is against the contention of Mr. Sen.

The next stage of Swinfen v. Swinfen (6) is reported in 1 Common Bench, 1 New Series, 334; 140 E. R. 150. The application was again made for attachment of the plaintiff for disobedience of the rule of Court after effecting personal service on her. One of the learned Judges, Crowder, J. was of opinion that attachment should not issue inasmuch as there was no real consent on behalf of the plaintiff. He found that the plaintiff, before the commencement of the litigation, had rejected an offer much more advantageous in its terms than those contained in the agreement in question and that she had refused again to entertain the proposition when recommended to her by her Counsel after the adjournment of the case on the first day. He thought that there was express dissent on her part and that there was no authority in her Counsel to settle the case on her behalf. This was the view of Crowder, J., but the other learned Judges who heard the case were of a different opinion. But, having regard to the well-known practice that it is impossible for a Court to treat a party as guilty of contempt for refusing to perform an agreement by which one member of the Court thinks the party is not bound, the Court, although the majority of the Judges was clearly of opinion that the plaintiff was bound by the agreement, discharged the rule. This case again does not support the contention of Mr. Sen.

The last stage of this case is reported in 24 Beav. 549; 53 E. R. 470 [Swinfen v. Swinfen (1)]. This was a decision in Chancery in a supplemental bill filed by Capt. Swinfen who was the defendant in the original action, praying that Mrs. Swinfen might be decreed specifically to perform the agreement for a compromise. The Court came to the conclusion that a client may become bound by a compromise entered into by his Attorney without his authority but not repudiating it within a reasonable time. The facts found by the Court were that the compromise was unauthorised by the plaintiff and was effected without the instructions of his Attorney and that, as there was no subsequent acquiescence, the bill by the defendant in the action for specific performance of the compromise could not be entertained. Now, in my opinion, a suit for specific performance of an agreement stands on a different footing from an application to set aside a consent order. A plaintiff is not entitled as of right to a decree for specific performance and various questions can properly be taken into consideration by a Court in deciding whether an agreement should be specifically performed which do not arise in an application for setting aside a decree. It is open to a Court in an action for specific performance to say that the bargain is a hard one and that there is real hardship in the matter and that the plaintiff should be left to his remedy at law. This was at the bottom of the judgment pronounced by the Master of the Rolls in the case; but though the decision cannot be claimed as an authority by a party seeking to set aside a consent-decree on the ground that the Counsel had no authority to enter into the compromise, the Court in Prestwich v. Poley (4) refused to recognize the decision of the Master of the Rolls as a guide in any case not similarly circumstanced—the case is against the contention of Mr. Sen in so far as it recognizes that unless the repudiation is prompt and within a reasonable time the compromise would bind the party. In the case before us the repudiation was not only not prompt but actually came only after the applicant discovered that owing to change of circumstances, which took place subsequent to the date of the consent order, it was impossible for him to comply with that order. I am unable, therefore, to look upon Swinfen v. Swinfen (1) as in any way assisting the argument of Mr. Sen.

The next case is that of Lewis v. Lewis (2). Kekewich, J., held that although a compromise entered into by Counsel under the authority implied by their employment is binding on the client, and cannot be upset by the Court, a compromise entered into in intended pursuance of terms consented to by the client but by misapprehension not strictly following them, is not binding on the client. It was argued by Mr. Sen that there was a clear misapprehension in the mind of Mr. Imam in so far as he thought that his client desired him to settle the case on the terms proposed by him. It is necessary to mention that the decision of Kekewich, J. was pronounced in a motion on behalf of the plaintiffs for leave to withdraw their consent to the order which purported to be a consent order on the ground that there was misapprehension in the mind of the Counsel. This motion was made before the order was actually drawn up and entered. Neale v. Gordon-Lennox (7) also supports the argument that there is very large discretion in the Court before the order is actually drawn up and entered. The action was for damages for slander and libel on the allegation that the defendant had made serious imputations against the plaintiff's character. Before the case came up for trial Sir Edward Clarke, the plaintiff's leading Counsel, proposed certain terms of settlement to his client. The terms were written out by Sir Edward Clarke himself and were handed over to the plaintiff and they were as follows: "Defendant stating by her Counsel that she never imputed or meant to impute anything against the moral character of the plaintiff and is satisfied that there is no ground for any such imputation.

"Case referred to.....to say what should be done between the parties in satisfaction of all matters in difference between them.

"Case referred to.....to say what sum, if any, should be paid by the defendant in compensation for the matters complained of in this action."

It will be noticed that alternative terms were suggested by Sir Edward Clarke to his client. If the first alternative was accepted by the defendant there was no question of any sum being paid by the defendant in compensation for the matters complained of in the action. But it required the defendant to state that she never imputed or meant to impute anything against the moral character of the plaintiff and was satisfied that there was no ground for any such imputation. The other alternative assumed the correctness of the allegations of the plaintiff and left the question of compensation to arbitration. At the bottom of these terms the plaintiff wrote the words:—

"I consent to either alternative Sir Edward Clarke adopts." There was clearly a limitation of Counsel's authority, but this limitation was not made known to the defendant's Counsel. The defendant, however, refused to disclaim all imputations and after an interview with the learned Judge an order was drawn up in the following terms:—"It is ordered that the whole of this cause be tried before H. F. Dickens, Esqr., K. C., as Official Referee, who shall have all the powers of certifying and amending of a Judge of the High Court of Justice, and shall direct judgment to be entered and otherwise deal with the whole action pursuant to Order XXXV." In other words, the whole action was referred to the arbitration of Mr. Dickens. Before the order was actually drawn up and entered, the plaintiff took steps to set it aside and the House of Lords came to the conclusion that the learned Judge in the Trial Court who did set it aside and restore the cause to the list for trial acted with great propriety. Mr. Sen strongly relied upon this case and argued that where there is in fact a limitation of authority the consent given by Counsel outside the limits of his authority would not bind his client irrespective of the question whether that limitation is communicated to the other side or not. On the other hand, Strauss v. Francis (8) establishes that a compromise which is within the Counsel's apparent authority, that is to say, a compromise within the scope of the suit, is binding on the client notwithstanding he may have dissented unless this dissent was brought to the knowledge of the opposite party at the time: Holt v. Jesse (9) lays down that though a consent given by Counsel in the presence and with the sanction of his client may be withdrawn before the order is drawn up, if given through inadvertence, it cannot be withdrawn where the matter was fully understood at the time and the client shortly afterwards changes his mind. In this case there is no doubt that the client did fully understand what the compromise was about and that he changed his mind not shortly afterwards, but only when he found that it was impossible for him to comply with the consent order. This case entirely supports the contention of Mr. Manuk.

There is, however, an apparent conflict between Strauss v. Francis (8) and Neale v. Gordon-Lennox (7). This conflict was explained in the case of Shepherd v. Robinson (10). The learned Judges in Shepherd v. Robinson (10) accepted the proposition as well settled that Counsel has an apparent authority to compromise in all matters connected with the action and not merely collateral to it; and that if he acts within his apparent authority and the other party has no notice of any limitation or restriction on that authority, the client will be bound by the agreement made by his Counsel and embodied in some order or judgment of the Court. In reference to Neale v. Gordon-Lennox (7), the learned Judges said that that case belonged to a different line of cases which decided that before a consent order has been drawn up and perfected, the consent given by Counsel or Solicitor may be withdrawn by the client if the Counsel or Solicitor give it under a misapprehension. This, in my opinion, is the real distinction between Neale v. Gordon-Lennox (7) and Strauss v. Francis (8). The Court undoubtedly has very large discretion in the matter before the order is actually drawn up and perfected but there is no such discretion where the order has in fact been drawn up and perfected. As was pointed out in Shepherd v. Robinson (10), the real question in each case is to see within which class the particular case falls.

There is no doubt whatever that the application in the present case was made long after the order was drawn up and perfected. There is also no doubt, in my mind, that the applicant not only did not repudiate the consent given on his behalf by Mr. Imam but acquiesced in it in so far as he tried to raise the money in order to enable him to comply with the order. I am of opinion, therefore, that the applicant is not entitled to an order setting aside the consent order of the 11th November 1921.

It was urged by Mr. Sen that it has been the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court to set aside consent orders in applications for review and it was urged that the case is a particularly hard one for his client and that this Court ought to set aside the consent order. It may be assumed that an application for review would lie to set aside a consent order; but the question still remains whether grounds have been made out by the applicant which would induce this Court to set aside the consent order. In my opinion there are no grounds for review. I quite agree that there are certain terms in the order which has been passed by the learned Subordinate Judge which are very hard on the applicant and although we can give no directions upon the learned Subordinate Judge in these proceedings, we would urge upon him the necessity of altering those terms to some extent. We are informed, for instance, that the Receiver has been directed to file his accounts monthly. I have no doubt whatever that this would have the effect of hampering him in his business. In my experience half yearly accounts are usually required from the Receiver and I think that if an application be made by the petitioner to the learned Subordinate Judge, the learned Subordinate Judge ought to consider whether it is not a sufficient protection for all the parties concerned if the Receiver is directed to bring his accounts into Court half yearly. But although the Court may properly require the Receiver to file his accounts half yearly he ought to be required to send abstracts of the receipts and disbursements of the property in his hands every three months to the plaintiff. He ought further to be required to supply to the plaintiff once every three months a copy of the completed contracts which have been entered into by him. Any order which may have the effect of compelling him to disclose the agreement into which he may enter before those agreements have matured into complete contracts might seriously embarrass him in his business. These are the matters which I think the learned Subordinate Judge ought to seriously consider if a proper application is presented to him by the plaintiff. But the fact that the order which has been passed by the learned Subordinate Judge is undoubtedly hard on the Receiver is no ground for reviewing the consent order of the 11th November 1921.

This application must fail and we refuse it with costs. Hearing fee fifteen gold mohurs.

BUCKNILL, J.—This was an application made by one Nilmoni Chowdhuri who is the defendant in an action brought against him by one Kedarnath Daga in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad in the District of Manbhum in connection with a claim for a very large sum of money which the plaintiff alleged had been advanced to the defendant relative to an agreement for sale of a colliery.

NILMONI CHAUDHURI v. KEDAR NATH DASA.

There is no doubt that there was a serious dispute between the parties; the defendant, however, maintained that the real issue between them was merely a matter of account. The plaintiff, on the ground that the defendant was trying to dispose of the property in question and on other grounds, applied to attach the defendant's colliery before judgment and for the appointment of a Receiver, pending the hearing of the suit; and, as a result of this application, the Subordinate Judge called upon the defendant to show cause why the property should not be attached and why a Receiver should not be appointed pendente lite; and he granted an ad interim attachment pending the hearing of the application. When the matter on the 1st of September 1921 came up before him, the Subordinate Judge made an order appointing the defendant as Receiver. From this order the defendant appealed to this Court and a Rule was issued upon the plaintiff to show cause why an ad interim stay of the execution of the order appointing the Receiver should not be allowed.

Now, it is very important to note what took place, the matter was finally brought up before this Bench, for, it is from that that the present application now arises; it is accordingly necessary to review shortly what actually occurred. During the course of the hearing it was agreed by Counsel purporting to act on behalf of the defendant and by Counsel for the plaintiff that the defendant would deposit in Court on or before the 16th January 1922 the amount claimed by the plaintiff in order to satisfy any decree which might be passed against him in the suit and that, in the event of his failure to do so, the Rule nisi would be discharged and the appeal dismissed with costs; and on this basis this Bench on the 11th November 1921 passed an order accordingly. The matter, however, did not rest there, for on the 9th January 1922 the defendant filed the present petition in which he asks that the order passed by this Court on the 11th of November 1921 should be reviewed (that is to say, set aside) on the ground that the individual who purported to represent him and who purported to agree to the terms of the order was in no way authorised so to do. The individual referred to was one Ramratan

Das. It is noticeable, however, that the defendant in his petition, whilst pointing out that Ramratan Das had no authority to assent to the terms of the agreement also indicates that, owing to various circumstances such as strikes, demand for higher wages, and the insufficient supply of Railway waggons which had occurred subsequent to this Court's order, he had found it almost impossible to collect and deposit the agreed sum in Court. The authority of Counsel for the defendant to enter into any such arrangement as had been embodied in the order of this Bench was under these conditions seriously challenged on behalf of the defendant; and, the facts, therefore, demanded a close investigation. A considerable volume of evidence upon affidavit was adduced by both parties, whilst, in addition, this Bench thought fit to have before it for examination the individual named Ramratan Das to whom reference has already been made, another gentleman named Provas Chandra Ray who is an employee in the defendant's firm and who was present at the Court at a very material date when the question of the terms of the order of the 11th November 1921 were under discussion; in addition to this, the defendant himself was also examined. I do not think that it is necessary for me to analyse closely the evidence which had been given. I have read and carefully considered it all and I have come, without difficulty, to the conclusion that the attitude which is now taken up by the defendant is without justification. It is, I think, sufficient to say that Ramratan Das who was the defendant's broker came to Patna on November the 5th last in connection with the proceedings taken by the defendant in this Court against the order of the Subordinate Judge; he was accompanied by a clerk in the defendant's firm, Ramratan Das had a consultation with his Counsel and says that he (Ramratan Das) suggested that if an adjournment could be obtained the money could be collected by the defendant and deposited in Court. As a result of this the matter was adjourned till the 11th idem and Ramratan Das returned to Calcutta; he states that he did not inform his principal of what had taken place at Patna; I regret to have to say that I cannot believe this statement. On the 11th November Ram Ratan Das did not return to Patna; but, on that date, the defendant was here represented by Provas Chandra Ray, who, to use his own expression, "looks after the defendant's cases." He also had a consultation with his legal advisers; and, although he says now that he did not agree to the arrangement made by his Counsel and which formed the basis of the order of November 11th, there is no doubt whatever in my mind that he did in fact, even though it may be somewhat reluctantly, acquiesce. The matter having been dealt with in the manner in which I have before indicated, this gentleman returned to Calcutta. There is no doubt that he told his master what had been done but no protest so far as I can see was ever raised until the present application was filed. In my own view there is no doubt that what really took place was that there was in the mind of the defendant no thought of repudiating what had been agreed until it may have been found that the collection of the sum to be deposited presented perhaps more difficulty than had been anticipated or demanded somewhat greater sacrifices than had been expected.

For these reasons I think that this application should be rejected with costs. The order of the 11th November 1921 of this Court will, therefore, stand, but, as the money has not been paid in, the result is that the Rule issued by this Court stands discharged whilst the appeal stands dismissed. But although that is so, the order of the Subordinate Judge appointing the Receiver should, in my opinion, be modified in certain respects as have been detailed by my learned brother.

Under section 92 of the Probate and Administration Act, two out of three executors are competent to act alone unless the Will contains "a direction to the contrary." [p. 10⁴, col. 1.]

The word "several" in section 92 of the Act does not mean "possessing powers to act severally." This meaning is inconsistent with the use of the word in ordinary parlance. [p. 10⁷, col. 1.]

An executor is competent to renew a barred debt. Probate and Administration Act should not be read as superseding the previous law, merely because it is silent on this point. [p. 10⁵, col. 1.]

Petition, under rule VIII of the Agency Rules, Godavari, praying that in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to direct the Government Agent, Godavari at Ocanada, to review his decision, dated the 18th August 1920, in Appeal Suits Nos. 9 and 12 of 1920, on his file preferred against a decree of the Assistant Agent, Polavaram Division, in Original Suit No. 71 of 1919.

Messrs. D. Appa Row and G. Lakshmanan, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The question raised by this appeal is whether the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to recover on a pro-note, which is the third renewal of the pro-note originally executed by a deceased testator, those renewals having been given by two out of three executors appointed by his Will,

NILAMBAR GHOSH v. MIR MOHASANUDDIN.

The first objection taken to the plaintiff's case is that two out of the three executors were not competent to act alone. That is negatived by section 92, Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881, unless the defendants-respondents can show that the Will contains in the words of the section, "a direction to the contrary." We have read the Will, but cannot find any such direction in it, either express or implied.

It is then said that section 92 deals only with several executors and that the word 'several' there means "possessing powers to act severally." We have been shown no authority whatever for this contention, which is inconsistent with the ordinary use of the word 'several' in ordinary parlance.

The third question raised by the appeal is more important. It is whether an executor is competent to renew a barred debt. We have not been shown any ground, on which cases of renewal of a barred debt can be distinguished from cases of payment. Authority on the latter class of cases are available: Tillakchand Hindumal v. Jitmal Budaram (1), Administrator-General v. Hawkins (2) and Samuel Pillai v. Ananthanatha Pillai (3), the two last mentioned dealing with the competence, not of an executor, but of an administrator, although that is not relied on as affording ground for any distinction. On the other side Gopal Narain Mozoomdar v. Muddomutty (4) has been cited; but we are unable to follow that decision in preference to those already mentioned, two of which were given in this Court. It is true that all these decisions were given before the enactment of the Probate and Administration Act. But we find that in Jethibai v. Putlibai (5), Beaman, J. stated obiter that an executor could renew a barred debt; and there is no reason for holding that the Probate and Administration Act should be read as superseding the previous law in virtue of its silence on a point of this importance. We have also considered whether the authorities above mentioned, which are based on Norton v. Frecker (6) and other English cases are open to question, because of the difference between the English and Indian Law of Limitation and the obligation of the Court under the latter to take objection founded on it. In Administrator-General v. Hawkins (2), however, this point was expressly considered and was overruled. We have been referred to no later authority than those specified, but in the circumstances we see no reason for refusing to follow them. We, therefore, hold that the two executors were entitled to give the suit pro-note in renewal of the previous note or notes which had become barred.

That is sufficient for the disposal of this petition and we need not deal with the further question raised by the plaintiff, whether another note not yet referred to by us and given by the testator's widow was binding on the estate and could afford a valid starting point for limitation.

In these circumstances, the petition must be allowed and the Agent must be directed to review his judgment and decree in the light of the foregoing. Costs throughout of the plaintiff and the first defendant, i.e., petitioner and first defendant, will follow the result and will be paid from the estate. It follows that the third respondent's memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 6th December 1918, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 26th July 1918.

Dr. Nani Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. D. Khan and Lala Jogin Nath, for Bosa Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case, Tikkam Ram, sued for possession of an area of land mortgaged by his predecessor-in-title without payment of any sum and he alleged that one Bosa then in possession was a trespasser. The decree prayed for was given by the First Court, but on appeal it was held that this man Bosa had acquired a share in the mortgage and that the plaintiff was only entitled to obtain possession after payment of Rs. 967 to him. He was, therefore, given a decree conditional on payment of this sum. From this order he presents this second appeal.

The date of the decree of the District Judge is the 6th December 1918. The appeal was presented on the 3rd March 1919, a Court fee of Rs. 36-0 being placed upon it. On the 5th March 1919, the office pointed out the mistake and called for the balance of the Court fee of Rs. 69-6-0. On the 14th March 1919, Counsel replied that the appeal was correctly stamped. On the 19th March 1919, the office pointed out once more that further Court-fee was required. On the 22nd April 1919, Counsel again replied that the Court-fee paid was correct and the office once more returned the appeal. On the 1st May 1919 the deficiency was made up. Counsel for the respondents takes a preliminary objection that under section 141, Civil Procedure Code, time cannot be extended as there was no bona fide mistake and the appeal cannot be heard. Counsel for the appellant contends that the appeal as originally presented was correctly stamped and the points to be decided are whether this is so or not, and, if not, whether time can be extended.

TIRKAN RAM v. BOSA RAM.

The contention is that, although it would be necessary to pay stamp on the amount directed to be paid by the lower Appellate Court as a condition precedent to possession being given if the suit had been in the form of a redemption suit, inasmuch as the plaintiff asserted that the defendant Bosa was a trespasser and not a mortgagee, the stamp should be calculated at 30 times the jama and not on the sum ordered to be paid. We are of opinion, however, that it is quite immaterial in what form the suit was originally brought, provided the decree against which the appeal is presented attaches a definite condition as to the payment of a specified sum. Where a decree is in such a form, the relief sought being the removal of this condition precedent, Court-fee must be paid on the amount so fixed. The position has been clearly explained in Wadhwa Singh v. Sundar Singh (1), in which the facts were precisely similar to those now before us. "The plaintiffs had sued for possession of certain land without payment of anything to the defendants, (as the plaintiff has done here). The decree of the lower Appellate Court was one for possession on payment of Rs. 160, mortgage-money, in other words, it was a decree for redemption. In appeal to this Court the plaintiffs asked that they should be given a decree for possession without payment of anything. The proper Court-fee stamp upon the memorandum of appeal was an ad valorem one upon the amount of the mortgage-money."

As to whether under these circumstances there can be said to have been any bona fide mistake the authorities are unanimous, and we find that in Amtul Qadir v. Mu'ammad Yusuf (2), Ram Sahay Ram Pandey v. Lakshmi Narain Singh (3), Saidunnessa v. Tejendra Chandra Dhar (4), and finally in Lekh Ram v. Rampi Das (5), a Division Bench judgment of this Court, the matter has been settled beyond all doubt, and we extract the following quotation:—"In reply to these arguments Mr. Gokal Chand states that when filing the appeal he consulted the law upon the subject and found the unreported Bombay case and the Allahabad case and considered them authorities of some value in spite of the existence of Panjab and other judgments. We cannot believe that a Counsel of the experience and qualifications of Mr. Gokal Chand would have had the remotest doubt as to the law governing his case. Objections were taken by the office when the appeal was put in and he must have studied the law with great care especially when he discovered the somewhat obscure Bombay judgment. At the time when he put in his appeal, as far as this Court is concerned, not only was the law laid down in Banwari Das v. Nethu Shah (6), but this judgment had been approved in Okuni Lal v. Beli Ram (7), and another judgment of this Court Mansa Ram v. Umra (8) was undoubtedly known to Counsel. The plain facts of the matter are that the appellant, who appears to be somewhat impoverished, to suit his own convenience deferred the payment of Court-fee in spite of the knowledge conveyed to him by his Counsel of the correct fee payable. So far, therefore, from a bona fide mistake having been made the omission in this case was deliberate. We, therefore, agree with the contentions and authorities cited by Counsel for the respondent that this is not a case in which an extension of time should be granted."

Mutatis mutandis these remarks apply to this case also. Not only did Counsel deliberately undervalue his relief and put on a wholly inadequate Court-fee, but after the mistake had been pointed out, and while he still had time to correct the same, he deliberately refused to do so. We find, therefore, that the appeal is not properly stamped and that no extension can be allowed under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

JOHAR MULL BRUTRA V. BHUPENDRA NATH BASU,

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2682
OF 1917.

JUNE 28, 1921.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Mr. Justice Backland.

JOHAR MULL BHUTRA AND OTHERS—

versus

BHUPENDRA NATH BASU AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Specific performance, suit for, against vendor of real estate—Lis pendens—Landlord and tenant—Zemindar, power of, to interpose intermediate holder between himself and his tenant—Power of intermediate holder to realise rent from the tenant.

A suit for specific performance of a contract for transfer of the immoveable property operates as lis pendens, in other words, in a suit against the vendor of real estate for specific performance, his conveyance of the legal title after suit was brought would not suspend the proceeding or defeat the title under the decree of the Court. Consequently, when such a suit for specific performance is ended by a final decree transferring the title, that title relates back to the date of the agreement on which the suit is based and the Court will not permit its decree to be rendered nugatory by intermediate conveyances. [p. 110, col. 1.]

A Zemindar or tenure-holder who has carved out a tenure or under-tenure, as the case may be, is competent to interpose between himself and his tenant, an intermediate holder who may realise the rent payable to himself by his original tenant. [p. 110, col. 2.]

A landlord who has created a tenancy is still competent to carve out another tenancy from the interest he has reserved and interpose the same between himself and his first tenant, subject to the qualification that he cannot thereby prejudice the position of the first tenant, take away or destroy the value or effect of the prior interest transferred, or, limit its extent or restrain its operation. [p. 112, col. 1.]

The defendants had been tenants under S. for a long series of years in respect of a maurasi mokarari holding. While thus in occupation as tenant, S. granted to the plaintiff a maurasi mokarari lease of a large tract of land inclusive of the defendant's holding:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendants the rent of the holding which would have been otherwise payable by them to S. [p. 110, col. 2.]

(Case-Law considered.)

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Hooghly, dated the 30th May 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court, Howrah, dated the 9th July 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bipin Behari Ghose (with him Babus Bhupendra Kumar Ghose, Promatha Nath Bannerjee and Rama Prasad Mookerjee), for the Appellants, after stating the facts of the case submitted,—as regards the second half of the property, that the kobala in favour of the defendants by the Santras during the pendency of the suit for specific performance against the latter, could not override the decree in that suit and the plaintiffs' title related back to the date of the agreement: refers to Pramatha Nath Roy v. Jagannath Kishore Lal Singh (1). The lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the plaintiffs' predecessor could not create an intermediate interest between themselves and the defendants. They were entitled to carve out any portion of their right to receive rent from the defendants. There is no direct authority on the point, but reference may be made to Raj Kumar Majumdar v. Probal Chandra Ganguli (2), Madhu Sudan v. Debendra Nath (3). See also Ram Anant Singh v. Shankar Singh (4).

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarti (with him Babu Kanai Dhon Dutt), for the Respondents.—The two rights are identical. The defendants are maurasi mokarari tenants and the plaintiffs' lease is also a maurasi mokarari one. These are co-ordinate rights and the plaintiff cannot claim rent from the defendants.

Yes, I am. But I should pay rent to a person having the right to receive rent from me i.e., having a superior right: refers to Kalam Sheikh v. Panchu Mandal (5); also Jarrow Kumari Saheba v. Hanif-uddin Akanva (6).

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Cannot the landlord carve out a portion of his right?]

Yes, he can. But it has to be seen what sort of right is created—is it carving out a portion of his right, or is it creating a co-ordinate right? If it be the latter, the document would be infructuous.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKMEJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent of a tract of homestead land. The rent is claimed at the rate of Rs. 7-6 annas $12\frac{1}{2}$ gandas per annum for the years 1318 to 1320 B. S., and for the first nine months of the year 1321. It is not disputed that Sri Narain Santra, Jagan Nath Santra, Raj Narain Santra and Deb Narain Santra were owners of the disputed land in equal shares. There is also no controversy that the contesting defendants held the land as tenants under the Santras at the rate of rent mentioned in the plaint. The plaintiffs claim to have derived title from the Santras, as to one half of the property, under a conveyance dated the 3rd August 1911, and as to the other half, under a permanent lease dated the 15th February 1907. The defendants resisted the claim on a three-fold ground, namely, first, that the alleged title of the plaintiffs as purchasers was inoperative, because the interest of their vendors had passed away to strangers before the date of their conveyance; secondly, that the alleged title of the plaintiffs as tenure-holders was inoperative, because the defendants had obtained a conveyance of the identical share from the Santras before the lease to the plaintiffs and, thirdly, that if the title of the plaintiffs was found to have been subsisting at the date of the suit and the title of the defendants was negatived, the plaintiffs were still not entitled to realise rent from the defendants, as both of them held as tenants of co-ordinate rank under the Santras. The Trial Court found partially in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the suit to that extent. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge has reversed this decision. On the present appeal, the following points have emerged for consideration from the arguments addressed to us; first, did the plaintiffs acquire the title of the Santras as to one-half of the land, under their conveyance dated the 3rd August 1911, secondly, did the plaintiffs acquire, under their permanent lease from the Santras dated the 15th February 1907 such an interest in the other half of the land as must have priority over the interest acquired by the defendants under their conveyance from the Santras dated the 25th April 1910; thirdly, does the relationship of landlord and tenant exist between the parties, in view of the nature of the lease-hold interest created by the Santras in favour of the plaintiffs under the lease dated the 15th February 1907, and the character of the tenancy of the defendants which is alleged to have been held under the Santras at a uniform rate of rent since at least 1854.

As regards the first question, there is no room for controversy that the plaintiffs did not acquire the title of the Santras in one-half of the land under their purchase dated the 3rd August 1911. It appears that the interest of their vendors had been sold away in execution proceedings on the 17th June 1898 and the 17th March 1899. At the time of the sale by the Santras to the plaintiffs on the 3rd August 1911, they had no title to convey. Consequently, on the most favourable view of the case, the claim of the plaintiffs for recovery of arrears of rent cannot possibly be sustained in excess of a half share.

As regards the second question, it is plain that the defendants did not, under their conveyance from the Santras, dated the 2nd February 1910, acquire a title which could prevail over that of the plaintiffs. It appears that on the 15th February 1907 two of the Santras granted a mourari mokarari lease to the plaintiffs in respect of all their properties in the village of Santragachi, for a premium of Rs. 17,800 at an annual rent of Rs. 1,200. Eighty-five parcels were specified in the Schedule and it was expressly stated that if there after any other parcel of land was discovered to have been omitted by mistake a supplementary deed would be executed in respect thereof. The contingency contemplated happened. It was discovered that the tenancy now in dispute had been left out by mistake from the list of mourari mokarari tenancies in the Schedule to the lease. The Santras, however, failed to execute the requisite supplementary deed in the terms of their agreement. The result was that on the 8th July 1909, the plaintiff sued the Santras to enforce specific performance of the agreement. That suit was decreed on the 25th April 1910. It was during the pendency of this litigation that the Santras sold away their interest on the 2nd February 1910 to the present defendants. It is manifest that the defendants were purchasers pendente lite and the interest they purchased was bound by the decree in the suit for specific performance. It was ruled by this Court in the case of Moti Lal Pal v. Prem Nath Mittal (7) that a suit for specific performance of a contract for transfer of immoveable property operates as lis pendens, in other words, in a suit against the vendor of real estate for specific performance, his conveyance of the legal title after suit was brought would not suspend the proceeding or defeat the title under the decree of the Court. The obvious reason for this is that if when the jurisdiction of the Court has once attached, it could be ousted by the transfer of the defendant's interest, there would be no end to litigation and justice would be defeated. Consequently, when such a suit for specific performance is ended by a final decree transferring the title, that title relates back to the date of the agreement on which the suit is based, and the Court will not permit its decree to be rendered nugatory by intermediate conveyances. The same view was adopted in the case of Pramatha Nath Roy v. Jagannath Kishore Lal Singh (1). There is consequently no escape from the position that the title of the plaintiffs which was established by the decree made in their favour in the suit for specific performance relates back to the 15th February 1907, the date of the mourasi mokarari lease granted to them by the Santras. The inference follows that the conveyance taken by the defendants from the Santras on the 2nd February 1910, does not afford them effective protection against the claim of the plaintiffs based on their leasehold title dated the 15th February 1907.

JOHAR MULL BRUTRA C. BHUPENDRA NATH BASU.

As regards the third question, it is clear that the position which results from our determination of the previous points lies in a nutshell. The defendants have been tenants under the Santras for a long series of years; they assert, indeed, that the holding is mourasi mokarari, that is, held from generation to generation at a fixed rent. While the defendants were thus in occupation as tenants, their landlords, the Santras, granted to the plaintiffs on the 15th February 1907, a mourasi mokarari lease of a large tract of land inclusive of the disputed area. The plaintiffs claim to recover from the defendants the rent which would have been otherwise payable to the Santras. The defendants answer that the tenancy of the plaintiffs is co ordinate in rank with their own tenancy, and the plaintiffs cannot consequently be deemed to be their landlords. Here we may state parenthetically that the plaintiffs do not admit that the tenancy of the defendants is mourasi mokarari; but we shall assume for our present purpose that the defendants have in fact the status alleged by them. We are of opinion that even on this assumption, the defendants have no answer to the claim of the plaintiffs, because a Zamindar or tenure-holder who has carved out a tenure or under-tenure, as the case may be, is competent to interpose, between himself and his tenant, an intermediate holder who may realise the rent payable to himself by his original tenant. This proposition is recognised in a series of cases in this Court. In Raj Kumar Majumdar v. Probal Chandra Ganguli (2) it was ruled that a Zamindar, who had created a patni had power to grant away a portion of his remaining rights and to create a tenure intermediate between himself and the patnidar with the result that the intermediate holder would become entitled to demand the rent which the patnidar would have been otherwise bound to pay to the superior landlord. The Court pointed out, however, that the interposition of such an intermediate interest could not operate in derogation of the rights of the original patnidar or degrade him to the rank of a dar-patnidar. The essence of the matter was that while the relationship of landlord and tenant originally existed between the Zamindar and the patnidar, after the interposition of the intermediate tenure, the new tenure-holder became tenant under the Zamindar at the same time that he himself became the landlord of the patnidar. This decision is not opposed to the case of Kalam Sheikh v. Panchu Mandal (5). There the defendant was under-tenant in respect of lands which his lessor held under a mudarat from the Zamindar. Subsequently, the lessor left and the Zamindar gave to the defendant a patta for part of the lands covered by the mudofat, and, later on, to the plaintiff a patta for the whole land covered by the original mudofat. The plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendant for a kabuliyat at an enhanced rate. The defendant answered that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between himself and the plaintiff. Mr. Justice Dawarka Nath Mitter upheld this contention not on the ground that the Zemindar could not interpose the plaintiff as lessee between himself and the defendant, but on the ground that upon a true construction of the lease granted to the plaintiff, it could not be maintained that the Zemindar had assigned to him any of his rights to recover or enhance the rent reserved in the patta he had granted to the defendant. We are not unmindful that an apparently contrary view was indicated in the case of Jarraw Kumari Saheba v. Hanifuddin Akanda (6) where the earlier decision in Raj Kumar Majumdar v. Probal Chandra Ganguli (2) was not brought to the notice of the Court. But the dictum in that case does not controvert the proposition that when a Zemindar or tenure holder has created a tenure or under tenure, he is still competent to interpose between himself and his grantee an intermediate tenure or under-tenure. The dictum rather casts doubt upon the applicability of this general rule to the case of patni taluks whose incidents are governed by the special rules formulated in Regulation VIII of 1819; it is also plain that the doubt was expressed, because no authority had been cited to support the view that a Zemindar could lawfully create a permanent tenure between his own interest and a patni taluk of the first degree. In the case before us, the status of the defendant is not that of a patnidar, and consequently we are not pressed by the considerations which carried weight with the Court in the case of Jarraw Kumari Saheba v. Hanifuddin Akanda (6). Apart from this, we find that the decision in Raj Kumar Majumdar v. Probal Chandra Ganguli (2) was accepted as good law by Mr. Justice Sarada Charan Mitra in Madu Sudan v. Debedra Nath (3) and Ram Kanai v. Fakir Chund (8) and in the case of Nilamber Ghosh v.

Mir Mohasanuddin (9) when Carnduff and Richardson, JJ., were pressed by the apparent conflict between the decision in Raj Kumar Majumdar v. Probal Chandra Ganguli (2) and Jarraw Kumari Saheba v. Hanifuddin Akanda (6) they followed the earlier decision as binding on them. The view we take is also supported by the decision in Ram Arant Singh v. Shankar Singh (4). In that case, Sir John Stanley, Chief Justice, held that where a lessor executes two concurrent leases of the same property, that is to say, two leases in which the term of the second commences before the term of the first has expired, the second lessee is to be taken as the assignee of the lessor's interest during the concurrent portion of the terms, and the lessor, after the execution of the second lease, can recover rent only from the second and not from the first lessee. The Chief Justice referred to the decision of Baron Parke in Harmer v. Bean (10) which shows that the operation of a concurrent lease of the kind is to transfer part of the reversion of the landlord to the lessee, so that after the execution of such concurrent lease, the landlord cannot recover as against the first lessee any rent due thereafter. To the same effect is the decision in Burroues v. Gradin (11) where Wightman, J., ruled that a mortgagee may maintain an action for use and occupation against a party who was tenant to the mortgagor before the mortgage, although subsequently to the mortgage, the mortgagor had made an alteration in the promises mortgaged and in the amount of rent. The same principle was recognised by Lord Alverstone, C. J., in Wordsley Brewery Co. v. Halford (12) when he ruled that a landlord who, during the currency of a yearly tenancy, grants a lease of the premises to a third person cannot, during the term granted by such lease, give the yearly tenant notice to quit; in support of this principle, reliance was placed upon Doe d. Agar v. Brown (13) in which Lord Campbell, C. J., had held that where a party entitled to a remainder in tail expectant upon the determination of a life estate, grants a term of years to commence immediately, the grantee, without entry, takes an immediate vested estate carved out of the remainder, so that the conveyance is as effectual as if attornment had been made by the tenant of the particular estate. This was overlooked by Pagewood, V. C., in Edwards v. Wickwar (14) but was re-affirmed by Ridley and Lush, JJ. in Horn v. Beard (15). Indeed it is now settled law that if, after a lease has been granted, another lease of the same premises is granted, the term being concurrent with that of the existing lease, the concurrent lease, provided it is made by deed, operates as a grant of the reversion upon the existing term. If the concurrent term is equal to or exceeds the residue of the existing term, the concurrent lessee is entitled to the rent for the whole of such residue and afterwards to possession for the remainder, if any, of his own term; if the concurrent term is less than the existing term, the concurrent lessee is entitled to the rent during his own term; Neale v. Mackenzie (16). The principles thus expounded and applied justify the inference that a landlord who has created a tenancy is still competent to carve out another tenancy from the interest he has reserved and interpose the same between himself and his first tenant, subject to the qualification that he cannot thereby prejudice the position of the first tenant, take away or destroy the value or effect of the prior interest transferred, or limit its extent or restrain its operation, for the maxim applies that no man can derogate from his own grant, which has sometimes been regarded as in essence of a formulation of a principle of estoppel. This may be illustrated by a concrete example. A, a Zamindar, settles a tract of vacant land with B, an agriculturist, with a view to enable him to bring it under cultivation. A cannot thereafter settle the same parcel with C, so as to entitle C to enter into actual occupation and cultivate the land. But there is no reason why A should not grant a settlement to C, and thereby enable C to realise from B the rent which would otherwise be payable by B to A. Tested from this point of view, how do the parties to this litigation stand? The defendants were originally tenants directly under the Santras; assume for the purpose of argument, and for that purpose alone, that their tenancy was held at a fixed rate of rent from generation to generation. On the 15th February 1907, the Santras granted to the plaintiffs a permanent lease of all their lands in the village, including the lands covered by the tenancy of the defendants; this authorised the plaintiffs to realise rent from all tenants who might be in occupation including mourasi mokarari tenants. It is difficult to appreciate on what principle the view can possibly be maintained that the plaintiffs are not competent to realise, as they seek to do by this suit, the rent which would have been otherwise payable to the Santras. It is plainly immaterial that the defendants assert that they themselves, as also the plaintiffs, have mourasi mokarari rights. When the Santras granted a lease to the plaintiffs, they did not derogate from their previous grant, and the plaintiffs do not allege that the lease in their own favour has in any manner operated to the detriment of such rights as might have been actually possessed at the time by the defendants. It is consequently needless to investigate whether the defendants hold a mourasi mokarari tenancy, for even on the assumption that their allegation is well founded, it does not afford an answer to the claim of the plaintiffs.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside, and that of the Court of first instance restored. The appellants are entitled to all costs in this Court as also in the Court of the Subordinate Judge inclusive of the costs of the review proceedings.

Sale—Mortgage—Transaction, whether sale or mortgage—Intention of parties—Surrounding circumstances.

The question whether a transaction is a sale or a mortgage must be determined with reference to the intention of the parties as gathered from the document and the surrounding circumstances. [p 114, col. 2.]

In 1899, D. executed a deed in respect of certain property in favour of P.: immediate possession was delivered to P.: and the documents of title were also delivered to him: there was a stipulation in the deed that if D. paid the principal amount of the purchase-money within three years from the date of execution of the deed, the property would be given up by P.: there was no mention in the deed of interest to be paid on the principal sum at the time of the re-purchase, but it was provided that in the event of D. not paying the purchase-money within three years, the sale would become absolute. No money was paid within the term limited. In 1916 D. brought a redemption suit and the question was, whether the transaction was a deed of sale with a condition of re-purchase, or a deed of mortgage by conditional sale:

Held, that the transaction was a sale out and out and not a mortgage; it was not a mortgage because there was no relation of debtor and creditor between the parties. [p. 115, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 22nd of April 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Second Court at Satkhia, dated the 10th of December 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray (with him Babu Pares Chandra Sen), for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. The defendant No. 9 executed a deed of sale in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and father of defendant No. 7 on 5th May 1899. The plaintiff's case is that he has purchased the property on 24th February 1916, from defendant No. 9 for Rs. 800. The lower Appellate Court found that the mortgagor was entitled to 8 annas of the property and, therefore, the plaintiff also was entitled to it. The deed is described as one of an out and out sale with a clause that if the vendor paid the purchase money within three years from the date of the document, the vendee would return the property. The present suit was brought in 1916. My submission is that the deed is not one of mortgage but an out and out sale. Refers to Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1), Kinuram Mondol v. Nitye Chand Sirdar (2), Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe Lu (3), Jhanda Singh v. Wahid-ud-din (4).

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Respondent.—The cases cited by the other side do not apply. The intention of the parties is clear and the facts and circumstances taken together show that the parties treated it as a deed of mortgage. Refers to Abdul Gaffar [Shozadi Bibi] v. Sheikh Jamal (5). The intention of the parties ought to be gathered from the facts. The learned Judge has also considered the conduct of the vendee. Refers to Mahomed Mozaffer Ali v. Asraf Ali (6), Palaniappan v. Subbaraya Gounder (7), Kalpu Rai v. Beni Matho Sahu (8). The property was mortgaged for Rs. 800; I purchased it for Rs. 2,400. So that there has not ever been an adequate consideration for the deed. Refers to Wahid Ali Khan v. Shafiat Husain (9).

CHANDI CHARAN C. NABIN CHANDRA.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal arises out of a suit for redemption.

The defendant No. 9 executed a deed of sale in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the father of defendant No. 7 on the 5th May 1899. There was a stipulation in the kabala that if the vendor paid the purchase-money within three years from the date of the execution of the document, the property would be given up by the vendee. The question which is involved in the appeal is whether the transaction was a deed of sale with a condition for re-purchase or a deed of mortgage by conditional sale.

The Court below held that it was the latter and accordingly gave a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

It is stated in the deed that the vendor was selling absolutely the lands after receiving Rs. 800, the real price. It then states:—"Becoming entitled to my rights in the above-mentioned lands sold to you and having possessed them through tenants or in khas possession as in my case and realising rents from tenants according to the touci signed by me, by paying Government revenue and by mutation of your names, you and your sons and grandsons, enjoy, possess and deal with them in any way you like and shall be in proprietary right by realisation of arrears of rent due to me according to the touci. At no time whatever shall I or my Sakulya heirs have or lay any claim to the lands sold..... Be it also known that if your principal amount be paid up within three years, you will release the deed of sale and the lands described. If money cannot be paid within the time as limited above, then this deed of sale having been regarded as a deed of absolute sale your kharida maliki (proprietary) rights will accrue up on the lands above mentioned."

No money was paid within the term limited, viz. 3 years.

In coming to the conclusion that the transaction was a mortgage the Court below has relied mainly upon two points; the first is that the words used in connection with the payment of the amount within three years are the "principal amount," and secondly, that if the money be not paid within the time limited, the kabala will be regarded as a deed of absolute sale. These were held to be indications of the transaction being a mortgage.

We do not think, however, that they are sufficient, by themselves, for holding that it was a mortgage.

The word "principal" was also used in the document before their Lordships in the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1). Then as to the deed of sale being regarded as a deed of absolute sale in the event of the money for re-purchase not being paid and the kharida maliki rights being absolute, we think all that it means is that, after the expiry of the period limited, namely, three years, no claim could be advanced for re-purchasing the property and the words used in the document were, we think, having regard to the other terms of the document, so used in order to indicate that there was a chance of the property being liable to be reconveyed if the money was paid within three years. It does not show, however, that there was a relation of debtor and creditor between the parties and there is no doubt that there could not be a mortgage unless there was a debt.

In the present case, immediate possession was delivered to the vendee, and the documents of title were also delivered to him. The price paid was stated in the deed to be the real price and there was no mention of interest to be paid on the principal sum at the time of re-purchase. The vendee purchased the stamp for the conveyance and after the conveyance had been executed, the vendor got himself registered in the Collectorate. These are strong indications to show that the transaction was not a mortgage.

We have been referred to a large number of cases by both sides but the question whether the transaction is a sale or a mortgage must be determined with reference to the intention of the parties as gathered from the document and surrounding circumstances. Necessarily, therefore, each case must turn upon the terms of the documents and particular circumstances. As already pointed out, in the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1) there was also a clause for payment within 10 years of the principal, the difference being that in the present case the payment was to be made within three years; in the other it was within ten years.

There is no doubt that the vendee in the case before their Lordships agreed to recon-

vey the property out of kindness by a subsequent agreement and that fact is mentioned in the judgment but that is not the only ground of decision of their Lordships

The principle laid down in the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1) has been followed in a number of cases and we do not think that the case of Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (10) lays down anything to the contrary. The ground of decision in Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (10) appears to have been that the real effect of the deeds was to consolidate the debt due on the factory account with the principal sum mentioned in the first deed, and thus to give the bankers a security on the taluk for the debt due on the factory accounts. This, as Lord Davey, in delivering the judgment of the Board, said "gives the transaction the character of a mortgage so far as the factory accounts are concerned, and if it is to some extent a mortgage, it may well be held to be so entirely."

In the case of Jhanda Singh v. Wahid-ud-din (4) notwithstanding the fact that there was a stipulation, (in the event of the vendee not taking the money from the vendor), that the latter would be entitled to deposit the amount in Court, their Lordships held that it was not a mortgage but a sale out and out. It was pointed out that the first portion of the document provided that the repurchase could only take place after the lapse of 10 years and that the latter portion provided that if the vendors were not ready to purchase the property within the aforesaid time, they would have no claim to the property after the expiry of the period of ten years and the vendees would then have every power in respect of the property. This last clause seems to be similar to the clause contained in the document in the present case, namely, that in the event of the vendor not paying the purchase money within three years, the sale shall become absolute.

We were referred to the cases of Wahid Ali Khan v. Shafkat Husain (9), Abdul Goffar [Shazadi Bibi] v. Sheikh Jamal (5) and Mahomed Mozaffer Ali v. Asrat Ali (6) on behalf of the respondents.

These cases, however, are distinguishable.

In the first all the terms and the surrounding circumstances do not appear from the report. It appears, however, that there was a separate agreement of even date with the deed of sale that whenever the consideration would be re-paid on the expiry of 6 years from the date of sale, the property would be reconveyed, and further that if the remaining amount of consideration money was paid within 6 years, the property would be reconveyed, and the learned Judges in view of the language of the two deeds held that the transaction was a mortgage. In the second, as well as in the third case, there was no change of possession and the consideration for the sale was inadequate. As already pointed out, each case must turn upon the terms of the particular document and the circumstances.

Having regard to the circumstances which we have noticed above, we think that the deed in the present case is a deed of sale out and out and not a mortgage.

The decrees of the Court below will accordingly be set aside and the suit dismissed without costs in all Courts as no costs were allowed in either of the Courts below.

Decree set aside.

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court, (Sir John Wallis, C. J. and Srinivasa Ayyangar, J.), dated 12 August 1915 (in Appeal Suit No. 106 of 1914) and printed as 30 Ind. Cas. 806, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore.

FACTS.—The parties to the appeal are Lubbai Muhammadans of the Sunni sect residing in the Coimbatore District. The appellant brought the suit to recover his share in the estate of Mahomed Hussain Rowther, as the heir of his daughter, Ponnuthayee. The respondents contested the suit on the ground that by a certain custom in the community females were excluded from inheritance and that the appellant as the heir of Ponnuthayee, is not entitled to a share.

The Subordinate Judge held against the custom set up and decreed the suit. On appeal, the High Court reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appellant's suit. Hence the present appeal.

The facts and the terms of the pleadings in the case are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

Mr. Dube, for the Appellant.—The High Court is clearly wrong in finding that the custom was established in this case. The evidence mainly consisting of decisions of Courts from 1877 up to date, proves that there was no custom excluding females from inheritance in the community to which the parties belong. *Mirabivi v. JUDGMENT.

SIR LAWRENCE JARVIS.—This is an appeal from a decree dated the 12th August 1915 of the High Court at Madras reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore, dated the 7th January 1914.

The litigants are Lubbai Muhammadans of the Sunni sect, and the contest is as to the devolution of the estate of Mahomed Hussain Rowther. He died in 1904 leaving a widow and three sons and also two daughters named Ponnuthayee and Sulaiha Bi.

Ponnuthayee died in September 1905 leaving a husband and a daughter. They are the plaintiffs in this suit. The defendants are the three sons of Mahomed Hussain Rowther, his widow and the two children of Sulaiha Bi who was dead at the institution of this suit.

The plaintiffs claim shares in Mahomed Hussain's estate as heirs of Ponnuthayee, and they are supported by the children of Sulaiha Bi, who make a similar claim as heirs of their mother. The contesting defendants are the three sons and their mother.

The decision of the rival claims depends upon whether the devolution of Mahomed Hussain's estate is governed by Muhammadan Law as the plaintiffs contend or by a rule of descent excluding females as the contesting defendants maintain.

Though it is common ground that Mahomed Hussain and the litigants are Muhammadans, the contesting defendants seek to escape from the course of devolution this would ordinarily involve by setting up what they describe as an immemorial custom and ancient usage.

In paragraphs 15, 16 and 17 of their written statement, they plead as follows:—

"15. It has been the immemorial custom and ancient usage in the Muhammadan families in the district of Coimbatore in general and in the families of these defendants and the relations in particular that they have followed the Hindu Law as regards the law of property and succession and partition. Only the male members are entitled to succeed to the properties of their ancestors and females are excluded from inheritance when there are males. Besides, it is also the custom in the Muhammadan families to give some amount including jewels at the time of or immediately after marriage to the female members in lieu of their share, and consistently with that usage defendants' father gave jewels, cash and other moveables worth about Rs. 4,000 to the mother of the second plaintiff immediately after the marriage and the plaintiffs' conduct in not adverting to this in the plaint is fraudulent.

"16. According to that immemorial custom and usage the plaintiffs have no right to claim a share in the share of Ponnuthayee Ammal while Ponnuthayee Ammal herself had no share.

17. "It has been the custom also in the family of the plaintiffs."

On the settlement of issues the following (amongst others) were ordered to be tried:—

"(1) Are parties to suit governed by Hindu Law and whether Ponnuthayee, mother of the second plaintiff, was not entitled to her share in the estate of her deceased father Mahomed Hussain Rowther?

"(8) Whether the custom set out in paragraph 15 of the written statement is true and valid? and if so, was the claim of Ponnuthayee satisfied in accordance therewith?"

At the hearing an additional issue was framed at the request of the contesting defendants which raised the question as to whether the suit was barred by an earlier decision. It calls for no discussion now as their Lordships see no reason to dissent from the concurrent determination of the lower Courts that this issue must be answered in the negative.

And thus the only question that remains for decision is as to this alleged custom or usage. The plea which professes to formulate it has been forcibly criticised by the learned Subordinate Judge in the course of his careful and discriminating judgment. He points out that in its wider assertion it is untenable, and even in its narrower form it is not established. He might even have gone further and pronounced the pleading bad.

In the result he held that the devolution was governed by Muhammadan Law and declared the plaintiffs entitled to the share claimed.

The defendants appealed, and to meet the criticism of the Subordinate Judge they narrowed the definition of the custom. The 9th ground is that "the Court below ought to have found the custom alleged at any rate as regards the Lubbai community residing in the villages mentioned in the written statement."

On appeal the High Court reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. The learned Chief Justice, instead of treating the custom or usage as a matter for proof by the contesting defendants, held in effect that the Lubbai Muhammadans in that part of India at the date of their conversion from Hinduism to the Muhammadan faith elected to retain the Hindu rule excluding women, and that the real question in this suit was whether the plaintiffs had proved an abandonment of the Hindu rule of exclusion.

Viewing the evidence in this light the Chief Justice held the evidence oral and documentary sufficient to show that the defendants' family had adhered, with perhaps most of the Lubbais of the neighbourhood, to the Hindu rule excluding the succession of females.

Mr. Justice Srinivas Ayyangar was more guarded in his opinion. Citing a passage from the judgment in Funindra Deo Ruit v. Rajeswar Das (3) as a guide to the standard of proof required, he regarded it as probable that "many of the Lubbais being recent converts from Hinduism retained the mode of devolution of property according to Hindu usages even after their conversion."

He accordingly considered that the evidence to which he made special reference taken along with the evidence of the general prevalence of the practice was sufficient to prove the family custom set up.

But it is a misapprehension of the passage cited to treat it as a guide to the standard of proof in this case. There the question at issue was whether in the family then under discussion there was a legal power to adopt. Had its members been Hindus they would have been governed by Hindu Law and there would have been this power. But though they affected to be Hindus, that in fact was not their status: the utmost that could be said was that though the family had introduced many Hindu customs, they in fact were governed by family customs. Of such a family it was manifestly appropriate to remark that: "the question is not whether the general law is modified by a family custom forbidding adoption, but whether with respect to inheritance the family is governed by Hindu Law, or by customs which do not allow an adopted son to inherit." But such a comment can have no application to conditions as they exist in this case.

No doubt in Abraham v. Abraham (4), it is said that a convert upon his conversion may renounce the old law by which he was bound as he has renounced his old religion, or if he thinks fit he may abide by the old law notwithstanding he has renounced his old religion. It is not, however, suggested in the present case that the Lubbaïs as a community have thought fit to abide by the entirety of their old law; the utmost that is said is that they, or some of them in a particular locality, have followed the Hindu Law, not in all respects, but in relation to property, succession and partition. In their essential characteristics, custom and an election to abide by the law of the old status differ fundamentally as sources of law, still, making every assumption in its favour, in the circumstances of this case and on the record as it stands there is no mode of proving this alleged election except by way of inference from actings and conduct that would establish a custom, so that along whatever line this case may be approached the custom must be established and the burden of proof of this is on the defendants.

Their Lordships have dealt with this aspect of the case at some length as it has evidently influenced the judgment of the High Court. But there is another aspect of it by which (in their Lordships' opinion) their decision must be guided.

It is enacted by the Madras Civil Courts Act, III of 1873, section 16, that all questions regarding inheritance, marriage, or any religious usage or institution shall be decided where the parties are Muhammadans by the Muhammadan Law or by custom having the force of law.

The litigants are Muhammadans to whom this Act applies so that prima facie all questions as to succession among them must be decided according to Muhammadan Law. In India, however, custom plays a large part in modifying the ordinary law, and it is now established that there may be a custom at variance even with the rules of Muhammadan Law, governing the succession in a particular community of Muhammadans. But the custom must be proved. The essentials of a custom or usage have been repeatedly defined, but it will suffice to refer to the recent decision of Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (2) where the essentials of a legal custom or usage and the requisites of proof are fully discussed. The following passage from the judgment in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivannantha Perumal Sethurayar (5) was cited as a correct and authoritative pronouncement of the law on these points.

"It is of the essence of special usages, modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable; and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence, and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends."

Though the custom or usage as pleaded is open to objection, still their Lordships will not reject the defendants' contention on that ground, but will deal with the case as though the custom or usage had been pleaded in a form that was free from fault.

There is no suggestion on the record that the rule of exclusion on which the contesting defendants rely has been established by judicial decision in the sense that this can be predicated of the rules of property and succession applicable to Khojas or Outchi Memons in the Bombay Presidency. Therefore it is necessary to examine the evidence to see whether it supports the rule of succession asserted by the contesting defendants.

This evidence is documentary and oral, and as the former is more important and more trustworthy, their Lordships will first deal with that.

The documents on which the defendants rely as proving the usage, begin in order of time with a decree of the Madras High Court in Original Suit No. 5 of 1877, Exhibit XII, in which Mr. Justice Innes decided in its favour.

There was, however, an appeal from his decree which ended in a compromise, a circumstance which deprives his decision of much of its evidentiary value.

Moreover, in 1885, an Appellate Bench of the Court in Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (1) decided that the custom of exclusion in the case then before them had not been proved, and this decision has been recently approved by the Judicial Committee in Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (2).

The next document in order of time is the judgment in Original Suit No. 22 of 1904, dated the 26th of February 1904, Exhibit III, where the custom was affirmed; but the decision in fact was based on that in Original Suit No. 5 of 1877, and has little or no independent value.

Then reliance is placed on the judgment in Original Suit No. 755 of 1906, dated the 26th of September 1911, Exhibit I A. But it is open to the comment that the decision was influenced by that given in Original Suit No. 22 of 1904, as also was the judgment on appeal Exhibit XVI. Thus on an examination of these documents it may fairly be said that the several judgments are substantially based on that pronounced in Original Suit No. 5 of 1877, which is open to the comment that has been made on its value.

The documentary evidence on which the plaintiffs rely starts with the judgment in Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (1). There the High Court held even in second appeal that there was no evidence to justify the finding of the lower Courts in favour of the custom, and this decision, as already stated, has received the approval of this Board, in Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (2).

Then there follows a series of documents, some negating the custom, others applying Muhammadan Law where the custom was not pleaded, and others proceeding on the assumption that it was Muhammadan Law that applied. In all these instances the parties before the Court were Lubbai Muhammadans. The first is a judgment of the 15th July 1890 in Original Suit No. 85 of 1890, Exhibit L, followed by a judgment on appeal in that suit, Exhibit M, in both of which the right of a female to succeed under Muhammadan Law is recognised.

On the 2nd October 1892 judgment was pronounced in Original Suit No. 373 of 1891, Exhibit O, where the rights of females were treated as governed by Muhammadan Law.

On the 23rd January 1893 a petition for a succession certificate, Exhibit F, was presented, and female members of the family were made counter-petitioners as though the rights of the parties were governed by Muhammadan Law.

On the 2nd August 1897 the High Court passed a decree, Exhibit G, confirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court, with the result that the sisters' right to share, according to Muhammadan Law, was established, though the custom had been pleaded.

On the 30th September 1901 it was decided by the judgment in Original Suit No. 753 of 1900, Exhibit B, affirmed on appeal by the judgment of the District Judge, Exhibit B1, that a female in a Lubbai Muhammadan family was entitled to a share. In this case a custom was alleged that a woman is given by her family, at or about the time of her marriage, her share, or the equivalent of her share, in the estate of her own family. The custom was negated, though the District Judge seems to have thought that the appellants would have been entitled to more favourable consideration had they pleaded that they had retained the Hindu Law of inheritance and succession instead of setting up a special custom at variance with the Muhammadan Law.

On the 5th of June 1903 a plaint in Original Suit No. 337 of 1903, Exhibit O, was presented in which it was taken for granted that the rights of a female were governed by Muhammadan Law.

MAROMED IBRAHIM v. SHAIKH IBRAHIM.

On the 30th March, 1903, there was a judgment in Original Suit No. 238 of 1902, Exhibit R, which assumed a right to a share in a female, though it held that in the circumstances of the case the female's right was barred under Muhammadan Law.

The judgment dated the 13th January 1904 in Original Suit No. 36 of 1901, Exhibit H, and that dated the 4th December 1895; in Original Suit No. 34 of 1894, Exhibit N, proceeded on the same assumption.

On the 18th October 1906 and the 2nd January 1907 petitions for succession certificates, Exhibits K and P., were presented by daughters, and on the 2nd September 1910 by a judgment in Original Suit No. 33 of 1908, Exhibit Q, the right of a widow and daughters to shares according to Muhammadan Law was affirmed.

It will thus be seen that over this series of years the rights of female members of the Lubbai Muhammadan community, under Muhammadan Law have been repeatedly asserted and recognised, and that on three occasions the rule of exclusion, when pleaded, has been expressly negatived.

When this documentary evidence is contrasted with that adduced in support of the alleged rule of exclusion, it cannot be said that the custom or usage is supported by clear and unambiguous evidence. On the contrary, so far as the weight of documentary evidence goes, the preponderance is on the side of the plaintiffs.

Turning then to the oral evidence their Lordships cannot find in it sufficient proof to support the defendants' plea.

The witnesses were all examined before the Subordinate Judge who made in his judgment a careful and critical examination of their evidence with the result that he was unable to find the custom or usage proved, and their Lordships can see no sufficient reason for questioning his appreciation of the evidence. He evidently did not consider that the witnesses called by the contesting defendants held a position in the community entitling them to greater credit than those called by the plaintiffs, and this appears to their Lordships to be a just estimate of their worth.

There is a witness who holds an office that should have enabled him to speak with some measure of authority and that is P. W. No. 5 a Khazi of Pallapati, and the same may be said of P. W. No. 7 a Moulvi, but the Subordinate Judge evidently was not impressed by either of them. For what it may be worth, however, both assert that a Lubbai's estate is divided according to Muhammadan Law.

Looking then at the whole of the evidence, documentary and oral, their Lordships consider it falls far short of the standard of proof requisite to establish a custom or usage excluding females from succession.

It merits notice too that the custom as pleaded is not limited to the exclusion of females, but asserts as a part or at any rate an accompaniment of it that it is the custom to make a gift to female members at the time of or immediately after marriage in lieu of their shares; and it is alleged that consistently with that usage the defendant's father gave jewels, cash and other moveables, worth about Rs. 4,000 to the mother of the second plaintiff immediately after marriage.

This is negatived by the Subordinate Judge and from this conclusion the High Court expresses no dissent.

The result then is that their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court should be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored, with the variation that a day be fixed by the Court of the first instance for the appointment of a Commissioner in lieu of the 7th February, 1914, and that the contesting defendants do pay to the plaintiffs their costs in the High Court.

Six years have elapsed since the date of the decree under appeal, and as no satisfactory explanation is given of this long delay there will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Dhondba v. Vishwanath, 15 C. P. L. R. 143, approved. The mention in section 47 of Act XI of 1898 (C. P. Tenancy Act) of the provisions of section 43 includes the provisions of both sub-sections 3) and (5) of that section and does not refer to those of sub-section (3) only and that section 47 applies to transfers in which the consideration is above Rs. 100, as well as to those of less value provided no question of fraud arises, which will vitiate any transaction of itself. [p. 122, col. 2]

The proper remedy of a landlord to set aside a transfer of an occupancy land by a tenant, not vitiated by fraud, is by an application by him under section 47 of the Tenancy Act and not by a civil suit. [p. 122, col. 2; 123, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 189 of 1920, decided on the 11th January 1921.

FACTS of this case appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

The defendant-appellant is a co-sharer of Morza Ohhashanpore. Anandi Chamaru and others were also co-sharers of the village. Thus there were several co-sharers and they held sir land in severalty. Anandi Chamaru and others mortgaged their share to one Shyam Sander excluding cultivating rights in the sir which they held separately and which consisted of 37 fields and comprised an area of 15.07 acres. Shyamsander obtained a decree on his mortgage and made it absolute in 1908 and then sold the foreclosed share to the plaintiffs in this case. In 1920 Anandi and others who became ex-proprietary tenants of their sir land transferred the same to the defendant by a registered deed for Rs. 921. The deed was registered by the Registering Officer as the document was styled as a deed of surrender and the defendant was described as the malguar of the village and the executants were described as his tenants. The plaintiffs brought a suit to eject the defendant from that land on the ground that they were the proprietors of Anandi and others in respect of this land and the defendant was a trespasser.

The suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif and the defendant raised an objection that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Munsif decided that he had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. On the merits the defendant admitted the mortgage in favour of Shyam Sander and his decree but pleaded that he was not aware of the sale to plaintiffs by Shyam Sander and that neither Shyam Sander nor the plaintiffs obtained any rights in the sir land in question and that they could not maintain a suit for ejectment. The mortgagors are not parties to this suit.

The lower Court decided that the sale to defendant was fraudulent, that the mortgagors were the ex-proprietary tenants of Shyam Sander and the plaintiff and that defendant obtained no title to retain possession of the land and so it decreed the claim.

The defendant has preferred an appeal against the decree of the lower Court and the main point urged is that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The defendant being a fractional co-sharer and not a Lambardar, the transaction amounts to a sale and not a surrender. The sale being of immoveable property worth more than Rs. 100 the same cannot be effected without registration. In this case the document too is registered so but for the provisions of section 46 of the C. P. Tenancy Act the transaction is perfectly valid. The case of Ohamaru Sao Bania v. Tulsidin Singh (1) has no application as the present document is a registered one. So prima facie it would appear that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and the plaintiff's remedy is by an application to a Revenue Officer under section 47 of the

CHUNGA PRASAD v. PHULWA.

C. P. Tenancy Act. The jurisdiction is determined by the allegations in the plaint and the defendant is described as a trespasser. But even this would not go to the rescue of the plaintiffs as they admitted in the very plaint that defendant obtained title by a registered document.

The case has, however, to be looked at from another stand point i.e., as a suit between two co-sharers. Plaintiffs are co-sharers of the village and the defendant is also a co-sharer and this fact takes the case out of the purview of section 47 of the C. P. Tenancy Act. If defendant were not a co-sharer, the Civil Court would have no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. As they are co-sharers, the suit is to be decided on the principles laid down in Ramdayal v. Gulabai Bai (2).

It is true that as the sir lands are held in severalty the plaintiffs become the proprietors of the ex-proprietary tenants. This only means that the latter are liable to pay rent for their land to the plaintiffs. But all the same this rent is to be taken into account at the time of adjusting the village profits among the several co-sharers. The plaintiffs cannot ignore their position as fractional co-sharers and the defendant's position as a co-sharer in dealing with this land. The plaintiffs obtained only proprietary interest in the land and they still have it and cannot claim to recover exclusive possession of that land from the defendant. They may treat the defendant as a tenant of the land or may treat him as a proprietor and claim joint possession on payment of a proportionate share of the purchase money but they cannot treat him as a trespasser.

The suit is an ill-conceived one, plaintiff having no right to exclusive possession of the land as against the defendant. I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit as untenable. The respondent to bear appellant's costs of both the Courts.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. C. Dutta Chowdhury, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The state of things in regard to the proprietorship of the land in dispute here is clearly explained in Dhonabai v.

Vishwamath (3). When two co-proprietors of a village divide up the sir land between them, to hold portions of it separately, they make an imperfect partition of that village; each has a separate patti comprising the sir land he holds in severalty, and the whole of the rest of the village forms what is called a shamilat patti. Before the transfer of their present share to the plaintiffs their transferees held the whole proprietary right in a certain portion of the sir land. This whole right they transferred to the plaintiffs, who, therefore, became sole landlords of that land, holding it as a separate patti. The fact that at the same time they acquired the transferor's joint interest in the shamilat patti and that that shamilat patti was very much bigger than any separate patti, makes no difference whatever, beyond leading to a confusion of ideas.

The position then is this. The plaintiffs are sole landlords of the occupancy holding in question. The occupancy tenants of that land transferred it for Rs. 921 to the defendants who are strangers and not co-sharers in the proprietary interest of that land. This document was by mistake admitted to registration, the mistake arising from the fact that the transferees are co-proprietors of other land in the same village. I agree entirely with the ruling of Stanyon, A. J. C., in Ganeshtis v. Shankar (4) that the mention in section 47 of Act XI of 1858 of the provisions of section 46 includes the provisions of both sub-sections (3) and (5) of that section and does not refer to those of sub-section (3) only, and that section 47 applies to transfers in which the consideration is over Rs. 100 as well as to those of a less value, provided no question of fraud arises, which, of course, will vitiate any transaction of itself. Here, however, the registration was obtained by mistake and not by fraud. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was himself under the impression that the defendants were joint landlords of this land, and it is scarcely to be wondered at that the defendants made the same mistake.

The proper remedy of the plaintiffs was, therefore, by application to a Revenue Officer and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted. The decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the suit was, therefore, right, though it is based on error. The plaintiffs' application to a Revenue Officer will still be well within time if he can show cause for the application to it of section 14 of the Limitation Act. The appeal is dismissed, but, in the special circumstances of the case, I order that each party shall pay its own costs.

An award made without the intervention of any Court, and during the pendency of litigation, cannot, unless it is consented to by parties, be recorded as an adjustment under Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, and section 89 of the Code operates to bar the enforcement of it by one of the parties. Petition, under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, praying that the arbitrator's award may be accepted and a decree passed accordingly.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Applicant.

Bakhshi Tej Chand and Mr. Mokand Lal
Puri, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—During the pendency of an appeal to this Court from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Amballa the parties to the suit, without asking for the intervention of any Court, referred their dispute to the decision of an arbitrator who gave an award which was mainly in favour of the defendant respondent, who thereupon asked the Senior Subordinate Judge to record the award under Schedule II or, in the alternative, under Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. The application was rejected and the defendant-respondent now asks this Court to make an order under the said rule.

Counsel for the plaintiff appellant, however, contends that any agreement to refer the subject-matter of a suit to arbitration during its pendency is unlawful without the intervention of a Court and that, even if it is lawful, the Court cannot take cognizance of such an agreement.

Numerous authorities have been cited before us, but it is not necessary to discuss them all. There are no doubt certain rulings which can be cited in support of the application, but some of them were prior to Act V of 1908 and in others the remarks are obiter.

Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (1) which followed Pragdas v. Girdhardas (2) is in fact the only ruling in which, after a discussion of the effect of section 89 of Act V of 1908, it has been held that an award made without the intervention of the Court during the pendency of a litigation could be filed under Order XXIII, rule 3, and even in that case it was found necessary to resort to the provisions of Schedule II.

Pragdas v. Girdhardas (2) had, however, already been dissented from in Rukhanbai v. Adampi (3). A ruling which was not referred to in Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (1) and there is still later judgment of the same High Court, namely, Shavaksha Dinshi Davar v. Tyab Huji Ayub (4) in which, though Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (1) was not referred to, Pragdas v. Girdhardas (2) was regarded as no longer binding, and it was held that no application can be made to obtain a decree on an award except as provided in section 89 of Act V of 1908.

For the purpose of our decision in this case, it is not necessary for us to go the whole length of Dhan Singh v. Kahn Singh (5), the decision on which Bakhshi Tek Chand relies for his proposition that the agreement to refer was unlawful, though it may be remarked that in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council had not to consider the effect of section 375 of the old Code (now Order XXIII, rule 3) and that the remarks of Maclean, O. J. in Tincoury Dey v. Fakir Chand Dey (7) were obiter as no award had been made in the case.

Granting, therefore, that if such an award is made and it is agreed to by the parties it may be recorded as an adjustment under Order XXIII, rule 3, we are nevertheless of the opinion that if it is not consented to, it cannot be recorded as an adjustment and that any attempt to enforce it by one of the parties is precluded by reason of section 89 of Act V of 1908 which lays down that "Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule." The words "by any other law for the time being in force" contained in that section, must, we think, refer to some law extraneous to the Code of Civil Procedure and cannot be legitimately held to cover Order XXIII, rule 3. The grave difficulties which necessarily follow the adoption of the view for which the applicant contends, are very clearly set forth in Shavaksha Dinsla Dair v. Tyab Haji Ayub (4) by Macleod, J., whose arguments and reasoning we adopt. It can never have been intended that a person who gets an award without the intervention of the Court should be in a better position than one who has applied to the Court for an Order of Reference under the Second Schedule.

Hindu joint trading family—Dayabhaga School—Distinction between ancestral business and one started after ancestor's death—New business started by Karta—Insolvency—Adjudication of adult members—Debt contracted for purposes of new business—Liability of minor's share—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 247, 248—Minor, admission of, as partner—Proof—Plea and issue, absence of—High Court, power of, to set up new case—Partner, minor whether can become.

The distinction between an ancestral business and one started after the death of the ancestor, as a source of partnership relations is this that in the one case these relations result by operation of law from a succession on the death of the ancestor to an established business, with its benefits and obligations; while in the other case they rest ultimately on contractual arrangement between the parties. [p. 127, col. 1.]

In a joint trading family governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, the share of a minor is not liable for debts contracted for the purposes of a new business started by the Karta or manager of the family. On adjudication in insolvency of the adult members of the family, such minor's share does not vest in the Receiver. If, however, any of the new firm's assets get into the possession of the minor, the Receiver is entitled to realise them for the benefit of the general body of creditors, an individual creditor cannot, in any event, realise those assets for his own benefit and without adding the Receiver as a party. [p. 127, cols. 1 & 2.]

In order to bring section 247 of the Contract Act into play, it must be proved that the minor has been admitted to the benefits of the partnership, but where the fact is neither pleaded nor made an issue at the trial, it is not open to the High Court, without inviting specific evidence, specially directed to the point, to hold the admission proved, and thus set up a new case in appeal. [p. 127, col. 2.]

A person under the age of majority cannot become a partner by contract, and so, according to the definition of the term "firm" in section 239 of the Contract Act, he cannot be one of that group of persons called a firm [p. 128, col. 1.]

Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose, 30 I. A. 114; 30 O. 589; 7 C. W. N. 44; 5 Bom. L. R. 421; 8 Sar. P. O. J. 374 (P. O.), followed.

Consolidated appeals from two decrees of the Calcutta High Court, Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjee and Mr. Justice Newbould dated the 31st January 1919, reported as 51 Ind. Cas. 527, reversing those of the Subordinate Judge, 24-Parganas and remanding the cases for inquiry and further trial.

FACTS.—The appellant is one of five brothers who had an ancestral trade. After the death of their father, the eldest brother started a new business in addition to the ancestral one. The businesses flourished for sometime but in 1912, there arose financial difficulties. At the instance of a creditor, the four adult brothers of the appellant, who was then a minor, were adjudged insolvents and a Receiver was appointed. Eventually, the Receiver was directed to take possession of four-fifths of the joint family property and the appellant, through his guardian, got his one-fifth share. The respondents who were creditors of the insolvents in their new business did not get their debt paid in full by the Receiver. They brought the present suits to realise the balance from the share of the appellant on the ground that he was a partner in the new business and liable for the debt. They failed to add the Receiver as a party.

The Subordinate Judge held that neither the minor nor his share was liable for this debt and dismissed the suits. On appeal, however, the respondents relied upon the provisions of the Contract Act and claimed that the appellant was liable as he was in receipt of benefit from the new business. The High Court agreed with their contention, allowed their appeals and remanded the suits to the first Court for further inquiry and trial.

The present appeal is preferred by the appellant against the said orders of the High Court.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellant.—The appellant disclaims all rights and liabilities in the new Orphangunj business. He expressly denied it in the written statement filed by his guardian and ratified it after he attained majority. The respondents are not suing for the benefit of the general body of creditors but for their individual benefit. If any property of the firm is found to be in the hands of the appellant, it is the Receiver that should sue to recover it. The Receiver was at least to be made a party. Objection as to the absence of the Receiver from the suit was taken at the earliest stages of the suit and an issue also was framed. The High Court was wrong in holding that the respondents were entitled to an enquiry whether the appellant has got any assets of the Orphangunj business in his hands. The provisions of the Contract Act do not help the respondents. A person under the age of majority cannot become a partner by contract. Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1). So the appellant could not have been a member of the Orphangunj firm.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. O., and Mr. Raikes, for the Respondents.—The business was the business of a joint family. The appellant has actually got 1/5th of the family property and we are entitled to follow it in his hands. The business was not a new one but only an extension of the old. It was carried on for the benefit of the joint family. The Courts have gone wrong in their law. Our contention is that it was joint family property liable for the joint family debts but not that of a partnership between the brothers. We could not appeal because the decision was in our favour.

Mr. K. Brown replied.—The suits are on pro-notes not signed by the appellant. The respondents now wish to quarrel with the findings of fact as to whether the minor is personally liable.

JUDGMENT.

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, passed in separate suits on the 31st January 1919, reversing two decrees of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas, dated the 28th February 1916.

In each suit a money-decree was sought against the present appellant, who was a minor at its institution. One suit was brought on a hand-note signed by the minor's three adult brothers; the other on a hath-chilla, signed by his four adult brothers.

the youngest of them having then attained majority.

The ground of liability stated in the plaint is that the defendant and his brothers are owners and partners in ancestral businesses, and the money claimed was borrowed by the brothers for the purposes of the businesses.

The minor was defended in each case by his guardian for the suit.

The defendant and his brothers were the five sons of Bhuban Mohan Mandal, a Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga School of Law. He died in November, 1898, and at that time his two younger sons were minors. Nil Ratan, the eldest brother and the Karta of the family, was appointed their guardian under Act VIII of 1890.

Bhuban Mohan had two businesses, one for fuel wood at Munshiganj, and the other for rice and other articles at Kalibazar. Each devolved as an ancestral business on the five sons, and was carried on by Nil Ratan as the Karta, assisted by his adult brothers. After the father's death a new business in rice was started by Nil Ratan at Orphanaganj, and it is the defendant's case that the money sued for was borrowed exclusively for the purpose of this business, and that the business was not ancestral.

The Subordinate Judge decided in the defendant's favour and dismissed the suits. The High Court on appeal apparently took the same view in the first instance, but as the result of a re-argument, set aside the Subordinate Judge's decrees and directed certain accounts against the defendant, not because his liability was established but for the purpose of determining whether or not he was liable. It is from these decrees of the High Court that the present appeals have been preferred.

A preliminary objection was taken that the appeals did not lie "because the order was not final," but their Lordships did not give effect to it and the appeals have been heard.

The businesses were conducted by Nil Ratan and his adult brothers for many years with success. Ultimately, however, there were financial difficulties, and on the 19th February, 1912, proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, were commenced by a creditor against all five brothers in the Court of the District Judge at Alipur. It was established to the satisfaction of the Judge that the defendant was a minor and so could not be adjudicated insolvent, and that the minor was a joint owner in the family business inherited from his father. There was, however, an adjudication against the adult brothers, "they being the members of the firm Bhuban Mohan Mandal and Nil Ratan Mandal."

A Receiver was appointed under section 18 (1) of the Act, and the property of the insolvents thereupon vested in him. He was ordered to realise not only the four-fifth shares of the insolvents in the joint property, but also the minor's share in the joint properties acquired after the father's death. As a result of his insolvency, Nil Ratan was removed from the guardianship of the minor, and Mati Lal Roy was appointed in his place.

On the 19th August 1912, with the sanction of the Judge, Mati Lal Roy and the Receiver agreed to appoint an arbitrator to effect a partition of the immoveable properties, and on the 8th October 1912 an award was made under which the minor got one fifth in both ancestral and after-acquired properties, Mati Lal Roy having claimed that the after-acquired properties were purchased out of the income of the ancestral properties. On the 14th January 1912 a decree was passed in terms of the award.

In the meanwhile cross appeals had been preferred by Mati Lal Roy and the creditors from the orders of the Judge in insolvency, and on the 17th March 1914 they were heard by the High Court with the result that the order refusing to adjudicate the minor an insolvent was affirmed, but so much of the order as directed the Receiver to realise the minor's share was set aside, and in lieu thereof it was ordered that the Receiver should "take possession of four-fifths share of the business, and four-fifths share of all the properties purchased since the death of Bhuban Mohan Mandal, and also four-fifths share of the other properties jointly held by the infant and his brothers."

It is in these circumstances that the present suits were commenced, as the dividend received by the plaintiffs in the insolvency fell short of the amount due.

SANYASI CHARAN MANDAL V. KRISHNADHAM BANERJI.

It is established by concurrent findings by the lower Courts, first, that the money now in suit was borrowed exclusively for the purposes of the Orphangunj business, and secondly, that this business was neither ancestral nor an extension of the ancestral business. These findings must now be deemed conclusive, and this strikes at the very root of the case made by the plaintiffs in the first Court.

The distinction between an ancestral business and one started like the present after the death of the ancestor, as a source of partnership relations is patent. In the one case these relations result by operation of law from a succession on the death of an ancestor to an established business, with its benefits and its obligations. In the other they rest ultimately on contractual arrangement between the parties. The inability of a karta to impose on a minor co-partner the risks and liabilities of a new business started by himself, is fully discussed by both Courts, and their Lordships agreeing with the conclusion at which they have arrived on this point, do not deem it necessary to enter on a further discussion of this aspect of the case.

What has to be seen in the peculiar circumstances of this dispute is not merely whether the minor has come under any liability in respect of the debts of the Orphangunj business, but whether that liability can be enforced by the plaintiffs in the suits as constituted.

It is important at this point to bear in mind (a) that at the institution of the suits the defendant was a minor; (b) that in the written statement filed in each suit on his behalf by his guardian for the suit, it was denied that he was a co-sharer in the business, or had any responsibility with regard to it; (c) that when at a later stage of the litigation the minor attained majority, he adopted these written statements; and (d) that at that time the business of the firm had ceased.

The ancestral character of the Orphangunj business being negatived, the plaintiffs have attempted to formulate other grounds of liability. Before the Subordinate Judge the claim seems to have been rested on general principles rather than on the specific provision of the Contract Act. Thus in the grounds of appeal it is contended that the defendant and his four brothers having all along lived as members of an undivided Hindu family, and properties having been acquired with the joint funds and the defendant having got some of those properties in his share on partition with the Receiver, the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have passed a decree against the defendant at any rate so far as the assets of the firms allotted to his share are concerned.

The answer to the case thus made is given by the Subordinate Judge towards the close of his careful and well-reasoned judgment, and their Lordships are in complete agreement with what is there said. In the High Court, however, reliance was evidently placed on the Contract Act, for its provisions are mentioned and discussed. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine the Act so far as it bears on the question now in contest.

Section 247 provides that a person who is under the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject may be admitted to the benefits of partnership but cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm; but the share of such minor in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm.

To bring this section into play it must be proved that the minor has been admitted to the benefits of the partnership. This is a fact to be established by evidence, and though it was neither pleaded nor made an issue at the trial, the High Court, without inviting evidence specifically directed to this point, held the admission proved, and thus set up a new case in appeal. The defendant has just ground of complaint as to this, and the procedure is not one to be commended; still in the view their Lordships take they will deal with the case on the basis of the High Court's finding without expressing an opinion as to its correctness. Under the section liability is limited to the share of the minor in the property of the firm.

In section 239 there is a definition of the word "firm." It is there said that the persons who have entered into partnership with one another are called collectively a "firm." In the earlier part of the section it is enacted that "partnership" is the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to combine their property, labour or skill in some business and to share the profits thereof between them.

A person under the age of majority cannot become a partner by contract [Mehori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1)] and so, according to the definition, he cannot be one of that group of persons called a firm. It would seem, therefore, that the share of which section 247 speaks is no more than a right to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations have been satisfied.

Though there may be this right, in fact it is not claimed by the defendant. On the contrary, the written statements deny his membership of the partnership; this denial was made on his behalf during his minority, and it was adopted by him when he attained his majority. This attitude he still maintains, and it can only be regarded as a relinquishment of all claim to a share in the property of the firm. It is still the property of the firm, and is liable as such to the obligations of the firm.

But all the property of the firm vested in the Receiver on the making of the order of adjudication (Provincial Insolvency Act, section 16), and if any part of it has got improperly into the possession of the minor, the right to recover it is in the Receiver. This is not disputed by the defendant; and it is only by its coming into the hands of the Receiver that its rateable distribution among the general body of creditors can be secured. Nor does it make any difference that the business was conducted by the male adult members of a Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga; the rights and liabilities of a minor member of such a family would be measured by similar principles for the purpose now under consideration.

The learned Judges in the High Court seem to have thought that the judgment on appeal in the insolvency proceedings put a bar in the way of a recovery by the Receiver, and so justified the plaintiffs' suits; but this proceeds on a misconception of what was actually decided.

It is quite true that in that judgment it was said that "the essence of the matter is that the share of the infant has not vested in him and he is consequently not entitled to deal with it. . . . But whatever remedies may be available hereafter to the Receiver or to the creditor, it is clear that the properties of the infant cannot be dealt with by either of them in these proceedings." This was a correct statement of the legal position; but it in no way justifies the conclusion in the judgment now under appeal that in consequence of it "the defendant cannot now contend that it is only the Receiver (and not any individual creditor) who can deal with his share of the partnership properties." No property belonging to the minor could vest by the adjudication in the Receiver, but what would vest in him would be the right (if it existed) to recover from the minor property in his possession belonging to the firm.

It was then urged that any suit now instituted by the Receiver would be barred by limitation; but when Counsel for the plaintiffs was asked whether to obviate this, he was prepared to add the Receiver as a party, so that any assets realised could come into his hands for rateable distribution. He declined the offer, and frankly admitted that it would be of no use to his clients unless they could recover for their own exclusive benefit.

The absence of the Receiver from the suits is not an objection taken for the first time at this stage of the litigation. It was pleaded as a defect in the written statement and an issue was framed on the point.

The plaintiffs do not now contend that the defendant has become personally liable, and so it is unnecessary to discuss the terms of section 242.

In their Lordships' opinion, therefore, these suits constituted as they are, are misconceived. In the circumstances the Receiver is a necessary party to any proceeding for the purpose of realising assets liable for the firm's debts, and the proceeds of any realisation would be applicable not towards the exclusive discharge of any individual debt as the plaintiffs desire, but for rateable distribution among the whole body of the firm's creditors.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals be allowed, and that in each suit the decrees of the High Court dated the 31st January 1919, be discharged, and the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 28th February 1916, be restored, and that the respondents to each appeal do pay to the appellant the

Where a person is very clearly designated by the guru of a math as his successor, the absence of the formal ceremony of initiation of that person during the lifetime of the guru, is no bar to that person's succession to the office.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, in Suit No. 135 of 1917.

Mr. V. V. Bhadkamkar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. S. Rao and A. G. Datt, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

M. CLEGG, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed on the ground that first defendant was a designated heir of the last Guru Ramgiri, and, therefore, was entitled to succeed. The plaintiff claimed as a gurubandhu. But I do not think there was any necessity to enter into the question whether as a matter of fact he was connected with the line of gurus to this Math, as the first defendant was clearly designated by Ramgiri as his successor. An application was made to the Kolhapur Darbar for permission to adopt the first defendant as a okela. That permission was granted. But before the initiation ceremony was carried out Ramgiri sent the first defendant to Malvan to learn business matters, so that he might be competent when he succeeded to manage the Math properties. When Ramgiri found his end approaching he sent for the first defendant, but unfortunately from one cause or another the first defendant arrived too late, and, therefore, although one may very safely infer that Ramgiri intended to initiate the first defendant, he was unable to do so owing to his dying before the first defendant arrived. The question then is whether in these circumstances the first defendant is not the person to succeed to the Math rather than the plaintiff, even assuming he was able to prove that he was distantly connected as a gurubandhu. I should say on general principles that the designation of the heir would be quite sufficient to enable the first defendant to succeed, the absence of the formal ceremony during the lifetime of Ramgiri not being really material to his success in the suit. I think, therefore, that the Judge was right in holding that the designated heir could succeed to the Math and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SHAH, J.—I agree. I only desire to add that there is nothing to show that the person in the position of defendant No. 1, clearly designated as heir by Ramgiri, would not be able to succeed simply because the initiation ceremony was not performed during the lifetime of Ramgiri. Though the proposition has been advanced that the initiation ceremony is essential for the purpose of constituting discipleship which would entitle him to succeed to the property, no authority has been cited in support of that proposition, and I do not think that it could be said as a matter of law that where the designation has been so clear, as in the present case, the absence of formal initiation during the lifetime of the last holder, Ramgiri, should present insuperable difficulty in the way of the designated disciple succeeding as heir.

When by mistake a memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped, and the mistake is one which could not have been made if due care and attention had been exercised, the Court will not extend the time so as to allow the appellant to pay the proper Court-fee, and thus deprive the respondent of the valuable right which has accrued to him.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 4th September 1916, varying that of the Honorary Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, dated the 16th February 1915.

Pandit Sco Narain, R. B., for the Appellant.

Messrs Dalip Singh and Ram Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decree for redemption on payment of a sum of Rs. 1,255. It is met with a preliminary objection that the appeal which was filed on the 30th December 1916 is improperly stamped. The amount of the Court-fee paid is Rs. 10 only and according to the petition of appeal this sum was fixed under Schedule II, Article 17 (6) of the Court Fees Act. There is no doubt, however, that Court fee should have been paid ad valorem on the amount of the principal under section 7 (9) of the said Act and we see no reason for extending the time so as to allow the appellant to pay the proper Court-fee. A valuable right has accrued to the respondents and there is no reason why they should now be deprived of it. The mistake was one which could not have been made if due care and attention had been exercised.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Tenant sub-letting in contravention of agreement—Tenancy, termination of, by notice—Sub-tenant, status of—Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act (II of 1918), s. 9—"Tenant," whether includes "sub-tenant."

Where a tenant, contrary to the terms of his lease, sub-lets the premises, and the landlord by notice terminates the tenancy, the sub-lessee is a tenant on sufferance thereafter, and is liable to ejectment at the instance of the landlord. [p 131, col. 1.]

The term "tenant" in section 9 of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act does not include a sub-tenant. [p 131, col. 1.]

Mr. Kamdar, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. Colman, Taleyarkhan and Khargamvala, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs are the owners of a building at Vithalwady and let the first floor to Ramjilal Ramswarup on the 15th November 1917 at a rental of Rs. 40 per mensem.

Plaintiffs say that Ramjilal Ramswarup's rent was in arrears and he had sub-let the premises contrary to the terms of his lease. Therefore, they gave notice terminating the tenancy on the 10th November 1920.

In the meantime, however, on the 26th October 1920, Ramjilal Ramswarup was adjudicated insolvent and left Bombay. On 28th October 1920, the Official Assignee's auctioneers wrote that they had taken away Ramjilal Ramswarup's moveables and vacated the premises. The plaintiffs went there that day. Plaintiff No. 3 says he found defendants in possession of two rooms and that he locked the other two.

On 29th October 1920, the Official Assignee sent a notice of his intention to disclaim the leasehold, and on 7th December 1920 the Official Assignee disclaimed tenancy as from that date. Squabbles about possession between the plaintiffs and defendants went on, which led to proceedings in the Police Court. Plaintiffs filed this suit on 17th December 1920.

SUGANCHAND SAYAICHAND v. MOTILAL DURGAPRASAD.

There is now no question as to Ramjilal Ramswarup's occupation. He has vacated the premises and his tenancy has terminated. The suit is against the defendants who claim to be sub-tenants of Ramjilal Ramswarup.

Now, the effect of the insolvency was not to terminate the tenancy but to vest the leasehold in the Official Assignee. The locking up of the rooms by the plaintiffs on the 28th October was not a re-entry by the landlord, for the lease gives no power of re-entry. Plaintiffs were then only taking action for the protection of their property. The disclaimer of the 7th December, although it operated to relieve the Official Assignee of personal liability to pay rent as from the date of adjudication, did not operate on the leasehold interest until the date of disclaimer, i. e., the 7th December. But before that date the tenancy had been determined by notice, Exhibit 2, on the 10th November 1920. This notice is proved and is admitted by the defendants in their letter of the 29th October (?), Exhibit 10.

If the tenancy had been terminated by the disclaimer, the sub-tenants' rights could have been saved by section 62 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, or by section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act. But as it is the tenancy was terminated by notice on the 10th November 1920, and, therefore, the defendants were tenants on sufferance after that date.

Mr. Coltman contends that even though the defendants are sub-tenants, they are entitled to the protection of the Bombay Rent Act, first, because the word 'tenant' in section 9 includes a sub-tenant; and, secondly, because under section 9 (3) the fact that the landlord's interest has terminated is not in itself deemed to be a sufficient cause for dispossession. The term 'tenant' is defined in section 2 (a) as "any person by whom or on whose account rent is payable for any premises, and includes every person from time to time deriving title under a tenant."

Granting that the sub-tenant derives title from the tenant, still he is not within the definition unless rent is payable by him or on his account to the landlord. But this is not the case, for there is no privity of contract between him and the landlord. Even if he pays the tenant's rent under the head lease, he does so as the agent of the tenant and not on his own account. The term 'tenant' in section 9 does not include a sub-tenant, unless, of course, the suit is filed by the tenant on the under lease, in which case the tenant is the landlord qua the sub-tenant and the sub-tenant is his tenant.

As to the other branch of the argument, the termination of the landlord's interest refers to cases of assignment of the lessor's interest and perhaps even to the death of a Hindu widow lessor. In either case the assignee or the remainderman succeeds to the estate and in the case of the assignee becomes landlord by derivative title. But granting that the tenant derives title from the landlord, he is not for that reason within the definition unless he is entitled to receive rent under the head-lease. He is not entitled to receive rent from the sub-tenant because there is no privity of contract between the head-lessee and the sub-tenant. He is, therefore, not the sub-tenant's landlord qua the head-lessee. The extinction of a tenant's title, therefore, does not bring the case within section 9 (3); and in truth the defendants are not sued as tenants or by a landlord.

The defendants as sub-tenants hold on a precarious title and when the tenancy under the headlease terminates, their right to possession terminates too. Unlike trespassers they come in by right but like trespassers they hold over without right, and in this suit they are in the same position as trespassers. It is, therefore, not necessary to find on the issue as to reasonable and bona fide requirement, or indeed on the issue as to the number of rooms which were sub-let to them.

The plaintiffs have given false evidence when they pretend ignorance of the sub-tenancy. For, I believe they received Ramjilal Ramswarup's rent from the defendants from February to August and even made repairs on defendants' requisition last rains. On the other hand, defendants have behaved no better for they set up at one time a false case of an agreement of direct tenancy from the plaintiffs, which has been subsequently abandoned.

Therefore, following the ordinary rule, I think this is a case in which costs should follow the event.

TOHLU MAL v. BUTA.

Decree, therefore, that the defendants do give vacant and peaceful possession of the premises in suit to the plaintiffs and pay compensation at the rate of Rs. 35 per month from 11th November 1920 till date of delivery of possession. Defendants to pay plaintiffs' costs of this suit.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 8th July 1916, varying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 27th August 1915.

Bekhsbi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Ghani, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the redemption of a mortgage dated the 8th August 1898. The following facts will disclose the nature of the claim and the issues arising between the parties. The property mortgaged consisted of two shops situated in Ludhiana, Mohalla Iqbal Ganj. Nur Muhammad, the defendant No. 2, and Musammat Nur Bibi, the defendant No. 3, were the owners of these two shops. During their minority Musammat Zabo, their mother and guardian, mortgaged with possession the two shops on their behalf to Tohlu Mal for Rs. 400. The detail of the consideration constituting the total figure of Rs. 400 is given in the mortgage deed. One of the items was Rs. 125, which was left by the mortgagee for payment to a previous mortgagee, Obint Ram. Tohlu Mal was authorised to pay this amount to the previous mortgagee and by redeeming the previous mortgage to take possession of the shops. The following conditions were entered in the mortgage deed in favour of Tohlu Mal:—

(a) The mortgagee was to remain in possession.

(b) The mortgage money was to carry interest at the rate of Rs. 1.4.0 per cent.

(c) The rent of the shops in the case of realisation was to be deducted from the interest;

(d) Power was given to the mortgagee to claim and realise the principal and interest from the mortgaged property and other property of the mortgagors and from their persons.

(e) The mortgagors were to keep the shops in proper state of repair, and in default power was given to the mortgagees to make repairs. (shikast wa rekht doknat marhuna b zimma ham muzhiran hai agar ham muzhiran muramat na karaven to murtahin khud muramat kara lewe);

(f) The expenses incurred by the mortgagees in effecting repairs were made recoverable from the mortgagors with interest at the rate of Rs. 1.4.0 per cent.

(g) The clause as regards title was given in the following words:—

(Agar koi kisi kism ka jhagra ho to us ke harja wa kharcha ke zimmarwar ham muzhiran hain, murtahin ka koi taaluq nahin hai), namely, in case of any dispute we, the mortgagors, will be responsible for the costs and damages. The mortgagees will have nothing to do with them.

The minors, Nur Muhammad and Musammat Nur Bibi on attaining majority sold by a sale deed dated the 14th April 1914 the equity of redemption in these shops to Buta, the plaintiff in this case, for Rs. 850 leaving Rs. 400 with the vendor to pay off the mortgage in favour of Tohlu Mal. A clause was inserted in the sale-deed to the effect that if Tohlu Mal was found entitled to any thing in addition to Rs. 400 the vendor would be liable to pay that also.

TOHLU MAL v. BUTA.

The present suit was brought by Buta on the 28th April 1914, Tohlu Mal was made the principal defendant while Nur Muhammad and Musammât Nur Bibi were joined as pro forma defendants. The plaintiff claimed redemption on payment of Rs. 400 only alleging that the rent of the shops had been appropriated by the mortgagee towards the interest. Tohlu Mal admitted the right of the plaintiff to redeem as the vendee of the equity of redemption, but he claimed that in addition to the Rs. 400 offered he was entitled to Rs. 945 on account of interest from the 8th August 1898 up to the 8th May 1914 at the rate of Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem, Rs. 115-15-6 on account of expenses incurred in reconstructing certain portions of the shops which had fallen down, Rs. 170-6-0 on account of interest on the amount of expenses for seven years and 10 months at the rate of Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem, Rs. 44 on account of expenses for repairs during eleven years at the rate of Rs. 4 per annum and Rs. 75 on account of costs of a suit which he had to bring against Ohint Ram, the prior mortgagee, to recover possession of the shops by redemption. He admitted receipt of Rs. 428-11-6 in the shape of rent of the shops which he offered to deduct from the amount claimed by him. The suit was also resisted by Nur Muhammad and Musammât Nur Bibi principally on the allegation that the mortgage was executed by their mother without lawful authority and that no consideration had been received. Repliation was filed by the plaintiff objecting to the additional items claimed by Tohlu Mal, the mortgagee, while the defendant, Tohlu Mal, also filed additional pleas meeting the objections raised on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The parties also made oral statements in Court. Issues were framed and evidence was tendered. Arguments were heard by Wali Shah on the 1st of August 1915. The case was ready for judgment when on the 5th August 1915 the plaintiff presented an application stating that he had filed the plaint in ignorance of real facts and asked the Court to allow him to amend his plaint. Curiously enough this prayer was granted by the Court at this late stage. In the amended plaint the plaintiff alleged that the mortgage-deed was unlawful and was executed without consideration and necessity, and that he was entitled to get possession of the shops from Tohlu Mal without paying anything to him. The effect of the amendment was that the nature of the suit was altogether changed. The Court of first instance, however, tried the new issue arising on the amended plaint and after going into the question of consideration and necessity came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to get possession of the two shops without paying anything on account of the mortgage.

Tohlu Mal naturally being dissatisfied with the decision of the Trial Court appealed to the lower Appellate Court. The latter Court has set aside the order allowing the amendment of the plaint and has tried the case on the original plaint with the result that it has decreed the claim of the plaintiff for redemption on payment of Rs. 400 only.

Both Buta, the plaintiff, and Tohlu Mal, the defendant, are dissatisfied with the appellate decree. Tohlu Mal has filed a second appeal in this Court complaining that the additional items claimed by him have been wrongly disallowed by the Appellate Court. Buta, plaintiff, has filed cross objections under Order XLI, rule 22, reiterating the objections as to the legality of the mortgage and his non-liability to pay anything for the redemption of the shops. We must dispose of the cross-objections first. It is admitted that it can be urged only on the amended plaint. We entirely agree with the view taken by the lower Appellate Court with regard to the amended plaint. We are clearly of opinion that by the amendment the nature of the suit was altogether altered, and such amendment ought not to have been allowed at such a late stage. We accordingly see no force in the cross-objections and disallow them with costs.

As regards the appeal of Tohlu Mal, after considering the terms of the mortgage-deed we are compelled to disagree with the learned Judge of the Court below with respect to the following items, which we think ought to have been allowed to Tohlu Mal. (1) Rs. 945 interest on the mortgage-money. The mortgagors had clearly agreed to pay interest on the principal amount and both the principal and interest were made a charge on the mortgaged property. Any amount of rent, if realised, was to be deducted from the interest. According to the correct interpretation of the terms of the mortgage-deed the appellant is clearly entitled to the above item. The lower Appellate Court has held the condition as to the payment of interest to be penal. The mere fact that a high rate of interest was provided for cannot make the provision as to interest penal. There is no allegation of undue influence or fraud to make the provisions of section 16 of the Contract Act applicable. This question is settled beyond any doubt by these cases reported as Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) and Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2). The appellant is also entitled to the expenses incurred in re-constructing the portions of the shops, which had fallen down. Both according to general principles and the terms of the mortgage deed the appellant was entitled to re-construct and repair the shops in order to keep his security intact. If any authority is needed we may refer to Bhag v. Ghasita Mal (3) and section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882. The appellant has claimed Rs. 145-15-6 under the head of expenses incurred in re-constructing the portions of the shops. We find from the record that one Banna Lal was appointed a Commissioner to appraise the cost of rebuilding. From his report it appears that two walls were re-built and the shops were re-roofed by placing on the walls new rafters and beams. The Commissioner estimated the expenses to be Rs. 100. We, therefore, allow this amount on account of the expenses incurred in re-construction. The appellant is, therefore, entitled to Rs. 400 plus Rs. 945, plus Rs. 100, total Rs. 1,445. Deducting from it Rs. 428-11-6, the amount of rent received by him the balance comes to Rs. 1,016-4-6. The appellant has also claimed interest on the amount of expenses incurred, but we do not think that he is entitled to any interest in this respect. The item of Rs. 44 claimed on account of annual repairs has not been established on evidence. This item has rightly been disallowed by the Court below. As regards the costs of the redemption suit against Chint. Ram we also agree with the Court below in holding that he is not entitled to them under the terms of the mortgage-deed. We do not allow interest pendente lite, because the appellant is admittedly in possession of the shops.

Mr. Abdul Ghani, Advocate for the respondent, contended that the appellant had received more than Rs. 428 11-6 as rent, but he was unable to point out any material on the record in support of his argument. His client did not adduce any evidence to prove that the mortgagee had realised on account of rent anything more than he had admitted. We are, therefore, unable to accept this contention. We are asked to refer an issue on the point to the lower Appellate Court, but we do not think that the adoption of such a course would serve any useful purpose. There is no evidence on the record and we do not see our way to allow the plaintiff to produce additional evidence.

In view of the above remarks we allow the appeal and modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by raising the amount from Rs. 400 to Rs. 1,016 4 6 with interest at Rs. 6 per cent. We accordingly give the plaintiff a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 1,016-4-6 with interest at 6 per cent. on the decretal amount and costs of the suit, on or before the 6th April 1921. If such payment is not made on or before the date fixed, the plaintiff shall be debarred from all rights to redeem the property.

Per Macleod, C.J. and Fawcett, J. (Shah, J., dissenting).—Suits for possession of immoveable property where the plaintiff cannot succeed except by displacing an adoption, are not governed by Article 118 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 140, col. 1; p. 142, col. 1; p. 143, col. 1.]

In view of the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (1) the decision in Shrinivas v. Hanmant, (2) is no longer good law. [p. 140, col. 1; p. 142, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of Macleod, C. J., in Second Appeal No. 445 of 1920, summarily dismissing the appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 30 of 1919, confirming a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Bail Hongal, in Civil Suit No. 295 of 1907.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference made by Mr. Justice Pratt and Mr. Justice Fawcett, on the 5th August 1921.

PRATT, J.—The plaintiff is one of three co-widows of Mallappa who died in 1916.

She filed this suit in 1917 to recover possession by partition of one third share of her husband's estate.

The other two co-widows, Yellawa (defendant No. 2) and Tayawa (defendant No. 3), contended that Parshya, a son of Tayawa by a former husband, had been adopted by Mallappa in 1905. Parshya was dead, and his widow was the first defendant claiming to be sole heir through her husband.

Both the lower Courts have found that Mallappa married Parshya's mother in 1903 prior to the deed of adoption which is dated 6th December 1905. If there had been an adoption it would have been invalid, Panchappa v. Sangambasawa (1). But both the lower Courts have also found it a fact that no adoption ever took place and that the deed was a sham transaction secretly executed in order to please Tayawa.

The First Court found that the suit was not barred by limitation, as the plaintiff had no knowledge of the adoption and the lower Appellate Court seems to have concurred in that view.

In this appeal it is contended that plaintiff is affected with the knowledge that Mallappa had of the apparent adoption.

Under Article 118 the period of limitation is six years from the time when the alleged adoption becomes known to the plaintiff.

Under section 2 of the Indian Limitation Act the word 'plaintiff' includes any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue.

There can be no question but that plaintiff claims as heir of her husband and that her right to sue is derived from him. In the case of Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (2), the holder of an hereditary office was held to derive his right of suit from or through his father. Similarly, an adopted son was held to derive his liability to be sued, within the meaning of the definition of defendant, from his adoptive mother: Padaipirav v. Ramray (3). So also as to judgment-debtor and auction-purchaser: Ali Saheb v. Kaji Ahmed (4).

It follows, therefore, that if Article 118 applies, the suit is time-barred and plaintiff is deprived of her inheritance by reason of a deed of which she had no knowledge and which was never intended to be acted upon.

I think this conclusion is in itself sufficient to raise a serious doubt as to the correctness of the Full Bench ruling in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5), applying Article 118 to suits for possession where the plaintiff cannot succeed without displacing an adoption.

This rule was first laid down by the Privy Council in Jagadamba Oh odhrani v.

DODDAWA PURSHYA V. YELLAWA MALLAPPA BENT.

Dakhina Mohun Roy (6), under Article 129 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1871. That Article was as follows:—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time when period begins to run.
129. To establish or set aside an adoption.	12 years.	The date of the adoption, or (at the option of the plaintiff) the date of the death of the adoptive father.

It was not very clear what was meant by the phrase "set aside an adoption" and the Article was absurd, for, a Hindu widow had only to live twelve years after making of an adoption and the claim of the reversioner was barred unless he had taken the precaution of filing declaratory suit in her lifetime.

However, in Jagadamba's case (6) the Privy Council held that this Article applied indiscriminately to suits for a declaration and to suits for possession.

In 1877 the Specific Relief Act was passed and section 42 gave the Courts power to make declaratory decrees. Illustration (f) is as follows:—

"A Hindu widow in possession of property adopts a son to her deceased husband. The person presumptively entitled to possession of the property on her death without a son may, in a suit against the adopted son, obtain a declaration that the adoption was invalid."

The Limitation Act of 1877 was passed in the same year and for Article 129 of the Act of 1871 were substituted two Articles as follows:—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time when period begins to run.
118. To obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, or never, in fact, took place.	Six years.	When the alleged adoption becomes known to the plaintiff.
119. To obtain a declaration that an adoption is valid.	Six years.	When the rights of the adopted son, as such, are interfered with.

I think the effect of the legislation was to restrict the operation of Article 118 and 119 to purely declaratory suits such as those described in Illustration (f). The period was reduced to six years in deference to a passage in the judgment of Jagadamba's case (6) suggesting that a moderate time should be allowed for litigation of the delicate and intricate questions involved in adoption. But suits for possession even where adoptions were involved do not fall under these Articles but must be governed by the twelve years rule under Article 141. Alienations by Hindu widows give rise to questions as delicate and as intricate as adoptions. Nevertheless a suit for possession by a reversioner is governed by Article 141 even though a reversioner has filed no declaratory suit in the lifetime of the widow under Article 125 corresponding to Illustration (e) to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

After the passing of the Limitation Act, 1877 the case of Mchesh Narain v. Taruck Nath (7), was decided by the Privy Council in 1892. The facts were simple. Shib Narain died in 1850. His widow made an invalid adoption in 1850 and died in 1884. The suit was brought in 1885 by a validly adopted son for possession of the estate. It was held following Jagadamba's case (6) that the suit was barred twelve years after 1851, i.e., in 1863. Then as to the contention that the suit having been brought in 1885 limitation should be decided with reference to the Act of 1877, Lord Shand held that the right of suit barred under the Act of 1871 was not revived by the Act of 1877; and that even if the latter Act were applicable it was more than doubtful whether the plaintiff would derive any advantage.

The same points arose again in the case of Thakur Tibhuvan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameswar Bakhsh Singh (8), decided by the Privy Council in 1906. The Taluka which was the subject-matter of the suit had become the property of a lady, the Thakurain Daryao Kunwar who made the apparent adoption of the defendant in 1858 and died in 1893. The heir was the lady's brother's grandson and he filed a suit in 1899. Lord Maugham said (page 163):—

"Mr. Cohen, who argued the case with great ability, relied entirely on the Act of 1871. He contended that the Limitation Act of 1877 did not apply because the appellant relied on title acquired before the passing of the Act of 1877, and his rights were, therefore, saved by section 2 of that Act. He admitted that if the Act of 1877 applied, his client was out of Court.

"Their Lordships are unable to assent to Mr. Cohen's argument. Giving full effect to the Jagadamba's case (6) and the other cases which followed it, they do not think that the immunity, such as it is, gained by the lapse of twelve years after the date of an apparent adoption amounts to acquisition of title within the meaning of section 2 of the Act of 1877."

The obiter dictum in Mohesh Narain's case (7) that the Act of 1877 did not alter the period of limitation was treated as an obiter dictum and ignored.

Then as to section 2 of the Limitation Act of 1877, that section is as follows:—

"All references to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, shall be read as if made to this Act; and nothing herein or in that Act contained shall be deemed to affect any title acquired, or to revive any right to sue barred, under that Act or under any enactment thereby repealed."

It refers (1) to plaintiffs' right of suit, and (2) to title acquired by the defendant.

Lord Shand had said that as plaintiff had not filed a suit, which must have been a suit for declaration, his suit for possession was barred under the Act of 1871 and not revived by the Act of 1877.

Lord Maugham did not refer to the plaintiff's right of suit but said that defendant could not acquire title by omission to file a suit for a declaratory decree. But the necessary implication is that the right to sue for a declaration is distinct from the right to sue for possession, and this is directly contradictory to the ratio decidendi of Lord Shand in Mohesh Narain's case (7).

I think the only conclusion from this judgment is that the Privy Council do not mean to follow Jagadamba's case (6) and that they do not regard suits for possession as suits for declaration where an adoption is disputed as subject to the same period of limitation. Indeed their Lordships seem to have made an express declaration to that effect in the case of Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz ud din Khan (9), in the following passage:—

"Although their Lordships consider that the question of an adoption was an immaterial issue, they think it is advisable to say that the omission to bring within the period prescribed by Article 118 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid, or never, in fact, took place, is no bar to a suit like this for possession of property."

Now Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) was based largely on Jagadamba's case (6), the obiter dictum of Lord Shand in Mohesh Narain's case (7) and the other obiter dictum of the same Judge in Lachman Lal v. Kanhaya Lal (10).

I think Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) has been overruled by Thakur Tirbhawan Bahadur Singh's case (8).

But the Division Bench of this Court ruled in Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Bulwant Venkatesh (11) that Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) was not overruled.

In Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Bulwant Venkatesh (11) Chandavarkar, J. distinguishes Thakur Tirbhawan Bahadur Singh's case (8) on two grounds.

(1) The plaintiff was a minor until 1896 and brought his suit within three years of attaining majority and no knowledge could be imputed to him during his minority.

(2) The Thakurain was owner in her own right and there was no title in the adopted son till her death in 1893.

With all respect I venture to think that the first reason overlooks the fact that plaintiff claimed through his father and grandfather and must, therefore, be affected with their knowledge. And the second reason practically admits that the Act of 1877 has superseded Jagadamba's case (6). It made no difference that the Thakurain was full owner, for the next heir could still have sued for a declaration. If the Act of 1871 had been law in 1896 plaintiff could not have sued in that year to dispute an adoption of 1858. But he succeeds under the Act of 1877 because the suit he could have filed in the lifetime of the widow could only have been declaratory and the defendant had acquired no title by lapse of time. Granted—but what about plaintiff's right to sue? His right to challenge the adoption was barred already according to Jagadamba's case (6) and not revived according to Mohesh Narain's case (7)? The Privy Council do not deal with this because they consider that Article 129 of the Act of 1871 is limited to declaratory suits only.

It is true that in Malkarjun v. Narhari (12) decided by the Privy Council in 1900, Jagadamba's case (6) was quoted with approval with reference to the applicability of Article 12 (a), to suits for possession. This Article uses the same phrase "setting aside" with reference to sales that Article 129 of the Limitation Act, 1871, did with reference to adoptions. This identity of expression made a reference to Jagadamba's case (6) inevitable. But there is a distinction, for, in the first place, Courts are reluctant to disturb judicial sales and, in the second place, a sale without jurisdiction is null and void and does not affect limitation—Khiara, mal v. Daim (13) while the same principle cannot be applied to an adoption.

I venture respectfully to express dissent from Chandavarkar, J. that an obiter dictum of the Privy Council is binding on this Court [Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Balvant Venkatesh (11) supra at page 531*]. An obiter dictum is but an obiter dictum and has no authority however exalted the tribunal that utters it. There are obiter dicta on the one side in Mohesh Narain's case (7) and in Lachman Lal's case (10) and in Malkarjun v. Narhari (12) and on the other side in Muhamamad Umar Khan's case (9). But Thakur Tirbhawan Bahadur Singh's case (8) involves a decision that the right to sue for a declaration that an adoption is invalid is a different right from the right to sue for possession of property affected by the adoption.

I would, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the question whether in view of the Privy Council decision in Thakur Tirbhawan Bahadur Singh's case (8), the decision in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) is still good law and whether suits for possession where the plaintiff cannot succeed except by displacing an alleged adoption are governed by Article 118 of the Indian Limitation Act.

F. WESTROPP, J.—I agree with the proposed Reference to Full Bench. I think there are good grounds for such a reference, even though in Bharma v. Balaram Saktharam (14) a Division Bench took the same view as that taken in Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Balvant Venkatesh (11).

I was at first inclined to think that a distinction might be made between Malappa's right to sue to obtain a declaration that the alleged adoption was invalid and the right of the plaintiff, his widow. If Malappa sued, he did so because the setting up of the adoption was an infringement of Malappa's rights, as a sole owner: see Chinnosami Mudaliar v. Ambalatana Mudaliar (15). The plaintiff as his wife with contingent rights in property had, so to speak, an independent right to sue to set aside the adoption even during Malappa's lifetime. This is on the principle that any person having a right in property, whether present or contingent, is entitled to come to a Court of equity to complain of any attempt which may be made by a person having no authority to do so, to deal with the property in a mode which may ultimately harm him in the matter of his title: see Behares Lal v. Modho Lal (16). This is recognized in Illustrations (d) to (f) of section 42 of Specific Relief Act. Even before the Act was passed Westropp, O.J. laid down that the Legislature had recognised the right of a person to bring a suit to set aside an adoption as a substantive proceeding independent of any claim to property: see Kalova v. Padapa (17). But in so far as the plaintiff derives her right to sue from the fact of her having married Mallappa, it is difficult to say that the plaintiff in this case did not derive her right to sue from Mallappa within the meaning of clause (b) of section 2 of the Indian Limitation Act. This view is strengthened by the decision in Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (18) that, where there are several reversioners entitled successively under Hindu Law to an estate held by a Hindu widow, no one of them derives his right to sue from the other, even though that other happens to be his father, but he derives his title from the last full owner. No doubt the definition in section 2 only applies "unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or the context." But I do not think there is anything in Article 118 which brings the case under this exception. Accordingly it seems to me that the appellants are right in their contention that the plaintiff is affected by the knowledge of Mallappa, and a case like this shows the absurdity that can arise from the view taken in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5).

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. Nilkant's Atmaram), for the Appellants,

Mr. G. N. Thakor for Mr. H. B. Gumaste and Mr. J. G. Relc, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

MACLEOD, C. J.—One Mallappa Tammappa died in 1916 leaving three widows and no children. The plaintiff, one of the widows, sued her co-widows for partition. They were made defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The first defendant was the son of defendant No. 3 by her first husband. The defendants' answer was that Mallappa had adopted the first defendant in 1905 before he married defendant No. 3. The widows, therefore, were not the heirs of Mallappa. Defendant No. 1 had died after suit leaving a widow. The suit being brought more than six years after the adoption was barred by limitation. The issues in the Trial Court were:

(1) Is it proved that the deceased first defendant was adopted by Mallappa?

(2) Is it proved that this adoption was before the re-marriage of defendant No. 3 to Mallappa?

(3) If not, is the adoption valid?

(4) Is the suit in time under Article 118 of the Limitation Act?

(18) 22 A. 33; A. W. N. (1899) 159, 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1054.

The Trial Judge decided—

(1) that though Mallappa executed an adoption-deed, no adoption took place;

(2) that defendant No. 3 was married to Mallappa in 1903;

(3) that the adoption, if it had taken place in 1905, was invalid;

(4) that, as no adoption was proved and the passing of the adoption deed was kept secret, the plaintiff had no knowledge of any claim by the adopted son more than six years before suit.

Accordingly a decree for partition was passed.

In first appeal the learned Judge agreed with the Trial Judge that no adoption had taken place. He thought that the issue of limitation was unnecessary, and, if it was, he was prepared to agree with the Trial Judge. A second appeal was dismissed under Order XLI, rule 11, but an appeal under the Letters Patent having been admitted, it came on for argument before Pratt and Fawcett, JJ.

Those learned Judges were of opinion that as under section 2 of the Indian Limitation Act the word 'plaintiff' included any person from or through whom a plaintiff derived his right to sue, and the plaintiff claimed as heir of her husband, she was affected with the knowledge of the alleged adoption.

It would follow that if Article 118 of the Indian Limitation Act applied, the suit was barred, because Mallappa had executed an adoption-deed which he never intended to be acted upon and of which plaintiff had no knowledge.

That such a conclusion would be possible would follow from the Full Bench decision of this Court in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) and the learned Judges were of opinion that so startling a result necessarily raised in their minds the doubt whether that decision was correct.

It would be all the more startling considering the peculiar facts of this case, for it has been found that Mallappa pacified the demands of defendant No. 3 that provision should be made for her son by her first husband by secretly executing a deed purporting to evidence an adoption, which had never taken place, and which he must have known would be invalid if it had been made.

DODDABA PURSHYA v. YELLAWA MALLAPPA BENI.

The decision in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) was to this effect, that where a plaintiff in a suit for possession of property is met by the claim of a defendant setting up a title as an adopted son, the plaintiff's suit is barred unless it is brought within six years of the date when the alleged adoption became known to the plaintiff.

The question referred to us is whether in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (8) the decision in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) is still good law, and whether suits for possession where the plaintiff cannot succeed except by displacing an alleged adoption are governed by Article 118 of the Indian Limitation Act.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider the facts of Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh's case (8) since Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) was not mentioned in the judgment, and it can only be said to have been overruled, if at all, by implication. Thakur Basant Singh was the last male owner of the Taluqa of Samarpaha. He died in November 1857 leaving his widow as his next heir. Thereafter a Sanad was granted to the widow and she became Taluqdar in her own right. She died intestate in 1893. The estate was claimed by Thakur Sher Bahadur as her son adopted after her husband's death. The plaintiff who attained majority in 1896 filed the suit in 1897 claiming to succeed as the grandson of the widow's eldest brother. Both the lower Courts held in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal to the Privy Council it was argued that in any event there was an apparent adoption sufficient to satisfy the provisions of the Limitation Act of 1871 as interpreted by the Privy Council in Jagadamba Chaudhrani v. Dakhina Mohun (6). It was admitted that if the Act of 1877 applied, the appellant-defendant had no case but it was argued that as the appellant relied on title acquired before the Act of 1877 was passed, his rights were saved by section 2 of the Act of 1877.

That section is as follows:—

"All references to the Indian Limitation Act, 1871, shall be read as if made to this Act; and nothing herein or in that Act contained shall be deemed to affect any title acquired, or to revive any right to sue barred, under that Act or under any enactment thereby repealed."

Their Lordships said at page 163* :—

"Their Lordships are unable to assent to Mr. Cohen's argument. Giving full effect to the Jagadamba's case (6) and the other cases which followed it, they do not think that the immunity, such as it is, gained by the lapse of twelve years after the date of an apparent adoption amounts to acquisition of title within the meaning of section 2 of the Act of 1877."

To appreciate the full meaning of the decisive passage of the judgment it will be necessary to follow the history of the case in the lower Courts and the arguments of Counsel before the Privy Council.

In the Trial Court it was argued that the suit was barred by Article 118, Schedule II, of the Limitation Act of 1877 as the adoption of the defendant became known to the plaintiff and his ancestors more than six years before the institution of the suit. After referring to Jagadamba's case (6) and Mohesh Narain v. Taru's Nath (7) the learned Judge said (page 158*): "The above decisions were given with reference to Article 129 of the old Act of 1871... It is contended on behalf of the defendant that the principle enunciated in the above rulings is applicable to cases governed by the existing law." Then after referring to Parvathi Ammal v. Sannatha Gurukul (19) and Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) which adopted that view, and the numerous decisions to the contrary, he continued (page 158*): "There seems to be a consensus of opinion in most of the High Courts that Article 118 of the present Act does not apply to suits for possession and I do not think we are justified in departing from it without the distinct authority of the Privy Council." The Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh concurred in this view. Before the Privy Council Mr. Cohen argued for the appellant that Act IX of 1871 applied, and, as the suit had been filed within the time fixed by Article 129 of the Schedule to that Act, the validity of the adoption could not be questioned in the plaintiff's suit. The principle laid down in Jagadamba's case (6) that when a suit to set aside an adoption was barred, so also was any suit which in order to succeed must first get rid of the adoption applied equally to Article 118 of the Schedule II to the Act of 1877. Mr. De Gruyther for the respondent argued that the suit was governed by Article 143 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877. Article 118 differed in its terms from Article 129 of the earlier Act and did not apply to a suit for possession. There had been no acquisition of title by the appellant in virtue of an apparent adoption within the meaning of section 2 of the Act of 1877. Nor could it be laid down under Act XV of 1877 that a plaintiff must sue for a declaratory decree before suing for possession, and that his suit for possession was barred if a declaratory action was barred.

It will be seen, therefore, that the appellant, though he mainly relied on the contention that he had acquired a title under the Act of 1871, and that title was preserved by section 2 of the Act of 1877, also contended that the principle laid down in cases under Article 129 of the Act of 1871 applied to cases under Article 118 of the Act of 1877 and that the suit was barred on that ground, Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) being relied upon in Mr. Cohen's reply. No doubt the suggestion that the immunity gained by the appellant by the lapse of six years, without a declaratory suit being filed, amounted to acquisition of title was too fanciful to demand any attention. It would seem, therefore, obvious to me that their Lordships having before them all the arguments which have been raised before us in this reference on behalf of the appellant deliberately adopted the contrary view as contended for by the respondents.

And as if that had not been made sufficiently clear in the judgment, their Lordships in Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz ud din Khan (9) referred to Thakur Tirbhuvain Bahadur Singh's case (8) as laying down that the omission to bring within the period prescribed by Article 118 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877 a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid or never in fact took place was no bar to a suit for possession of property. A Division Bench of this Court in Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Balwant Venkatesh (11) came to the conclusion that the decision in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) had not been overruled by the Privy Council. The referring judgment of Pratt, J., analyses the reason given for that conclusion and points out the fallacies which underlie them. As a matter of fact when the Court was of opinion that the adoption of the defendant was valid the question of limitation became academic. I shall not discuss in detail the reasons given by the learned Judges, for I agree with what has been said by Pratt, J. I have already pointed out that their Lordships of the Privy Council, having all the arguments before them which have been from time to time raised in this Court, came to a conclusion absolutely inconsistent with those reasons, and I see no object in referring to various passages in the judgments in other cases as showing that their Lordships could not have meant what they said in Thakur Tirbhuvain Bahadur Singh's case (8). What their Lordships did mean is clearly enunciated in Muhammad Umar Khan's case (9). Whatever the nature of the adoption in that case and whatever its effect might be on the status of the person adopted, it was an adoption within the meaning of the word in Article 118 of Act XV of 1877, and if it was set up as a defense to a suit for possession, the omission to bring a declaratory suit within six years was no bar to the suit for possession. I think the question can also be considered from another point of view. The Limitation Act is an Act for the limitation of suits, prescribing the period within which suits asking for various reliefs can be brought. In a suit for possession on title, the only answer by the defendants which can be successful is a better title than that proved by the plaintiff, and such a title may be obtained by adverse possession. An adoption may be the origin of such a title being acquired, but the defendant may succeed in his title by adverse possession and not by virtue of his adoption. But if his title depends on adoption apart from the question of adverse possession, he may succeed by proving his adoption and the question of the limitation of plaintiff's suit does not arise, provided it is brought within the period prescribed for the particular suit he has brought. For the plaintiff is in the position of a defendant when he is resisting a claim by adoption and there is no bar of limitation to a defense. The mere fact that an adoption alleged to have taken place is not challenged does not set time running in favour of the adopted son, so that he may acquire a title unless he is in possession. Then if he is sued he can either say 'I have been in possession for twelve years' or 'I am an adopted son and I have a better title than the plaintiff.' It is then open to the plaintiff to say 'your adoption as a matter of fact never took place or, if it did, it is invalid.'

Lastly, I may refer to the following decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, Ram Chandra Mukerjee v. Ranjit Singh (20), Natthu Singh v. Gulab Singh (21), Velaga Mangamma v. Bandlamudi Veerayya (22), which are opposed to the view taken by this Court in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5). The judgment in Velaga Mangamma v. Bandlamudi Veerayya (22) shows that the learned Judges were clearly of opinion that the Privy Council in Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh's case (8) overruled the view that a suit for possession where the validity of an adoption has to be determined is governed by Article 118 of the Act of 1877.

I would, therefore, answer both parts of the question referred to us in the negative.

SHAH, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is whether in view of the Privy Council decision in Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh's case (8) the decision in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) is still good law and whether suits for possession where the plaintiff cannot succeed except by displacing an alleged adoption are governed by Article 118 of the Limitation Act.

My answer is that Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) is not overruled by Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh's case (8) that it is still good law in this Presidency, and that Article 118 would apply to suits for possession where there is a title by adoption to be displaced to the extent indicated in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5).

We are not concerned in this reference with the questions whether on the finding of the lower Appellate Court the rule in (20) 27 C. 242; 4 C. W. N. 405; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 160.

(21) 17 A. 167; A. W. N. (1895) 36; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 433.

(22) 30 M. 303; 2 M. L. T. 178; 17 M. L. J. 182.

Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) is applicable to the present case and whether on those facts the suit would be barred under Article 118. I express no opinion thereon as they are points for the Division Bench to decide.

I desire to state briefly my reasons for the answer to the question referred to us.

In the first place in Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Bameshar Bakhsh Singh (8) their Lordships do not in terms purport to overrule Jagadamba Chaudhrani v. Dakhina Mohan Roy (6), and the other cases which followed it, among which the case of Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) must be included. That case was decided on the ground taken by the Counsel for the appellant whether the alleged adoption was or was not an apparent adoption to which the ruling in Jagadamba's case (6) would apply if the Act of 1871 were then in force. Their Lordships hold in that case that giving full effect to Jagadamba's case (6) and the other cases which followed it they do not think that the immunity, such as it is, gained by the lapse of twelve years after the date of an apparent adoption, amounts to acquisition of title within the meaning of section 2 of the Act of 1877. That is the point which they decided and I am slow to accept the view that if their Lordships meant to overrule Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5), they would have left it to implication as to which there is so much doubt and difficulty. In other words unless the implication is clear, I think that it would not be right to treat the decision in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) as overruled.

I do not think that the implication is by any means clear. The suggested implication is based upon the consideration that it was conceded in the argument by the Counsel for the appellant in that case that the Act of 1877 did not apply, and admitted that he was out of Court if the Act of 1877 applied. The difficulty of inferring from this circumstance that their Lordships meant to overrule Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) is clear from the judgment in Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Balvant Venkatesh (11), followed in Bharma v. Balaram Sakharam (14). I do not for the moment say anything as to the correctness of the view accepted in these two decisions as regards the effect of the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh's case (8).

DODDAWA PURSHYA V. YELLAWA MALLAPPA BENI.

But the implication, such as it is, is by no means so clear as to give rise to no doubt or difficulty. Where that is the case I do not think that it is right to treat a Full Bench decision or any decision as overruled by implication.

Secondly, on the merits I feel by no means clear that their Lordships meant to overrule Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5). The adoption in that case was not the ordinary adoption which, according to the Hindu Law, gives title but it was really a nomination of an heir and an adoption only in the popular sense. It is possible that that circumstance may have influenced the Counsel for the appellant in taking up the position with reference to the Act of 1877 that he did. Then the facts in that case were so special that I think it is entirely unsafe to hold that because it was admitted in that case that if the Act of 1877 applied, the defendant was out of Court, their Lordships meant to overrule Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5). It is possible to attribute that admission to other grounds and after giving the point my best attention, I am unable to hold that in view of Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh's case (8), Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) should be treated as overruled.

I do not think that the observations in Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-din Khan (9), which have been relied upon, have any such effect. Those observations were made in a case in which the parties were Muhammadans and their Lordships distinctly point out that under the general Muhammadan Law an adoption cannot be made; an adoption if made in fact by a Muhammadan could carry with it no right of inheritance. The preceding observations relating to Article 118 are applicable to a suit for possession like the one which their Lordships had to deal with in that case in which an alleged adoption carried with it no right of inheritance; at least the observations are capable of being read in that sense, and were read in that sense in Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Balvant Venkatesh (11). It is significant that in Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh's case (8) their Lordships had to deal with an adoption in the popular sense and not one which would carry with it any title to property, and the reference to that case in Muhammad Umar Khan's case (9) when looked at in the light of the context is capable of being read in that sense.

Thus, on the whole, it is clear to my mind that Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) cannot be treated as overruled and must be accepted as good law.

As regards the second part of the question I admit that it is desirable that there should be uniformity in the decisions on a point of this character as far as possible in different High Courts and it is clear that the other High Courts have not accepted the view taken in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5). That, however, is a general consideration of importance but necessarily of limited application. I do not think that it would be right to disturb a rule of limitation affecting titles to property, deliberately laid down so far back as 1899, and consistently followed during all these years in this Presidency on such a general ground. It seems to me that the main purpose of this reference is to settle the question as to whether Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) is overruled by the decision in Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh's case (8) and not to invite a re-consideration of the decision of the Full Bench in that case. It seems to me that the final word on this point must come either from the Legislature or from the Privy Council. We are informed that the question as to the correctness of Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) arises in an appeal from this Court to the Privy Council, which has been admitted, and in which the point is likely to be decided. The present state of the decisions is embarrassing to those whose rights are affected by the application of the rule in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5).

I do not consider it necessary to re-examine the whole subject with a view to consider whether Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) has been rightly decided. Under the circumstances I think that the rule in that case should be applied so far as it may be applicable to the facts of any particular case.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice that both parts of the question referred to the Full Bench should be answered in the negative. I concur generally in his reasons and will abstain from adding to the great quantity of literature on the point, in which the arguments pro and con are fully stated. In brief, I believe that the Privy Council did intend in Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh's case (8) to decide the point that had been fully argued before them, whether the principle of Jagadamba's case (6) was applicable to cases governed by the Limitation Act of 1877, Article 118. I think, therefore, that we should fall into line with all the other High Courts in India, and cease to give effect to the view taken in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5).

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 15th May 1916, confirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 31st March 1915.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant.

Sardar Sewa Ram Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and the defendant in this case are brothers. The plaintiff sues for specific performance of an agreement to sell a house for Rs. 1,100. The plaint begins by reciting that the house was sold by defendant to plaintiff for Rs. 1,100 on the 30th of August 1914, that it was agreed that half of the sale price should be paid in advance and the remaining half within a year, that Rs. 100 were paid by plaintiff and were placed in deposit with Ganesha Singh and as the remaining Rs. 450 payable in advance was to be paid on the following day, a ruqz was obtained from the defendant and also entrusted to Ganesha Singh, and it was also agreed that a formal deed of sale would be executed and registered. The plaint goes on to say that as the defendant refused to take the remaining money and to execute a regular sale-deed, the plaintiff prays for specific performance of the contract and for possession of the house. The defendant denies having agreed to sell the house and pleads that the execution of the ruqz was obtained when he was in a state of intoxication. The lower Courts have held that the defendant executed the ruqz and that though unregistered it is admissible in evidence. Accordingly they have decreed the claim relying on the ruqz and on the oral evidence which has been produced in the case. The ruqz in question runs as follows:

Bais tahrir anke jo ke ek manzil makan meh ek kothri bairuni wa ek kothri andruni wa sahan jo mushtaraka haveli Baba Autar Singh baradar haqiqi ka hai woh makan bamqabla mublig' gayara so rupiya se baigrar i zabani badast Baba Autar Singh baradar haqiqi khud bai kar diya hai. Zar-i-saman usqul imroza panch so pachas wasul kar liya hai aur panch so pachas rupiya baki khatamen raqamtah: irkaraliyehain. Goya ainda kisi kisim ka daw: dakhil makan mezkur ke sth mera nahin rahz. hzi. (For translation see judgment of the First Court). On behalf of the defendant-appellant it is urged that this document cannot be admitted in evidence for want of registration. In our opinion this plea is perfectly correct. Even if it does not fall under section 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act, it certainly falls under section 17 (1) (c) being a non-testamentary instrument acknowledging the receipt of consideration on account of extinction of a title of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards in immoveable property. The ruqz clearly acknowledges receipt of Rs. 550.

PARMESHRI DEVI O. AUTAR SINGH,

in cash and winds up by saying "I have no claim left in the house." Therefore, whether the Rs. 560 were paid or not, the document clearly falls under section 17 (1) (c). But it is necessary for us to go further and to consider whether the ruqa in itself amounts to a deed of sale. If it does, then it is a case of the terms of a contract having been reduced to the form of a document, and not only the ruqa itself must be excluded from evidence for want of registration, but also by reason of section 91 of the Evidence Act no other evidence of the sale can be admitted. Now, the ruqa begins by stating that the writer has orally sold the house to his brother for Rs. 1,100. The oral evidence is, no doubt, to the effect that the sale was first agreed on verbally, that the ruqa was then written and that the agreement between the parties was that a formal sale-deed would be subsequently executed and registered. The ruqa was written on a Sunday, so it was impossible to register a regular sale deed on that day. The ruqa was only obtained from the defendant in order to prevent him from backing out of his bargain. The terms of a sale are almost invariably arrived at in the course of verbal negotiations. In some cases nothing is written at all and the sale remains simply a verbal one; in other cases, however, a sale deed is written, which may or may not require registration according to the value of the immovable property dealt with. If the immovable property exceeds Rs. 100 in value and the deed is not registered, then in the event of the factum of the sale being denied by the vendor the vendee is debarred from proving the sale either by the deed or by any other evidence. In some cases, however, when the terms have been fixed, the owner executes an agreement promising to sell and in that case the would-be purchaser is in a good position to sue for specific performance. Such a document merely promising to sell does not require registration. Now, the present document is certainly not a promise to sell; it does not in terms make any promise to sell and it does not, as such documents frequently do, make any reference to a sale deed to be executed at some future date. It simply recites the fact that the sale has already been made and that Rs. 550 cash have already been received and that an entry has been made in a bahi regarding the remaining Rs. 550. Such a document following immediately after the terms of the sale have been verbally agreed upon, in our opinion, constitutes a sale deed, and had plaintiff sued on that document for possession as vendee, we do not see any obstacle to his getting a decree except the want of registration. Now, if the document in question be a sale-deed, the mere want of registration will not make it anything less than a sale-deed. As has already been stated the oral evidence tendered goes to show that the object of getting the ruqa executed was to prevent the defendant from backing out of his agreement in case he afterwards refused to execute and register a formal deed of sale. So the plaintiff got the defendant to execute a document which was, in our opinion, the terms of a contract reduced to writing. No doubt the plaintiff did not realise that in the event of the defendant refusing to register a regular sale-deed the plaintiff would be placed in a difficult position being unable to produce in evidence an unregistered document and being debarred by section 91 of the Evidence Act from producing oral evidence in proof of the sale. But the fact remains that the document was written and, in our opinion it is nothing less than a sale deed. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent it is urged that there is no completed sale because the document was entrusted to a third person and was not handed over to the plaintiff, but it is the execution of the deed which completes the sale, and Counsel has been unable to quote any authority to the effect that title does not change until the sale deed has been not only executed but actually handed over to the vendee. It is also urged that the ruqa is a mere memorandum. Looking, however, to the terms of the deed we cannot regard it as a mere memorandum. The terms are clear and say expressly that the house has been sold and that the vendor's title has ceased. The ruqa is not only executed by the defendant but is also witnessed by no less than seven persons. It is further urged that the ruqa cannot be regarded as a sale deed because it does not contain all the terms of the sale and does not give the boundaries or other particulars of the property sold. Now, when a house is sold it may perhaps be necessary in case of doubt to admit oral evidence in order to show which particular house has been sold, but in this case neither side has alleged that there was any doubt as to which house was the subject of the ruqz, and we cannot see that the mere omission to give the boundaries or any other particulars as to the house in question makes the document other than a deed of sale. As to the terms of the sale no doubt the ruqz states incorrectly that Rs. 550 have already been paid in cash; but an incorrect statement on this point does not alter the nature of the document. The only other term which appears to be wanting in the ruqz is that it is not stated within what period the remainder of the money is to be paid. This, however, is a matter merely affecting the payment of the consideration, but in the case of a sale there is no ground for saying that title does not pass until the full consideration is paid.

We hold, then, as regards the contract between the parties that it was not merely an agreement to sell but an actual contract of sale and that the plaintiff cannot, therefore, sue for specific performance of an agreement to sell. Further the plaintiff cannot be allowed to turn round and plead that he should be allowed to take possession as vendee under a completed sale, because the sale is denied and the plaintiff is debarred from proving it, the deed itself being inadmissible for want of registration and other evidence being barred by the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act. We, therefore, accept the appeal and reversing the decision of the lower Courts we dismiss the suit, but as it appears to us that the defendant has behaved very badly we leave the parties to bear their own costs in all Courts.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 18, 25, 24 (1)—Hindu widow—Claim for compensation at certain rate—Reversioners, whether can claim at higher rate—Land, valuation of—"Applicant," meaning of.

Although under section 25 of the Land Acquisition Act claimants and their legal representatives are estopped from getting more from the Judge than what they claimed before the Collector, the reversioners of a Hindu widow, not being the legal representatives of the widow, are not bound by her acts on any principle of estoppel and can claim compensation at a higher rate. [p. 147, col. 1.]

The purpose for which land has been acquired is an element for consideration in estimating its value, though under section 24 (1) the Court is precluded from considering the increase of its value likely to arise from the use to which it will be put. [p. 147, col. 1.]

The word "applicant" in section 25 is used to describe the person who puts in a written application under section 18 for having his objection to the Collector's award referred for determination by a Civil Court. He is not necessarily identical with the person who makes a claim after notice under section 9. [p. 147, col. 1.]

Appeal against the award of the District Court, Guntur, dated the 10th January 1920, in Original Petition No. 35 of 1918.

Mr. V. Visvanatha Sastri, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, Government Pleader for Referring Officer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Acquiring Officer awarded compensation at the rate of Rs. 1,200 an acre. The widow Durgamma to whom the northern part of Survey No. 575 belonged at the time claimed at the rate of Rs. 1,400 an acre. After she had surrendered the estate to her husband's reversioners they claimed Rs. 2½ a square yard, but the District Judge held that he was precluded by section 25 (1) of Act I of 1894 from awarding a higher amount than that claimed by the widow. In appeal the reversioners ask to be compensated at the rate of Rs. 2½ a square yard.

Upon the question of law, we are of opinion that section 25 was designed with the purpose of holding claimants to their own bargains and of preventing demands being increased at every stage from the Collector to the High Court. The word 'applicant' in this section is used to describe the person who puts in a written application under section 18 for having his objection to the Collector's award referred for determination by a Civil Court. He is not necessarily identical with the person who makes a claim after notice under section 9. All that section 18 requires is that he should be a person interested who has not accepted the award, and a "person interested" is defined in section 3 as including every person claiming an interest in compensation to be made on account of the acquisition. Under section 25 claimants are estopped from getting more from the Judge than what they claimed before the Collector, and on the same principle their legal representatives would, no doubt, be bound. But although a widow represents her deceased husband's estate for certain purposes and has limited powers of disposal over it, the reversioners are not her legal representatives nor are they bound by her acts on any principle of estoppel. The Judge, therefore, should not have considered his award as limited to the amount claimed before the Acquiring Officer. On the question of fact which is what is the market rate which the plots acquired would fetch at a fair computation, we are of opinion that 8 annas a square yard which is the rate awarded by the District Judge is too low. This land though hitherto used for wet cultivation is surrounded on all sides by lands which have been built upon and it will be suitable for building sites as soon as the level has been raised. In fact the purpose for which it has been acquired is the extension of the village site and this is an element for consideration in estimating its value, though under section 24 (1) the Court is precluded from taking into consideration the increase of its value likely to arise from the use to which it will be put.

Now, from among the multitude of transactions of which the documents filed in this and the connected case afford evidence, if we exclude evidence of transactions that are not sufficiently recent to be a guide to prices prevailing at the present time, since there is ample proof that prices have arisen enormously in the last 30 years; if we exclude also evidence of sales of portions of the regular village site which adjoin other properties of the purchasers; if we exclude transfers of lands with houses, wells or crops standing on them when the value of the superstructures or crops is unknown or uncertain; also Inam lands, with roads or lanes on them, lands in bad localities such as those which adjoin cemeteries or madigas' quarters or are far distant from other habitations, and plots of small dimensions which are of little use for determining the value of big blocks, and then take an average of the prices at which lands in the neighbourhood of the land acquired have been selling within the last ten years, we find that the average price, judged from the evidence of documents that are not open to any serious objection, such as Exhibits EE, KK, BB, S, T, F and II works out approximately to one rupee a square yard.

From this has to be deducted the cost of raising the level by $1\frac{1}{2}$ yards. The second witness for Government estimated this cost at 7 or 8 annas a yard, but this appears to be rather high as the claimant's second witness puts it at 2 annas a yard and their first witness at 6 annas a yard or 2 annas for every half yard that is raised. In paragraph 16 of his judgment the District Judge states that it will cost from 4 to 6 annas a square yard to raise the level but in the schedule both he and the Acquiring Officer allow Rs. 3.95 cent for raising the level by $\frac{3}{4}$ yard and this works out to 2 annas a square yard for raising the level by $1\frac{1}{2}$ yards. Adopting a mean rate of 4 annas a square yard for raising the level of the land acquired by $1\frac{1}{2}$ yards to make it fit for building purposes and subtracting this amount from the average value, we arrive at a valuation of 12 annas a square yard and the amount of the District Judge's award will be increased accordingly for all the lands concerned in this appeal with interest and proportionate costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Members holding land in specified shares—Specific shares entered in Revenue Records—Separation.

Where one member of a Hindu family, in a suit to contest an alienation by another member of his share in the family property, admits in the plaint that the property was held by the members of the family in certain specific shares, such admission, coupled with an entry in the Revenue Records that the property was held in equal shares by the members of the family, is evidence of a separation having taken place between such members, and is inconsistent with the position that the property was held by the members of the family as co-parceners, for until partition takes place the shares of the several co-parceners in a joint Hindu family cannot be defined.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 10th January 1921, varying that of the Munsif, First Class, Delhi, dated the 31st May 1920.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Appellant.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Plaintiffs-Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit belonged to the plaintiffs and their brother Khiali. In 1908 Khiali mortgaged it, during the plaintiffs' minority, to the defendant Data Ram with possession for Rs. 350 and in the following year sold his one third share to him. The plaintiffs sue for possession, contesting the validity of the alienations.

The First Court passed a decree for possession subject to the payment of Rs. 40. On the defendant's appeal the District Judge held the mortgage to be valid to the extent of Rs. 235, but also held that the plaintiffs followed Hindu Law, that the family was joint, and that Khiali was not competent to effect the sale, which was not for family purposes. He altered the decree to one for possession of the land on payment of Rs. 235, and at the same time declared the sale to be invalid.

The defendant has preferred a second appeal, contending that Khiali was competent to alienate his share of the land inasmuch as (1) the land is entered in the Revenue Records as held by Khiali and the plaintiffs in equal shares, and (2) it is admitted in the plaint that the land is so held by them.

It has been held in Gajender Singh v. Sardar Singh (1) and Nageshar Bakhs Singh v. Ganesha (2) that a definition of shares in revenue papers is not, standing alone, sufficient evidence of a separation between the members of a Hindu family. But in the present case there is, in addition to the entry in the Revenue Records, the clear admission of the plaintiffs in their plaint that they and their brother owned the land in equal shares, and that admission, which the lower Appellate Court has overlooked, is inconsistent with the position that they held the land as co-parceners, for until partition takes place the shares of the several co-parceners in a joint Hindu family cannot be defined. It is urged on behalf of the respondents that the defendant did not plead that there had been a partition, but it was not necessary for him to raise the plea when the plaintiffs by specifying the shares in which they and Khiali owned the land, had tacitly admitted that a severance of the joint status had taken place.

The appellants' contention is, therefore, correct. As Khiali's share in the land was defined he was competent to alienate it without any restriction on the part of his brothers. The sale in 1909 was valid, and the plaintiffs are entitled only to possession of their two-thirds share in the land which was mortgaged in 1908 on payment of the amount which has been found to be a valid charge.

I accept the appeal and alter the decree to one for possession of $\frac{2}{3}$ rd of the land in suit on payment of Rs. 235 to the appellant. The plaintiffs-respondents will pay the appellants' costs in this Court, but the parties will bear their own costs in the Court below.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 20th February 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Fatikchhari, dated the 10th of January 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Paresk Nath Sen, for the Appellant.—The substantial question relates to the appeal preferred by defendant No. 5. The land in dispute was described both in the plaint as well as in the Settlement Khatian as a non-occupancy holding. So there was no justification for the lower Appellate Court's conclusion that it was an occupancy holding. And if it was a non-occupancy holding it could not be sold in execution of a rent-decree. Refers to sections 65 and 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. My next contention is that defendant No. 6 through whom the plaintiff claims got only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor at the execution sale. The interest of the heirs of the recorded tenant who were not made parties to the execution proceedings, cannot be affected by the sale. Refers to Ashok Bhuiyan v. Karim Bepari (1), Jogattara Dassya v. Daulati Bewa (2) and Faizannessa v. Gaganeswari (3). Lastly, the lower Appellate Court should have held that defendant No. 5 had a protected interest.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar (with him Babu Priya Nath Dutt for Babu Narendra Kumar Das), for the Respondents.—It is not impossible that a non-occupancy holding should become an occupancy holding by lapse of time, even non-occupancy holdings can be sold for arrears of rent. See Ohandra B'nole Kundu v. Sheikh Ala Bux (4). The question of protected interest is a finding of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal.

Babu Paresk Nath Sen replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 5 and 9 against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong modifying a decision of the Munsif. The plaintiff sued alleging that the land mentioned in the plaint was a non-occupancy holding belonging to defendant No. 6 which he purchased at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, the purchase being dated the 7th of April 1915. The Munsif decreed the suit and allowed khas possession. There was an appeal preferred against the Munsif's decision by defendants Nos. 5, 9, 19, 20 and 21. The learned Subordinate Judge held that defendants Nos. 9, 19, 20 and 21 had protected interests but that defendant No. 5 had no protected interest. So far as defendant No. 9 is concerned the only question that arises is with regard to the form of the decree. What the learned Subordinate Judge in the lower Appellate Court held was that, so far as defendant No. 9 was concerned, no decree for khas possession was to be made in respect of the plots which this defendant claimed in the written statement. Now, the plots which he claimed in his written statement are seven in number 146, 156, 1437, 1422/1468, 11884/4431, 149 and 1427 and the only one of these dags which is mentioned in the decree, so far as defendant No. 9 is concerned, is dag No. 1437, the other dags being omitted. It seems to us that this must, having regard to the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge have been a mistake.

A cross-objection has been preferred as against defendant No. 9 but this has not been pressed before us. Accordingly, so far as defendant No. 9 is concerned the appeal must succeed and the decree will be so far as he is concerned that the plaintiff will not be entitled to khas possession of any of the plots mentioned in his written statement, the numbers of which we have already given.

The plaintiff also preferred a cross-objection against defendants Nos. 19, 20 and 21. This cross-objection clearly cannot lie as against these persons and must be dismissed without costs as defendants Nos. 19 and 20 do not appear and the minor heirs of defendant No. 21, represented by the Deputy Registrar of this Court, are the only persons before us.

We now come to the real substance of the appeal, namely, the appeal of defendant No. 5. On his behalf three points have been urged before us. First, it is said that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the land which, both in the Settlement Khotian and in the plaint, was described as "non-occupancy" had become an occupancy holding and that, assuming he was wrong in so holding, there could be no sale of a non-occupancy holding in execution of a rent-decree. The second point urged is that the defendant No. 6, through whom the plaintiff claims, did not by virtue of his purchase get the entire holding, it being urged that as the heirs of Sadak Ali who was one of the recorded tenants in 1906 were not brought on the record after Sadak Ali's death their interest was not bound by the decree. The third point urged is that the defendant No. 5 had a protested interest.

So far as the third point is concerned this has not been pressed before us in view of the finding of fact contained in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

So far as the 1st point is concerned it is said that the Subordinate Judge has based his finding merely upon an assumption. What he says is this—the Survey operation in Chittagong commenced in the year 1892 or 1893; that inasmuch as in the finally published Record of Rights the *raiya*s are recorded as non-occupancy *raiya*s they must by the year 1906, when the lands were sold to defendant No. 3, have acquired occupancy rights. Certainly the mere fact that you find in the finally published Record of Rights in 1898 a name recorded does not necessarily mean that the same persons as were recorded in 1898 were on the land in 1892 or 1893 or 1894, which is the critical year. But as the Munsif has pointed out the sale in 1903 was based upon a vesting a valid title in defendant No. 6 (through whom the plaintiff claims) and the tenants raised no objection at the time of the sale in 1906. We think, therefore, that taking into consideration all these matters it was possible to arrive at the conclusion that those who were non-occupancy *raiya*s had by lapse of time obtained occupancy rights and that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding as he did, that the *raiya*s had occupancy rights in the land. This being so the question as to whether a non-occupancy holding can be brought to sale in execution of a rent-decree does not arise for our decision in the present case.

So far as the second point is concerned, it does not seem to us that this has been satisfactorily disposed of by the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The learned Vakil for the appellant, defendant No. 5, quite rightly says that it is not sufficient for the learned Subordinate Judge to say that defendant No. 5 has not established his title. It was for the plaintiff in proceedings of this nature to establish his title to the land and if he has failed to do so the failure of defendant No. 5 to establish his title cannot affect the position. Now, it is clear that Sadak Ali was a recorded tenant in 1906 and also prior to that year. It is clear that he died before the auction-purchase of defendant No. 6. It is also clear that his heirs were not made parties in the execution proceedings as they ought to have been and this being so it seems to us that Sadak Ali's heirs were not bound by the sale in 1906 and a fortiori they were not bound by the sale to the plaintiff in 1915. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the Suit No. 184 of 1912 was not a litigation between the parties, therefore, the decision of that suit is not binding upon the parties to the present litigation. Now, that is quite true, but the certified copy of the judgment which was produced shows that the facts were as we have stated. This being so, the interest of Sadak Ali's heirs was not affected by the sale in 1903 or by the subsequent purchase in 1915 by the plaintiff. Defendant No. 5 claims to be the purchaser from heirs of Sadak Ali, accordingly he is entitled to such rights as Sadak Ali's heirs possessed at the date of the sale to defendant No. 5.

In the results so far as defendant No. 5 is concerned this appeal must succeed, and we reverse that portion of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and of the Munsif which affects his interest and the case is sent back to the Court of first instance in order that the Munsif may hold an enquiry to ascertain what portion of the land in suit belonged to the heirs of Sadak Ali and the plaintiff's suit must fail against defendant No. 5 in respect of the land so found on the enquiry.

It is stated to us that the dags whose numbers appear in the judgment and which we have held belong to defendant No. 9 are held by him and defendant No. 8 his brother jointly. Nothing contained in the judgment must be deemed to throw any doubt on the interest of defendant No. 8 in those dags.

The appellants will be entitled to their costs in all Courts from the plaintiff-respondent. The suit as against defendant No. 5 must stand dismissed.

Dekkhani Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 12, 13.—Account.—Amount due under bond.—Larger amount cannot be awarded as result of account.

A debtor, owing to his seeking the relief afforded by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, should not be made to pay more than he is obliged to pay according to the terms of his bond.

Appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Bijapur, in Suit No. 69 of 1916.

Mr. Jinnah (with him Mr. H. B. Gurnaste), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Bakhale, for Respondent No. 8.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 6,000 on a bond passed by the mortgagor defendants on the 20th December 1892 for Rs. 15,000 whereby the suit property was mortgaged, the mortgage amount being payable by annual instalments of Rs. 500. The suit was to recover twelve instalments due under the bond commencing with 1904. As the mortgagor-defendants were agriculturists, an account was taken under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act by the Commissioner who reported that Rs. 6,231.10.0 were due for principal and a larger amount for interest and as the plaintiff would not be able to recover more than the amount of principal as interest, it followed that on the Commissioner's report an amount of Rs. 12,433.4.0 was due to the plaintiff. The Judge has dealt with the Commissioner's report in a somewhat cursory fashion, as he has only considered the various bonds entered into by the defendants from time to time and has come to the conclusion that only three of those bonds for Rs. 2,000, Rs. 400 and Rs. 800 were for cash consideration. How he came to that conclusion is not very clear, because from the Commissioner's report it will be seen that the plaintiff was able to produce his accounts from 1879 showing a very large number of small cash advances at short intervals until 1892, and it would also appear that the bonds taken by the plaintiff from time to time in no way corresponded with the account which he kept of the advances made to the defendants. So that there is no reason whatever for discarding entirely the accounts as drawn up by the Commissioner, and looking only to certain bonds as having been passed for cash consideration. Considering it does not appear that the advances made by the plaintiff correspond with the amount of the various bonds passed by the defendants, we would prefer to rely on the very careful account taken by the Commissioner; and we think that on the whole it is far more probable, that on taking the accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, over Rs. 12,000 were really due by the defendants as a result of the dealings between the parties. But under the bond itself, apart from any question of taking accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, only Rs. 9,500 remain due, and it would be a very curious result if a debtor owing to his seeking the relief afforded by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act should have to pay more than he is obliged to pay according to the terms of his bond. I cannot imagine that it was ever intended that the law should produce such an extraordinary result as that. I think the proper order to pass in this suit is that Rs. 9,500 are due by the mortgagor-defendants to the plaintiff. That amount we direct to be paid in two instalments; Rs. 4,750 to be paid on the 21st June 1922, and the second instalment of Rs. 4,750 to be paid on the 21st June 1923. In default the plaintiff should apply under section 15 B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The eighth respondent, who is a party to the suit as defendant No. 9 is a second incumbrancer, and the Judge has rightly directed that the property subsequently mortgaged to him should only be sold when it has been found that the sale-proceeds of the remaining properties encumbered in favour of the plaintiff are insufficient to meet the plaintiff's decree.

The costs of the appeal and of the suit to be added to the mortgage amount.

J. P. Order accordingly.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Mortgage—Suit by mortgagee for declaration that he was in possession, maintainability of—Second appeal—Finding of fact.

A mortgagee who is not in actual possession and who is entered in the Revenue Records as a mortgagee without possession is not competent to maintain a suit for a declaration that he is a mortgagee in possession, nor is such a suit within the contemplation of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. [p. 153, col. 1.]

The finding of the lower Appellate Court that a mortgagee had never been in "actual possession" of the land, being one of fact, cannot be contested in second appeal. [p. 153, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 6th July 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Class, Jhang, dated the 31st January 1918.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Appellant.

Eyed Mohsin Shah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant's predecessors in interest mortgaged the land in suit in 1890 to the plaintiff's father. The mortgage deed provided (1) that the mortgagors would pay Rs. 31-8-0 annually to the mortgagee and be liable for the payment of the revenue, (2) that if they failed to pay the Rs. 31-8-0 the mortgagee would be entitled to realize the produce and would then pay the revenue, and (3) that if the mortgagors did not cultivate the land the mortgagee would be entitled to do so.

In 1902 the plaintiff applied for mutation, but as he admitted that he was not in possession of the land the mortgage was entered in the revenue papers as one without possession.

In 1909 the plaintiff sued in the Revenue Court for the lease money for six years, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that he became entitled to possession of the land on default being made in payment of the lease money in any year.

In 1913 he again applied to have it entered in the Revenue Records that the mortgage was with possession, but that attempt also failed.

He then brought the present suit, alleging that he had himself got possession 10 years before and asking for a declaration that he was a mortgagee in possession.

The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit, and the plaintiff has now preferred a second appeal.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the plaintiff has never been in actual possession of the land, and it is objected for the respondents that this finding, being one of fact, cannot be contested in second appeal. In reply it is urged for the appellant that in saying in the plaint that he was in possession he meant, not that he was in actual cultivating possession, but that he was in possession by receiving produce from the cultivators. This may be so, but it seems probable that the lower Appellate Court also, in finding that the plaintiff had never been in "actual possession" meant merely that he had not been receiving the produce. Consequently the objection that the finding cannot now be contested is correct.

In the second place we are of opinion that the suit is not maintainable. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act provides only for a declaration being made by the Court as to a person being entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property. In the present case the plaintiff is not seeking such a declaration. In his plaint he asks for a decree declaring that he is a mortgagee in possession. But he is already recorded as a mortgagee, and in the mutation proceedings the mortgage was not disputed. The plaintiff's only objection is that instead of being entered in the records as a mortgagee in possession he is entered as a mortgagee without possession, and what he wants is a declaration that he is in possession. Such a declaration cannot be made under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and it would do the plaintiff no good if it were made, for if, as he alleges, he is in possession of the land he has got all he requires.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879)—Decree, mortgage—Instalments—Failure to pay any instalments entitling decree-holder to execute whole decree—Decree made absolute—Starting point for 12 years' limitation—Limitation.

On the 11th September 1900 a decree was passed under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act providing the payment of the decretal amount by ten yearly instalments and also providing that in case of default of the payment of any one instalment the decree-holder was to wait for a year and if the instalment remained still unpaid he was at liberty to recover the whole amount then due. The first instalment fell due in March 1901 and was not paid within a year. Thus the whole decree became payable in March 1902 but the decree-holder applied in December 1903 for a decree absolute and got the order on the 7th January 1904. Some applications were made for execution but the last application was made on the 7th June 1915.

Held, that as the decree was passed under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act there was no necessity to apply to the Court to have the decree made absolute, that the application to have the decree made absolute could only be treated as a step-in-aid of execution, that the order on the application dated the 7th January 1904 could not be treated as a decree to give a fresh starting point for the period of twelve years allowed by section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code and that, consequently the application of 1915 was barred by limitation. [p. 154, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 214 of 1919, confirming an order passed by the Subordinate Judge at Islampur, in Darkhast No. 125 of 1915.

Mr. Desai, (with him Mr. Ratanlal Ranchhodias for Mr. K. N. Koyajee), for Respondents Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge of Satara, dismissing an appeal from an order made by the Second Class Subordinate Judge in the matter of a Darkhast taken out by the plaintiffs in execution of a decree which was passed on the 11th September 1900. That was a consent decree whereby it was declared that there was a balance of Rs. 1,800 due to the defendants; that it should be paid off by ten yearly instalments from the end of Falgun 1831 Shake, which would correspond with March 1901; that in case of failure of payment of an instalment the defendant was to wait for one year; and that if during that time the plaintiff did not pay to the defendants the amount of the instalment, in respect of which there was failure of payment, together with interest, then the defendants were to recover the whole of the amount through the Court by selling the mortgaged lands. Default was made in paying the first instalment, nor was it paid within a year from the date of the default. Therefore, by the terms of the decree, the defendants were entitled to apply in March 1902 for execution of the decree by selling the mortgaged lands. On the 1st December 1903, they applied to the Court to have the decree made absolute, and, on the 7th January 1904, an order was made by the Subordinate Judge making the decree absolute.

Now, when a decree is passed under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, there is no necessity to apply to the Court to have the decree made absolute. The defendants should have applied for execution at once, and the application to have the decree made absolute would at the best be considered as a step-in-aid of execution, so that the order of the Subordinate Judge cannot be treated as a decree which would form a first starting point for the period of twelve years allowed by section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendants issued a Darkhast on the 7th August 1906, another in 1909, and another in 1912. The present Darkhast was filed on the 7th June 1915. That was clearly more than twelve years after March 1902 when the decree could have been executed by sale of the mortgaged property in consequence of the plaintiffs' default. It is admitted that unless the defendants can succeed in getting the Court to hold that the order of the 7th January 1904 was a decree which has now to be executed, the present Darkhast is out of time. For the reasons already given, I think that the order of the 7th January 1904 was merely an order in execution, and not a fresh decree. The decision, therefore, of the learned Assistant Judge was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Muhammadian Law—Inheritance—Several deaths among heirs—Vested shares—Distribution.

A 'vested inheritance' is the share which vests in an heir at the moment of the ancestor's death. If the heir dies before distribution, the share of the inheritance which has vested in him will pass to his heirs at the time of his death. So that where there have been several deaths among the heirs of a deceased Muhammadan before the final distribution of his estate, the shares of the different heirs must be determined on the basis of each death in working out the final distribution. Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 17th June 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Lahore, dated the 12th April 1918.

Mr. Ghulam Rasool, for the Appellant.

Sheikh Abdul Baseeq, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Musammât Jawai, defendant, from the decree of the lower Courts giving the plaintiffs 29/43th share in a certain house situated in Lahore. The pedigree table printed at page 13 of the paper-book is as follows:—

JAWAI v. RUSSAIN BAKSH.

It is common ground that the house in suit was acquired jointly by Nur Din and Ala Din, and that shortly after the acquisition Nur Din died leaving his two children Waris and Musammat Bakhtawar living with Ala Din in the house. Ala Din died prior to 1899 leaving a widow Musammat Jawai defendant appellant, and the two daughters shown in the pedigree-table. As the learned District Judge points out there is nothing to show that the children of Nur Din did not reside in the house up till 1899 and there is no proof of any assertion of adverse title on the part of Ala Din or his widow before that time. It is admitted that from 1899 to 1905 the plaintiffs' mother lived in the house and that the plaintiffs themselves were born there. It was after Musammat Bakhtawar's death in Amritsar in 1906 that Musammat Jawai took sole possession and that possession had not ripened into an adverse title at the time the present suit was instituted. The only point upon which stress can be laid is that on the 14th November 1899 Musammat Jawai mortgaged one-half of the house to Haider Shah and that on the following day Musammat Bakhtawar's husband took that half on lease from Haider Shah. The act of the lessee Daula cannot, however, be taken as meaning that his wife Musammat Bakhtawar had no right in the house. He has himself given an explanation, which the First Court accepted, as to why he executed the lease, and it is also quite possible, as the learned District Judge has remarked, that the mortgagee may have insisted on the lease being executed by a male member of the family who was living in the house. We are in full agreement with the lower Courts that no adverse possession has been shown on the part of Musammat Jawai prior to Musammat Bakhtawar's death.

It has been held that the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law, and the only question which remains for decision is to what share are the plaintiffs entitled under that law? Upon Ala Din's death his widow inherited $1/8$ th share of his estate and his daughters $1/3$ rd share each in accordance with Muhammadan Law. This left $5/24$ th of his share, i. e., $5/48$ ths of the whole house to go to the residuary; in other words, to Waris the nephew of Ala Din. Upon Nur Din's death Waris inherited $2/3$ rd of his half share, i. e., $1/3$ rd of the house, whilst Musammat Bakhtawar inherited $1/3$ rd of one-half, i. e., $1/6$ th Waris's share, therefore, was $1/3$ rd plus $5/48$ ths = $21/48$ ths. Waris died leaving a widow who was entitled to $1/4$ th of his estate, whilst Musammat Bakhtawar inherited the other $3/4$ ths, i. e., $3/4$ th of $21/48$ ths. Her share, therefore, became $1/6$ th plus $3/4$ ths of $21/48$ ths. Upon her death her husband took $1/4$ th and her two children, the plaintiffs, $3/4$ ths. The latter's share, therefore, is $3/4$ ths of $95/92$, or in other words $95/256$ ths. Mr. Abdul Razaq on behalf of the respondents urges that as no distribution has hitherto taken place, we should only have regard to the persons now existing. But this is clearly wrong. In Mulla's Principles of Muhammadan Law, Fourth Edition, Article 45 runs as follows:— "A vested inheritance is the share which vests in an heir at the moment of the ancestor's death. If the heir dies before distribution, the share of the inheritance which has vested in him will pass to his heirs at the time of his death."

It is, therefore, clear that the shares have to be determined on the occasion of each death, and according to this rule, we have calculated the plaintiffs' shares to which they are entitled at the present time.

Another point urged by plaintiffs' Counsel was that as Daula, plaintiffs' father, did not claim his share, it should be given to the plaintiffs as Musammat Jawai is not entitled to it. Daula, however, has not sued and the plaintiffs are obviously only entitled to their own share and they cannot be given the share of another co-sharer who has not joined with them in bringing the suit.

We, therefore, accept the appeal, and, in modification of the decree of the lower Courts, give the plaintiffs a decree for a $95/256$ ths share in the house in dispute, and we direct that the defendants should pay half the plaintiffs' costs in the lower Courts, and that parties should bear their own costs in this Court.

Hindu Law—Partition suit—Grandson, whether necessary party—Grandson, whether can claim partition.

" In a partition suit under the Hindu Law grandsons although proper parties are not necessary parties as their interests are fully represented by their father.

In this case in an appeal against a preliminary decree for partition on the ground that the grandsons were not made parties the High Court, holding that this was not a fatal defect, directed the lower Court to bring them on the record and allot to them separate shares if they wanted.

Obiter.—Under Hindu Law a grandson can claim partition as against his grandfather.

First appeal.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Siva Narain Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal is directed against a preliminary decree in an action for partition. The only question which has been argued before us is, that the plaintiff did not cite as parties to the action certain persons who would be entitled to a share on partition.

Now, the plaintiffs are the sons of defendant No. 1, and defendant No. 2 is also a son of defendant No. 1. It is argued before us that the plaintiffs should have brought on the record their sons and the sons of defendant No. 2. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken the view that grandsons are not entitled to claim partition as against the grandfather. I am not prepared to uphold the view of the learned Subordinate Judge in this respect. No doubt a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in the case of Apaji Narhar Kulkarni v. Ramchandra Rajji Kulkarni (1) took the view that it is not open to a grandson to maintain an action for partition against a grandfather, but all the other High Courts have dissented from that view, see Jogul Kishore v. Shibi Sakai (2), Rameshwar Prosad Singh v. Lachmi Prosad Singh (3) and Subba Ayyar v. Ganasa Ayyar (4). In my opinion, it was open to the grandsons to claim partition as against the defendant No. 1. But the question in the present action is somewhat different, namely, whether these grandsons were necessary parties in an action for partition. In my opinion, the distinction between a proper party and a necessary party is not always recognised. It may be that the grandsons were proper parties in the present action, but I am not prepared to admit that they were necessary parties. They were fully represented in the action by their father and there is no prejudice to their interest by the decree which has been pronounced by the learned Subordinate Judge. But the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant makes a grievance and I think that the best course to adopt in this matter would be to bring the grandsons on the record as parties to the suit. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs undertakes to present an application to the Court below for the purpose of bringing the sons of the plaintiffs and the sons of defendant No. 2 on the record as party defendants. The names of these added parties will be mentioned in the decree and the Commissioner will proceed to make the partition in accordance with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge. If, however, the added defendants wish to have shares allotted to them, they must apply to the Court for that purpose, and in that case the learned Subordinate Judge will give the necessary directions to the Commissioner. Subject to this variation, this appeal will stand dismissed, but without costs.

PROPRIETOR OF THE COMPANY

Personal liability of agent—Presumption—Time of essence of contract—Finding of fact—Appeal, second.*

Plaintiffs ordered certain goods from defendant which the latter undertook to supply. Plaintiffs knew that the defendant would have to order the goods from Japan, but they looked to the defendant alone for the performance of the contract. The correspondence between the parties contained occasional references to the dealer in Japan but there was nothing to show that the plaintiffs were dealing with the latter. There were certain clauses in the indents, however, which provided that as regards the outturn of goods, the defendant was not to be held responsible. Owing to late shipments plaintiffs had to pay a certain amount as surcharge and they sued the defendant for the recovery of that sum :

Held, (1) that there was nothing to show that the defendant was acting only as an agent or a scribe for the dealer in Japan and that, therefore, he was personally liable on the contracts. [p. 158, col. 2.]

(2) that even if the defendant was acting as an agent for a foreign principal the presumption contained in section 230 (1) of the Contract Act had not been rebutted. [p. 158, col. 2.]

A finding that time is or is not of the essence of a contract is a finding of fact and cannot be assailed in second appeal. [p. 159, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 14th June 1908, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class at Delhi, dated the 10th December 1917.

Lala Sardha Ram and Mr. Muhammad Rafi, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for Rs. 2,412-3-10 brought by the plaintiffs, a firm called the Imperial Company, Delhi, against the defendant, Mr. S. M. Fazal Ilahi, who works as a commission agent at Delhi. The plaintiffs had placed orders with the defendant for some acids to be imported from Japan and claimed to recover from him the amount which they had to pay on account of surcharges owing to shipments having been made late. The defendant denied his liability, mainly on the ground that the contract was with a merchant in Japan, named H. Yamamoto, and that the defendant was merely an agent. The Court of first instance held that the defendant was liable, and disallowing certain items it passed a decree for Rs. 2,167-14-7 in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant appealed to the District Judge but the decree of the Trial Court was upheld and the appeal was dismissed with costs. The defendant has now preferred a second appeal against the decision of the lower Appellate Court and his case has been argued before us at great length by Lala Sardha Ram and we have heard Mr. Mool Chand on behalf of the plaintiff-respondents.

Before considering the arguments addressed to us on both sides it will be helpful if a brief summary of the facts of the case is given.

The first order given by the plaintiffs for the goods in question was Exhibit D-5, No. 872, dated the 15th October 1915. This was an order from the plaintiffs to the defendant and was written on a printed indent form of the defendant giving the conditions on which he did business. The order was for "900 cases, Java nitric acid." The defendant kept this indent, signed by the plaintiffs, with himself and ordered the goods from Japan by cable. He received a letter, Exhibit P-1, from Japan containing the acceptance of his order by H. Yamamoto and stating the time of shipment to be "within before end of April 1916." This letter was addressed to him and was passed on by him to the plaintiffs and is produced by the latter. The second order by the plaintiffs was Exhibit D-12, dated the 10th November 1915, similarly written on an indent form of the defendant and was for 600 cases of nitric acid and was "to be completed within six months from the date of first shipment." The acceptance of this was by a letter, dated the 5th January 1916 from Yamamoto to Fazal Ilahi, Exhibit P-2, FAZAL ILAHI v. IMPERIAL CHEMICAL CO., DELHI.

Mr. Sardha Ram argues that D-5 and D-12 are offers which the plaintiffs really made to Yamamoto through the defendant-appellant, who did not accept them himself but communicated the same to the dealer in Japan and on receiving his acceptances, P-1 and P-2, forwarded the same to the plaintiffs. He wants us to infer from this that his client merely acted as an agent or a scribe and incurred no personal responsibility. Mr. Mool Chand, on the other hand, points out that the letters, Exhibit P-1 and P-2, from Japan are addressed to the defendant and contain no reference at all to the plaintiffs and show that the plaintiff firm was looking to the defendant for the fulfilment of the contract, while the defendant had a contract with the dealer in Japan. He urges that after duly considering the correspondence between the parties and the terms of their contract the learned District Judge has held that "neither the plaintiffs nor the supplier Mr. Yamamoto were looking upon the defendant as a mere scribe," and that this constitutes a finding of fact which cannot be assailed in second appeal. Mr. Sardha Ram contends that some important documentary evidence has been ignored by the lower Appellate Court and that if those documents had been considered the Court below would have seen that the real contracting parties were the plaintiffs and Yamamoto. He asks to be permitted to refer to a few documents to show that a part of the documentary evidence on the record has remained unconsidered. We have thought it proper, under these circumstances, to allow him to draw our attention to those documents only, which he contends have been ignored. After going through Exhibits D-28, D-34, D-87 and the invoices P-24, P-25, etc. to which our attention was invited, we are of opinion that an inference cannot be drawn from them that the defendant was absolved from responsibility. There are references to Yamamoto in some of the letters written by the plaintiffs, because they knew that the defendant had arranged to get the goods from him, but it appears that in spite of that knowledge the plaintiffs looked to defendant for the fulfilment of their contract. Moreover there is nothing to show that these documents have been ignored by the lower Appellate Court. On the contrary the learned District Judge states clearly that he has been "through all the correspondence of the parties", and we see no reason to doubt the fact that he has read the whole of the correspondence and after considering the effect of it, as a whole, has come to the conclusion that the defendant was responsible under the contract.

Our attention has also been drawn in this connection, to certain clauses in the printed indent forms and it has been argued that according to the terms of the indent the defendant was free from personal liability. We have seen the terms of the indent, but do not think that this argument is correct. Let us first examine D-5. Clause 6 of D-5 runs thus "when goods are ordered from specified manufacturers we agree to take all risks connected with outturn both as to quality, delivery and every other respect." This is what the plaintiffs agreed to when they placed their order with the defendant. As Mr. Mool Chand points out the risks they took under this clause referred to "outturn" only, so that if the outturn was deficient they could not blame the defendant or hold him responsible. This clause cannot be construed into a general exemption from liability in favour of the defendant. There is a similar clause in D-12, though it is differently worded. It says: "It is understood by us that you are in no way responsible for the outturn of goods etc., and all our claims will be with the suppliers abroad." The obvious reference in this clause is to the matter of outturn with which we are not concerned in the case before us. These clauses, therefore, do not in any way help the defendant.

The decision of the case against the defendant has been based not only on the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below as to the nature of the contract and the intention of the parties, as judged by the correspondence between them and the terms of the original indents, but also on the application of section 230 (1) of the Contract Act to the transaction in dispute. It has been argued before us that even if the defendant was acting merely as an agent, there was a legal presumption of his personal liability, as the principal for whom he was contracting was residing abroad. The words of section 230 (1) are:—"In the absence of any contract to that effect, an agent cannot personally enforce contracts entered into by him on behalf of his principal, nor is he personally bound by them. Such a contract shall be presumed to exist in the following cases:—(1) where the contract is made by the agent for the sale or purchase of goods for a merchant resident abroad." Mr. Mool Chand for the plaintiffs-respondents contends that the defendant was admittedly an agent of Yamamoto and was receiving commission from him and as the principal was abroad, the defendant's personal liability must be presumed. Mr. Sardha Ram argues that this is a rebuttable presumption and should be held to have been rebutted. He cites Tutika Dasavara v. Parry & Co. (1) where it is held that this presumption of law is one which can be rebutted and is rebutted when the foreign principal is, in writing, made the contracting party and the contract is made directly in his name. He says that here the acceptance of the original offer having been signed by the principal in Japan, it must be held that the presumption was rebutted. We think, however, that the present case, differs from the Madras case because here there is no contract made directly in the name of Yamamoto and the acceptance he communicated was addressed to the defendant and made no mention of the plaintiff firm. Mr. Sardha Ram next refers to a decision of the Punjab Chief Court, published as Puran Chand v. Tara Singh (2) where the plaintiffs' indent was not accepted by the defendant, commission agents, but by a merchant residing abroad and the defendant did not undertake any primary liability. On a comparison of the case of 1905 with the present case it appears that the two cases are distinguishable from one another. In the case of 1905 it was the plaintiff's indent that was accepted by the merchant abroad. Here the indent that pertains to acceptance P-1 is not the indent of the plaintiffs. That was admittedly kept with himself by the defendant nor is there anything on the record to show that he referred to it when writing to his suppliers. The indent D-5, dated the 15th October 1915, was for nine hundred cases. The acceptance P. 1, dated the 5th November 1915, referred to a cable indent, dated the 3rd November 1915, sent by the defendant in which the quantity ordered was "less than 250 cases." It is clear from this that defendant treated the indent D-5 as one addressed to him out of which he was ordering only a part for the time being. Moreover it seems that in the case published as Puran Chand v. Tara Singh (2) there was no correspondence to throw light on the intention of the parties and, therefore, that case cannot be of much help in determining the present case. Mr. Sardha Ram quoted some other rulings of which only one requires some discussion. It is a recent Division Bench ruling of this Court, Civil Appeal No. 1018 of 1919, [published in the L. L. J. page 374, Bharagava & Co. v. B. Koba yashi (3)] in which a defendant pleaded that a firm in Japan and not he was responsible. This plea was allowed in that case on the ground that it was admitted there that the contract was made by the Japanese firm itself. The learned Judges rightly held, therefore, that to that case section 230 of the Contract Act had no application.

After considering carefully the arguments discussed above, we hold that in the case under appeal the contracting parties were the plaintiffs and the defendant and that the latter is liable under the contract.

The next contention raised on behalf of the appellant is that even if it is held that he was liable no liability arises from late shipments as time was not of the essence of the contract. Mr. Sardha Ram quotes certain letters of the plaintiffs which show that they were willing to extend time on more occasions than one and when Yamamoto once wrote that the contract might be cancelled as shipment could not be arranged the plaintiffs asked him not to do so. He says that in Exhibit D-7 and D-16 it was indicated by the defendant that shipment could not be guaranteed, and that the correspondence between the parties showed that the plaintiffs were ready to accept late goods. Mr. Mool Chand's reply to this argument is that the time was fixed by the contracts and the plaintiffs contracted with other parties to supply by a certain time on the strength of the understanding between them and the defendant. He adds that the lower Appellate Court has found that "it is clear from the contract conditions that time was an essential element" and that this finding is a finding of fact which cannot now be assailed.

RAM DAS V. MUHAMMAD SAYEED KHAN.

We agree with this contention and take this finding of fact to be final.

We now come to the question whether the amount allowed on account of surcharges has been correctly assessed. Exhibit P.3 gives the details of the sum of Rs. 2,412 3-10 which was originally claimed by the plaintiffs. Out of this sum two items, i. e. Rs. 48-14-5 and Rs. 195 6-10 were disallowed by the Trial Court, as it found that the goods relating to them had been shipped in time and, therefore, no surcharge could be claimed by the plaintiffs. Of the remaining six items four are not disputed by the appellant, as they relate to shipments which were admittedly late, but with regard to two items of Rs. 146-14-1 and Rs. 733-8-0, connected with invoices Nos. 7162 and 7299 respectively, it is contended that they should be disallowed as the shipments in these two instances were not late, if 20 days of grace, provided for in the terms of the indent, were allowed. To support this contention reliance is placed on clause 7 of the indent forms D 5 and D 12, which provides that "any deviation from time limit not exceeding 20 days is not to be considered a breach of contract." Mr. Mool Chand points out, however, that all that this provision meant was that delay in shipment not exceeding 20 days would not entitle the plaintiffs to cancel the contract, but that its aid could not be invoked by the defendant to avoid responsibility for surcharges occasioned by such late shipments. We think this interpretation of clause 7 is correct and there is no reason to disallow the items of Rs. 146-14-1 and Rs. 733-8-0. The result is that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 2,167-14-7 for which a decree has been passed in their favour. There is one small item, however, which we think must be deducted from the amount decreed. The appellant claims that he should have been allowed Rs. 70 which he had spent out of pocket, on behalf of and at the instance of his the plaintiffs, in sending telegrams to Japan from time to time. The plaintiffs have all along admitted that they authorised the defendant to incur this expense for them and have expressed their willingness to pay what is proved to have been spent. The Courts below did not allow this item for the reason that the defendant had not produced very satisfactory proof as to this item. We notice, however, that there was the sworn testimony of Abdullah (D. W.) with a copy of his accounts and we think no further proof of this was needed when the liability was admitted by the plaintiffs. The Counsel for the respondents agrees that this item, being a small one, may be allowed to the defendant. Deducting the item of Rs. 70 from Rs. 2,167-14-7 which have been found due we get Rs. 2,097-14-7 as the net amount which the defendant is liable to pay.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is consequently modified to this extent and a decree for Rs. 2,097-14-7 is hereby granted in favour of the plaintiff firm against the defendant, S. M. Fazl Elahi with costs. Appellant will pay plaintiff's respondent's costs in this Court.

A mortgage-deed was executed in 1901; the mortgagor covenanted to pay interest year by year and the principal within three years of the date of execution; in case of default of payment of the annual interest the mortgagee was empowered to realise the principal and interest from the hypothecated property. No interest was paid at all. A suit on the mortgage was brought in 1916:

Held, that the suit was barred by time in the absence of any acknowledgment within section 19 of the Limitation Act, as the cause of action for the principal and interest arose on the first default in 1902: [p. 161, col. 1.]

BAKHTAWAR v. MOOL CHAND.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ishwar Saran, K. N. Katu and Budri Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the dismissal of their suit on a deed dated the 17th of July 1901 on the ground that it was time barred. We have been taken through the terms of the deed in question. We find that the executant, Muhammad Raza, executed the deed for a consideration of Rs. 1,000 and agreed to pay interest at the rate of 2½ per cent. per annum. He covenanted to pay the interest year by year and the principal within three years of the date of execution, and in case of default of the payment of the annual interest he empowered the mortgagee without waiting for the expiration of the period fixed for payment of the principal to realise the amount due for the principal and interest from the hypothecated property. He also covenanted that so long as the principal remained unpaid interest at 2½ per cent. per annum would accrue and that interest at this rate should be payable from the date of default to the date of the payment.

We can only interpret these portions of the deed to mean that the privilege of deferring payment of the principal to the 17th of July, 1904 was conditional on the punctual payment of the annual interest and that the whole amount, principal and interest, became due on the 17th of July 1904 in default of payment of the interest for the first year.

On this facts, no interest was paid at all, so the cause of action arose in our opinion on the 17th of July 1902.

In these circumstances, the suit which was instituted on the 23rd of February 1916 was time barred in the absence of acknowledgment. If authority be needed for this view, we would refer to Qaya Din v. Jhuma L (1). The document before the Bench in that case was very similar to the document now before us. We have now to consider whether there was any acknowledgment which can be pleaded under the provisions of section 19 Act IX of 1908 to extend the period. There is a final finding of fact that no interest was paid. Two acknowledgments were set up, one alleged to have been made by Muhammad Raza on the 10th of November 1906 and the other made by Mul Chand.

With regard to the acknowledgment alleged to have been made by Muhammad Raza, we find, in addition to the fact that it was not an acknowledgment in writing signed by Muhammad Raza personally or by an agent duly authorised in this behalf, that the statement which he made did not amount to an acknowledgment of liability.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has not pressed the acknowledgment alleged to have been made by Mul Chand as being of any advantage to his client. This concludes all the points taken in argument.

We dismiss the appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit are reversioners of one Sainan Mal and sue for possession of a shop by redemption of a mortgage effected by his widows. This mortgage contained a clause of conditional sale and the mortgagee took proceedings to foreclose and obtained a decree against the widows in their lifetime. The suit was originally dismissed and the appeal was accepted by the learned District Judge on two grounds, that there was no necessity for the execution of a mortgage of this type including the penal clause though there was necessity for the alienation and that the foreclosure proceedings do not bind the reversioners. The mortgagee appeals.

It is unnecessary to discuss the first point as we find that the reversioners are in no way bound by the proceedings. The plaint did not disclose that any demand had been made before the notice was issued, nor did the mortgagee at any later stage even assert that he had made such a demand. Lachmi v. Tota (1) and Kirpa Ran v. Biagwana (2) are clear authority for holding that such an omission is a fatal flaw in the proceedings and that Courts will not presume that all formalities have been duly observed. The foreclosure, therefore, in no way affects or binds the reversioners and they are entitled to redeem the mortgage and to obtain possession of the property by payment of Rs. 200. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Railway Company—Risk-Note Form H—Contract to

The plaintiff delivered to the defendant Company at Nagpur fifty-seven bales of piece-goods to be conveyed from Nagpur to Amritsar and the defendant Company issued a Railway receipt for the said bales to the plaintiffs. The goods were booked under a Risk-Note in Form H whereby the plaintiffs, in consideration of the consignment being charged for at the special reduced or owner's risk rates, agreed and undertook to hold the Railway Administration and all other Railway Administrations working in connection therewith, and also all other transport agents or carriers employed by them respectively, over whose Railways or by or through whose transport agency or agencies the said goods might be carried in transit, harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to all or any of the said consignment from any cause whatever except for a loss of the complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of the same consignment, due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents, or carriers employed by them before, during or after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connection therewith or by any other transport agency or agencies employed by them respectively for carriage of the whole or any part of the said consignment, provided that, the term "wilful neglect" should not be held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any unforeseen event or accident. The waggon was sealed and remained for 30 hours in the Nagpur goods yard. The seal bore the description: N. G. P. 8. The goods were carried over the Railway of the defendant Company from Nagpur to Delhi, then over the Railway of the East India Railway Company from Delhi to Umballa, and lastly over the Railway of the North-Western Railway Company from Umballa to Amritsar. The goods arrived at Amritsar and the unloading clerk at Amritsar noticed that the seal on one side bore the inscription N. G. P. in large characters without any figure, and that 3 out of 57 bales were missing. Consequently only fifty-four out of the fifty-seven bales were delivered to the plaintiffs consignees. Plaintiff sued the defendant Company for damages for loss of the three bales, the defendant admitted the short delivery but denied that the loss was due either to the wilful neglect of the defendant Company or to theft by or to the wilful default of their servants:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the legitimate inference was that the waggon was broken open at Nagpur where the goods could be disposed of without exciting any suspicion and by persons who could calculate on being free from disturbance for a considerable time and that even if it occurred after the waggon left Nagpur, either some of the defendants' servants were concerned in the theft or the theft occurred owing to the wilful neglect of the defendants' servants. [p. 166, col. 2.]

Held, also, that there being a prima facie case against the defendants it was for them to offer some reasonable explanation in order to escape liability; and that as they failed to offer any explanation they were liable for the damages. [p. 166, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Kajiji, J. dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

On the 19th August, 1918, the plaintiffs delivered to the defendant Company at Nagpur fifty-seven bales of piece-goods to be conveyed from Nagpur to Amritsar and the defendant Company issued a Railway receipt for the said bales to the plaintiffs. The goods were booked under a Risk-Note in Form H whereby the plaintiffs, in consideration of the consignment being charged for at the special reduced or owner's risk rates, agreed and undertook to hold the Railway Administration and all other Railway Administrations working in connection therewith, and also all other transport agents or carriers employed by them respectively over whose Railways or by or through whose transport agency or agencies the said goods might be carried in transit, harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to all or any of the said consignment from any cause whatever except for a loss of the complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of the same consignment, due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents, or carriers employed by them before, during or after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connection therewith or by any other transport agency or agencies employed by them respectively for carriage of the whole or any part of the said consignment provided that the term "wilful neglect" should not be held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any unforeseen event or accident.

The said goods were carried over the Railway of the defendant Company from Nagpur to Delhi, then over the Railway of the East India Railway Company from Delhi to Umballa, and lastly over the Railway of the North-Western Railway Company from Umballa to Amritsar. The goods arrived at Amritsar on or about the 6th September but only fifty four out of the fifty-seven bales were delivered to the plaintiffs' consignees.

A lengthy correspondence ensued in which the defendant Company at first contended that the loss had not occurred on their Railway and, therefore, they were not liable, disregarding the provisions of section 80 of the Indian Railways Act. Finally, on the 31st July 1919, the defendants wrote that for the reasons already stated in the previous correspondence they were not liable for the claim. The suit was filed on the 5th September claiming the sum of Rs. 1,582 7-0, the value of the three missing bales and interest.

The defendants in their written statement admitted the short delivery but denied that the loss of the three bales was due either to the wilful neglect of the defendant Company or to theft by or to the wilful default of their servants as alleged.

At the hearing the following issues were raised:—

(1) Whether the loss of the three bales was due to the wilful neglect of the defendant Company?

(2) Whether the loss of the said bales was due to theft by or wilful default of the defendant Company's agents or servants?

The third issue was immaterial.

Leave was then granted to amend the plaint so that the following issue might be raised:—Whether the goods were not conveyed over to the East India Railway Company and the North-Western Railway Company at Railway risk, and clause 10-A was added to the plaint, claiming that if the goods were lost after they left Delhi the defendants were liable in any event.

The defendant Company replied that they were not liable for the claim made on the assumption that the bales were lost on a line of Railway other than the defendants'. The evidence shows that the plaintiffs' goods were loaded at Nagpur in one waggon the doors of which were sealed with a seal bearing the following description: N. G. P. 8. When the waggon arrived at Amritsar the unloading clerk noticed that the seal on one side bore the inscription N. G. P. in large characters without any figure and so the Police were sent for. The seals were broken in the presence of Khairuddin of the Government Railway Police and on the waggon being unloaded three bales were found to be missing. Smith who was Station Master at Nagpur in August-September 1918 said that during his time no such seal as N.G.P. (Exhibit J.) was used. Mr. Schofield, Assistant Traffic Superintendent (Claims) N. W. Railway Company deposed that when goods were booked on a foreign line to their line, and the waggon arrived at Umballa the train clerk in conjunction with the guard of the incoming train and the Chowkidar examined the seals of the waggon and reported if they were defective. No such report was made in this case. He made inquiries and was informed that there were no foot boards on the waggon in the suit so that it would not be possible to substitute the seals while the train was running. The witness also stated that the seals bearing different types were discovered after the waggon had been unloaded, i.e., after one of the seals had been removed.

The defendants called no evidence.

Some of their servants were present and were offered for examination by plaintiffs' Counsel but Mr. Mulla said they ought to have been called by the defendants. The learned Judge thought that as a matter of fact if the defendants had called them they would not have thrown any further light on the question how the loss occurred. Clearly the onus lay on the plaintiffs who had signed the Risk Note in Form H to prove either that the defendants were liable under the terms of the note, or to satisfy the Court that the proper inference to be drawn from the facts proved was that the defendants were liable. It is not suggested the theft was from a running train. The learned Judge says Mr. Mulla advanced two theories. The first was that the loss occurred when the goods were still in the goods-yard at Nagpur Station. The goods were booked on the 19th August, the waggon being sealed at 11 15 A. M. As the waggon remained for thirty hours in the Nagpur goods-yard the theft must have been committed by the defendants' servants or it must have occurred owing to their wilful neglect.

The second theory was that if the theft was not committed by the employees of the defendants it was due to the neglect of one of its servants, i.e., the Chowkidar. But it will be seen that this was only part of the first theory. The learned Judge thought that the probabilities were against the theft having been committed in the Nagpur goods-yard. Any servant of the defendants intending to commit the theft and taking the trouble to prepare a seal to re-seal the waggon would have taken the precaution to prepare a seal similar to the one used by the defendants, and further it would require great daring for any servant to commit a theft from the goods-yard.

With regard to the question of neglect, Mr. Mulla had not called the Chowkidar who was available for examination. He, therefore, came to the conclusion that he was not satisfied that the loss was due either to theft by or to wilful neglect of a servant of the defendants.

Considerable light on the question how a case of this nature should be dealt with is thrown by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Smith Limited v. G. W. Railway Co. (1).

Certain traders delivered to the defendant Railway Company a parcel containing six pairs of boots weighing 19 lbs. for carriage from Birmingham to Wilton, near Salisbury, on the terms that the Company should not be liable for loss, etc., except upon proof that the loss, etc., arose from the wilful misconduct of the Company's servants. The parcel was never delivered to the consignee. Eventually an action was brought to recover the value of the parcel. The defendant Company offered no evidence. The County Court Judge decided in favour of the plaintiffs saying (p. 241):—

"I must look at the whole of the circumstances which may be equally consistent with one or more theories. If any one of these theories is adopted which would relieve the Railway Company from liability under the contract the claim certainly could not succeed, but if there is evidence strongly preponderating in favour of one of those theories which in the absence of reasonable explanation by the Company would fix them with liability, I am entitled to act upon it. There is, in my opinion, evidence here which justifies me in finding, as I do, wilful misconduct on the part of the defendants."

The Divisional Court reversed this judgment.

The plaintiffs appealed. Bankes, L. J., said (p. 243):—

"I pass now to consider the point which was taken in the County Court,...whether the evidence laid by the appellants was such as to justify an inference that the parcel was lost owing to the wilful misconduct of the Railway Company's servants. If there was evidence upon which the learned County Court Judge could properly draw that inference this Court cannot interfere with his decision. The learned Judge, in my opinion, directed himself quite correctly when...he said: 'If there is evidence strongly preponderating in favour of one of such theories which, in the absence of reasonable explanation by the Company, would fix the defendants with liability, I am entitled to act upon it.' That legitimate inference from established fact is evidence for the purpose of applying the above direction to the present case is, I think, clear beyond doubt...Although the learned Judge...was undoubtedly entitled to draw inferences from the facts proved before him, the inferences must be such as could legitimately be drawn from the facts. If the facts are such that no reasonable man could draw a particular inference from them or if the particular inference is such as to be equally consistent with non liability and with liability, then the party who relies on the inference to discharge the onus of proof of establishing liability fails."

After discussing the evidence the learned Lord Justice came to the conclusion that there were no materials in the case upon which a charge of bad faith could be sustained. In the absence of any evidence of bad faith the evidence adduced for the appellants was not in his opinion capable of the inference that the parcel must have been lost owing to the wilful misconduct of the defendants' servants. The evidence left the question entirely open as to the cause of the loss. Scrutton, L. J., said (pp. 249, 250):—

"It is to be noted that the appeal being from a County Court Judge, who is the sole judge of fact, the question is not whether the Court on such evidence as there was would have come to the same conclusion, but whether there is any evidence which could reasonably, if accepted, be the basis of such a conclusion...In my opinion it is impossible to lay down any general rule as to the facts from which one can infer in the absence of explanation of loss, 'loss by wilful misconduct of the Company's servants.' It must depend on the nature of the subject-matter and of the stage of the transit reached in each particular case. For instance, if the Company were carrying an elephant and would say nothing as to why it was not delivered, as an elephant can hardly disappear without a Company's servant knowing of it, one would easily find that it was lost either by wilful misconduct of the Company's servants, or by their wilfully not at once informing some superior that it had disappeared when it could easily be traced and recovered. On the other hand if a small parcel disappeared from a place to which both the Company's servants and outsiders had free access, in a time of a great pressure of business, it would be impossible to draw any inference as to what had really happened...In an action by the same goods owner against the Midland Railway Company [Smith Limit v. Midland Railway Co. (2)] this Court felt able to find wilful misconduct of the Company's servants from the fact that part of the contents of a parcel had disappeared, the parcel having been opened, repacked with rubbish, and done up again. In such a case such an operation must have taken sometime, and have been carried out on the Company's train by a person who could calculate on being free from disturbance for the considerable time taken in unpacking and repacking, facts which pointed strongly to theft by a servant of the Company."

On consideration of the evidence the learned Lord Justice came to the conclusion that there were too many suppositions and assumptions in the case for the goods owner, and that there was no ground on which it could reasonably be found as a fact that the goods were lost by wilful misconduct of the Company's servants. Atkins, L. J., dissented. He considered there was prima facie evidence of conversion or detention and the defendants' long continued failure to give any explanation as to what had happened to the goods coupled with the inadequate explanation of the delay afforded some evidence upon which the Judge could find that there was a prima facie case that the conversion or detention was not innocent but wilful.

(2) (1919) 88 L. J. K. B. 868; 121 L. T. 27.

We are not restricted to finding whether there was any evidence which could reasonably if accepted be the basis of the conclusion of the learned Judge in the Court below. It is competent to us to find that on the facts proved the inference drawn was not the right one.

Now, it is admitted that the bales were packed in a waggon at Nagpur which was sealed. Thereafter the waggon would be on the Railway line to which ordinarily the public would not have access unless they were travelling as passengers in passenger trains. Whoever committed the theft must certainly have taken sometime over it and must have come prepared with the materials for re-sealing the waggon. Even after the bales were removed and the waggon resealed, the task of secretly removing three bales each weighing 245 lbs. was not an easy one, and several persons must have taken part in the theft. Therefore, the whole operation must have been carried out on the train by persons who could calculate on being free from disturbance for a considerable time, and that points strongly to the theft being committed either by or with the connivance of the Company's servants as pointed out by Scrutton, L. J., in considering the case of Smith Limited v. Midland Railway Company (2). I do not follow the argument of the learned Judge in differentiating that case, because the parcel lost was a small one. The operation of unpacking and re-packing a small parcel could not take so long or require so much preparation as the removal of these bales. In my opinion the facts proved strongly preponderate in favour of the theory which, in the absence of reasonable explanation by the defendants, would fix them with liability. Even assuming that there was a gang of train thieves operating somewhere between Nagpur and Amritsar, who had made preparations for breaking open waggons and re-sealing them with seals, resembling the original ones, it would make no difference, though if this were the case one would have expected that there would be evidence of similar thefts. In my opinion a legitimate inference is, that the waggon was broken open at Nagpur where the goods could be disposed of without exciting any suspicion, and, even if it occurred after the waggon left Nagpur, that either some of the defendants' servants were concerned in the theft or the theft occurred owing to the wilful neglect of the defendants' servants. They would be equally liable if the theft took place in this manner on the other lines even if the plaintiffs' contention that the goods on those lines were not carried at owner's risk were held good. That point, however, need not be decided. I do not think that the fact that the difference between the seals was not discovered until the waggon reached Amritsar points inevitably to the conclusion that the theft must have taken place between Umballa and Amritsar. The inspection of the seals on the journey was probably superficial, and as long as the seal did not appear to have been tampered with, the fact that the seal on the opposite side of the waggon did not correspond would probably not be noticed, unless the two seals were inspected one immediately after the other. It would have been better if the original seal N. G. P., as it was found on arrival at Amritsar had been produced before the Court.

There being a prima facie case against the defendants it was for them to offer some reasonable explanation in order to escape liability. They have offered no explanation. The learned Judge says:—

"It is inconceivable that the Railway Company, however careful and prudent, could have taken such care as to make it impossible for any thief to commit a theft."

Put so widely this proposition may be accepted. But it is certainly conceivable that the Railway Company could have taken such care as to make it impossible for such a theft as occurred in this case to take place, and if they suggested that they could not have taken such care they should have led some evidence to support the suggestion. Their attitude throughout has been dilatory and unbusinesslike.

As Scrutton, L. J., pointed out in Smith Limited v. G. W. Railway Co. (1), it is regrettable if Railway Companies take up the positoin of actively resisting all claims for information and assistance from those whose goods are stolen, instead of giving their consignors and consignees all possible information as to the disappearance of the goods. And I may refer to the words of Atkin, L. J., (p. 259):—

"If a bailee says, I have received your chattel; I have not delivered it in the terms of the bailment; and I will give you no information as to what I know about it, or what steps I have taken to find out about it, he suffers no hardship if unkind inferences are drawn against him. This judgment is far from throwing the onus upon him which rests upon the plaintiff, and it only requires the performance of very ordinary business obligations in the way of explanation to secure the very large measure of relief stipulated for in the contract of carriage."

No doubt Bankes, L. J., acquitted the defendant Company of bad faith, and I should not go so far as to impute bad faith to the present defendants, but I think they failed to recognise how strong the case was against them, and the necessity there was for some action on their part to rebut it.

In my opinion the appeal should be allowed, and there should be judgment for the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,582-7-0 with interest at six per cent. from the 1st February 1919 till judgment with costs throughout and interest on judgment at six per cent.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Hooghly, dated the 14th September 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, First Court at Uluberia, dated the 2nd May 1916.

Babu Narendra Nath Ghose, for the Appellant.

Babu Monmotha Nath Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for joint possession on declaration of title. Plaintiff alleged that the land described in schedule ka of the plaint belonged to her grandfather and that upon his death by a partition among his heirs her father Gholam Hossain got the whole of plot kha. She accordingly as the daughter of Gholam Hossain claimed her legal share of this plot according to the Muhammadan Law of inheritance. It has not been disputed that if plot kha belonged exclusively to Gholam Hossain, plaintiff is entitled to the share claimed by her. Defendant No. 2 who contested the suit on the plea that he had purchased the land in suit from defendant No. 3, admitted that this plot had fallen exclusively to the share of Gholam Hossain upon partition but alleged that Gholam Hossain subsequently exchanged this plot with defendant No. 3 and received from her in exchange another piece of land that had fallen to her share. The learned Munsif found that the land on partition had fallen to the share of Gholam Hossain, that the story of exchange alleged by the defendant had not been established, that even if the exchange really took place it was ineffectual without a registered-deed and lastly that the fact of purchase by defendant No. 2 from defendant No. 3 had not been satisfactorily proved. Upon these findings the learned Munsif decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal by defendant No. 2 the decree was upheld. The lower Appellate Court, however, found the story of exchange to be true but agreed with the Munsif that without a registered document the exchange was void. He expressed no clear opinion on the question whether the defendant No. 2 had succeeded in proving his purchase from defendant No. 3. The defendant No. 2 has preferred this appeal and on his behalf it is argued that notwithstanding the absence of a registered document on the equitable doctrine of part performance plaintiff as the heir of Gholam Hossain cannot question the validity of the exchange. It seems to me that on the authority of Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) and the decisions of this Court in which the principle laid down in that case was followed, this contention must prevail. It is, however, urged on behalf of the respondent that the findings are not sufficient to justify the application of the doctrine. Reliance is placed on the decision of Mr. Justice Farwell in Manchester Brewery Co. v. Combs (2) that the doctrine is applicable only in those cases where specific performance can be obtained between the same parties in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined. On this point there are no findings and I was at first inclined to send the case back but after looking to the more recent authorities and having heard further arguments on the point I am of opinion that such a course is not necessary. It is true that in some of the earlier cases decided by this Court, this limitation on the applicability of the doctrine was distinctly recognised. See Bibi Jawahir Kumari v. Chatteerput Singh (3) Secretary of State for India v. Forbes (4) and Singheeram Poldar v. Bhagbat Chander Nundi (5). However, in the case of Putha Lal v. Kunj Behari Lal (6) where, as in the present case, the findings were not sufficient to show whether a suit for specific performance could be maintained. Jenkins, O. J., observed as follows:—"it is quite true that the question whether the defendants, first party, were entitled to bring a suit for specific performance in vindication of their rights was not debated before the lower Appellate Court, but there is no matter brought to our notice which can throw any serious doubt upon the defendants' right to complete their right by such a suit".

The same remark applies to this case.

In a very recent case to which I was a party a different view was taken but in that case the later decisions bearing on the point to which I am about to refer were not placed before the Court.

In Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar (7) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down the principle without any such limitation. Their Lordships observed quoting the dictum of Sir Strange in Potter v. Potter (8) that a contract if confessed or carried in part into execution will be binding on the parties and carried into further execution in equity. In Khagenra Nath Chatterjee v. Sonatan Guha (9) Sanderson, O. J., (Roe, J. P.) and Mr. Justice N. B. Chatterjee applied the doctrine without any reference to the question whether the right to claim specific performance was or was not subsisting.

It was argued on behalf of the respondent that although their Lordships of the Judicial Committee did not expressly refer to this question the case of Potter v. Potter (8) on which they rely recognises this limitation of the doctrine. This is no doubt correct as will appear from the following passage in the judgment of the Master of the Rolls.

"It will be the same, where vendor comes for specific performance and the agreement is admitted. No doubt, but on such admission it will be considered as an agreement from the time of transaction; so that on a bill by either party, the Court must have decreed execution, the estate as testator's from June 1744, and the money the vendor's".

But at the same time the fact cannot be overlooked that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee were dealing with an agreement entered into 30 or 40 years before the suit and if the question of limitation for enforcing a claim for specific performance was considered material their Lordships would have referred to it. There is the further fact in this case that the defendant No. 2 is in possession of the land in suit. If the plaintiff's claim is to be decreed by reason of the transaction not being clothed in those legal forms to which finality attaches after the bargain has been acted upon, she could only do so in equity by making restitution in respect of the property which Gholam Hossein obtained from defendant No. 3. Such restitution is now impossible by the reason of the fact that the property has been sold to a third party. I, therefore, think that on these grounds the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree.

It is next argued on behalf of the respondent that the plaintiff had denied in the plaint that the defendant No. 2 was a bona fide purchaser from defendant No. 3 and although the First Court decided this issue against the plaintiff, she was entitled to a decision of the Appellate Court on the point. It seems to me that there is no substance in the argument. The lower Appellate Court expressly find that defendant No. 2 was in possession and not defendant No. 3 and clearly meant to find that the defendant No. 2 was a bona fide purchaser. Besides even as benamidar of defendant No. 3 he is entitled to take any defence that the defendant No. 3 might have taken and it is immaterial whether the title vests in the one or the other. Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (10).

Upon this view of the case I decree the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. But in view of the fact that if this question had been raised before the lower Appellate Court an appeal to this Court might not have been necessary, the defendant-appellant though successful must pay the costs of the respondents in this appeal. He is, however, entitled to the costs of the Courts below from the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit got a decree on the 24th July 1908 for Rs. 6,603 with interest on Rs. 6,500 at twelve annas per cent. per mensem. The decree was made payable by instalments of Rs. 1,000 each. The first instalment was to be paid at the end of Ashad Shaka 1831 corresponding with July 1909. Apparently nothing further was done by the plaintiffs although no instalments had been paid under the decree until the 7th of April 1914 when an order was made making the decree final for the sum become due. It is strange that that order was made as it was absolutely unnecessary. But it has been made, and, therefore, it must be considered that that order kept the decree alive.

In December 1915 the first Darkhast was filed. At that time all the instalments payable under the decree had become due. But we have not been told to what instalments the Darkhast related. The Judge says that that Darkhast fell through on account of the plaintiffs' laches. But it is admitted that the two instalments for 1909, 1910, with interest had been paid. The next Darkhast was filed in November 1918 to recover the instalments which fell due in 1911, 1912 and 1914. The Judge said that that Darkhast was evidently time-barred, and it would be so unless the Darkhast of 1915 could be considered as a step-in-aid of execution with regard to the instalments which were sought to be recovered in the Darkhast of 1918. However that may be, execution proceeded under the Darkhast of 1918 and recoveries were made. It appears from the Darkhast that the instalments for 1914, 1915, were first entered in it but were afterwards struck out, so that the Court did not pass any order with regard to those instalments by which the plaintiffs' right to recover them was reserved.

The present Darkhast was filed in 1919 to recover the instalment for 1914, 1915. These instalments were clearly barred at the date of the Darkhast, unless the previous Darkhast of 1918 could be considered as a step-in-aid in respect of all the instalments then due, and a point arises for which we can find no direct authority.

We have been referred to the decision in Nepal Chandra Sadookhan v. Amrita Lall Sadookhan (1) where the decree directed not only that possession should be given by the execution-debtor but also that he should pay costs. The plaintiff first sought execution with regard to the costs, reserving his right to execute the decree for possession, and three years later when he sought execution of the decree for possession he was met with the contention that he ought to have done so when he executed the decree for costs. But this contention was disallowed on the ground that an application for partial execution of a decree would be a step in aid with regard to the whole decree. No doubt there is a considerable difference between a decree which directs several things to be done by the defendant without specifying any particular date or dates for their performance, and a decree which directs instalments to be paid on particular dates; but we see no reason why a Darkhast, which asks for the assistance of the Court for the recovery of one of several instalments due at the date of the Darkhast, should not be considered as a step in aid so as to start a new period of limitation with regard to all the instalments then due. In our opinion the appeal should be allowed and the Darkhast should proceed with costs throughout.

In view of the provisions of sections 18 and 21 of the Civil Procedure Code, the decree of a Trial Court cannot be set aside on the mere ground that there is a doubt whether the Court had territorial jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit unless there has been a failure of justice [p. 72, col 2].

Under the provisions of section 102-B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act the entries in a finally published Record of Rights must be presumed to be correct.

(1) 26 C. 848; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1169.

until proved by evidence to be incorrect, and the burden of proof lies prima facie on the person seeking to establish their incorrectness. But the question on whom the initial onus lies loses its importance and becomes immaterial when each of the contesting parties adduces evidence in support of his case. [p. 172, col. 2; p. 173, col. 1.]

The question of the acquisition by adverse possession of title to property which is subject to the destructive action of a river should be investigated on the basis of when diluvion commenced, and when re-formation took place, and the person setting up such a title must prove, either that he had by adverse possession acquired such title since the date of re-formation and before the commencement of litigation, or that he had acquired such title to the extinction of the title of the true owner before the date of the diluvion. [p. 174, col. 1; p. 175, col. 1.]

In a case between landlord and tenant, to render the possession of the latter adverse to the former, such possession must be actual, visible, exclusive, hostile and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitation, because the tenant's possession of land can commence to be adverse only when the title adverse to the landlord is asserted, or the landlord becomes aware of the encroachment [p. 175, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, First Court, Pabna and Bogra, dated the 29th February 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter (with him Babu Manindra Nath Banerjee), for the Appellants. My first contention is that the subject-matter of the litigation being outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Pabna, the Trial Court had no power to decide the suit. Secondly, the Court below ought to have found that the land in dispute is comprised in the patti taluk held by me under the plaintiff. It is so entered in the finally published Record of Rights prepared under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is for the plaintiff to establish by positive evidence that the entry in the Record of Rights is incorrect. See section 103B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Lastly, my submission is that under no circumstances can my title by adverse possession be defeated by the plaintiff. Since re-formation and previous to the diluvion the land is, and was in, my possession. My title by adverse possession is, therefore, complete and indefeasible.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarty (with him Babus Bamakanta Bhattacharye, Jotiniranath Lahiri, Krishna Kamal Maitra and Heramba Lal Sanyal), for the Respondents.—The first contention as to jurisdiction is unsubstantial.

On the evidence, if everything is taken in favour of the defendants, it is at most a case of doubtful territorial jurisdiction. It has not even been suggested how the defendants are prejudiced by this assumption of jurisdiction. See sections 18 and 21 of the Civil Procedure Code. Refers to Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Kumar Naresb Narain Roy (1). As regards the identity of the disputed land with the Mauza Khairaddi Kandi, the evidence is conclusive in our favour. The question of onus hardly arises in the present appeal because the Trial Court came to its conclusions on the point after a careful consideration of the evidence adduced by both the parties. Refers to Kundan Lal v. Begam un-nisa (2) and Seturatham Aiyar v. Venkatachala Gounden (3). On the question of adverse possession my submission is that the defendants having failed to establish that their alleged title by adverse possession was complete before the diluvion began and was completed after the re-formation, the title to the land remained in the real owner and the defendants acquired nothing by their possession. Refers to Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (4). Moreover, the other essentials of adverse possession, namely, continuity, publicity and extent etc., were also absent in the present case. Refers to *Radhamoni Debi v. JOSEPH NATH SAHA v. JAGDINDRA NATH ROY.

Khairaddi Kandi. The plaintiff-respondent, the Maharaja of Natore, claims the disputed property as comprised in his Zamindari which formerly bore Touzi No. 429 of the Collectorate of Rajshahi and now bears Touzi No. 2166 of the Collectorate of Pabna. In 1910, in the course of Cadastral Survey proceedings under the tenth Chapter of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a dispute arose between the plaintiff and the defendants, who claimed that they were in possession of the land now in suit as comprised in a patni taluk known as Goalnagar Maidah held by them under the Maharaja of Natore. The objection taken by the defendants under section 103-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act was allowed by the Assistant Settlement Officer on the 5th September 1911. The Record of Rights drawn up on this basis was finally published on the 1st August 1914. On the 14th April 1919, the Maharaja of Natore instituted the present suit for establishment of his title, for declaration that the disputed village was not comprised in the patni taluk held under him by the defendants, for recovery of possession with mesne profits, and for incidental reliefs. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the Revenue Authorities had correctly held that the disputed village was comprised in their patni, and that if it were found to lie beyond the ambit of the patni, the defendants had acquired a good title by adverse possession for the statutory period. The defendants further urged that the Subordinate Judge of Pabna had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as the land was situated within the District of Faridpur. The Subordinate Judge overruled the contentions of the defendants and decreed the claim with costs. On the present appeal, the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on three grounds, namely, first, that the Trial Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit; secondly, that the land is comprised in the patni taluk held by the defendants and thirdly, that if the land be found to have been situated beyond the limits of the patni taluk, the defendants have acquired an indefeasible title by adverse possession for the statutory period.

The first ground is plainly unsubstantial. Section 13 (1) of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887, lays down that the Local Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, fix and alter the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Civil Court under the Act. The jurisdiction list dated the 3rd June 1903 shows that the District of Pabna, where the Subordinate Judge exercises jurisdiction, comprises all the mouzas (inclusive of the mouza in suit) demarcated and surveyed in the Survey of 1850-55. Consequently, no weight can be attached to the contention of the defendants that the river Padma is the boundary between the districts, and that the river has so shifted in recent years as to transfer the disputed land from the jurisdiction of the Pabna Court to the jurisdiction of the Faridpur Court. But even if it were conceded that the shifting river should be accepted as the boundary for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a Court under the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887, the objection taken by the defendants is futile. Their contention is that the old main stream of the river to the south has become a shallow small stream and an old shallow stream to the north has become the new main stream. The evidence adduced in support of this allegation is not satisfactory, and certainly not conclusive. As no map was prepared for this purpose, it is impossible for us to say which is the main channel and which is the subsidiary channel of the river. Besides, as was pointed out by this Court in the case of Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Kunar Narain Roy (1), where a similar objection was unsuccessfully urged, the contention of the defendants cannot possibly prevail in view of the provisions of sections 18 and 21 of the Civil Procedure Code, even if it be assumed that it is doubtful whether the property lay within the jurisdiction of the Pabna Court or the Faridpur Court, the decree of the Subordinate Judge cannot be set aside, as it has not been suggested, much less established, that there has been a failure of justice. The first contention must consequently be overruled.

The second ground raises the question, whether the disputed village which is admittedly known as Elalair Kandi or Khairaddi Kandi is comprised in the patni taluk Goalnagar Maidah which is held by the defendants under the Maharaja of Natore. The burden of proof lies prima-facie upon the plaintiff to establish the incorrectness of the entry made in the finally published Record of Rights which must be presumed to be correct until proved by evidence to be incorrect under sub-section (3) of section 103 B of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But for this circumstance, it could not be presumed that because the defendants hold a patni taluk under the plaintiff, a particular tract in dispute is comprised within the tenure. Protap Chandra Roy v. Judhister Das (8), Sheodani Roy v. Ohtoorbhuj Roy (9), Gopini Devi v. Loienath Tewari (10). But where, as in the present case, evidence has been adduced by each of the contestants in support of their respective cases and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof is immaterial, and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay; see the observations of Viscount Haldane in Kundan Lal v. Begam-un-nisa (2) and of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Seturattam Aiyar v. Venkatachala Gounden (3). When we approach the evidence from this standpoint, what is the position? Two facts are undisputed, namely, first that the disputed tract is situated within the Zemindary of the plaintiff, and secondly, that the defendants hold under the plaintiff a patni taluk known as Goalnagar Maldah. The dispute is whether the village in controversy which is known as Edalair Kandi or Khairaddi Kandi is comprised within the Patni Taluk Goalnagar Maldah. The plaintiff asserts that the answer should be in the negative. The defendants contend that Goalnagar Maldah includes Edalair Kandi or Khairaddi Kandi and also Maldah. The Subordinate Judge has found that the case for the defendants has been completely negated by the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff. The maps exhibited in the Trial Court, namely, the Survey maps made in 1854 of Edalair, Kandi, Khairaddi Kandi, Maldah, Dhalah and Dhurai as also the Doarah Survey map made in 1369 show conclusively that Edalair Kandi or Khairaddi Kandi is a distinct mousah from Maldah. This is also borne out by the mousawar register and the mahalsar register of Pergara Chapila and the general register of revenue-paying lands. It is further corroborated by a large body of oral evidence on the record, and for our present purpose it is sufficient to refer specially to the statement of Raj Mohan Das, one of the witnesses examined by the defendants, who asserted in examination-in-chief that Khairaddi Kandi before diluvion was high enough to be beyond the reach of water even during the rains, and that to its north lay the Moutzah Atravi and to its south lay the Moutzah Goalnagar Maldah. There could be no doubt as to the meaning of the statement made by the witness, because he added that there were pillars to demarcate the boundary between Khairaddi Kandi and Goalnagar Maldah. There can, in our opinion, be no room for doubt that the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that Goalnagar Maldah is merely another name for Maldah and that Edalair Kandi or Khairaddi Kandi is a quite distinct village. It is not disputed that one Bhairab Chandra Mazumdar was the holder of the patni under the Maharaja of Natore and that it ultimately passed into the hands of Fakruddin Ahmed alias Azimuddin Chaudhury. The patni taluk was sold for arrears of rent, and on the 5th December 1881, the defendants became purchasers at the execution sale in the name of their officer Beni Madhab Chaki. The patni taluk which was thus brought to sale was expressly stated in the sale certificate as situated in Goalnagar Maldah, prima facie, then, the defendants are entitled to possession of lands comprised in Goalnagar Maldah, and they must consequently prove that the disputed land which is known as Edalair Kandi or Khairaddi Kandi is part and parcel of Goalnagar Maldah. This they have signally failed to establish. Reliance has been placed by the defendants on the plaint dated 13th June 1882, the decree of the Trial Court dated 17th January 1883, and the decree of the Appellate Court dated 21st September 1883 in a suit instituted by the Official Trustees of Bengal as trustees to the estate of one Pogose of Calcutta against some persons for recovery of possession of twelve bighas of land. In the plaint it was stated that the lands then in dispute were situated in "Goalnagar Maldah commonly called Khairaddi Kandi." The title of Pogose is, however, traced to an execution sale held on the 19th November 1879 for the realisation of a rent decree obtained by Pogose against Fakruddin Ahmed alias Azimuddin Chaudhury. The subject-matter of that sale was land and buildings of what was known as the Maldah Factory, described as situate in Mouzah Khairaddi Kandi. This clearly does not establish that Khairaddi Kandi was in fact identical with Goalnagar Maldah; indeed, it may be a matter for controversy whether notwithstanding the comprehensive terms of section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act as explained in the decision of the Judicial Committee in Dinomoni Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhurani (11) the litigation between Pogose and his adversaries could be treated as an instance in which the right now in dispute was claimed, recognised or exercised. Apart from this, we have the fact that notwithstanding the sale of the factory on the 19th November 1879, the patni was sold at the instance of the Maharaja of Natore nearly two years later on the 5th December 1881. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that this tends to show that Azimuddin Chaudhury held the factory and the patni taluk in two distinct rights; the first passed to the Official Trustees as Trustees to the estate of Pogose, the second ultimately passed to the present defendants. This is also confirmed by the circumstance that the objection urged to the claim of the Official Trustee that his title had been superseded by that of the auction-purchaser of the patni taluk was not upheld. The case for the defendants is not further advanced by the recitals (assuming them to be admissible in evidence) contained in the darpatni lease granted by one of them to Prosanna Kumar Ganguly on the 12th September 1882, and, the decree dated 6th November 1903 in a partition suit amongst members of their family; these recitals do not contain even an assertion of right or claim with regard to the property now in suit, but only an allegation that a tract of land is known by one of three alleged names

"Mouza Goalnagar Maldah alias Edalair Kandi commonly called Khairaddi Kandi." There is, in our opinion, no escape from the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that the lands of Edalair Kandi or Khairaddi Kandi are wholly outside the lands of the Patni taluk Goalnagar Maldah or Maldah held by the defendants under the Maharaja of Natore. The second ground consequently fails.

The third ground raises the question, whether the defendants have acquired indefeasible title to the disputed land by adverse possession for the statutory period. The hypothesis that they have acquired such title is found hedged all round by inextricable difficulties, when we bear in mind a fundamental fact, which is admitted by both the parties, namely, that the disputed site has been subject to the destructive action of the river Padma. The case for the plaintiff is that the diluvion commenced shortly after the revenue survey operations of 1854 and that the land was re formed towards the end of 1907 or the early part of 1908. The case for the defendants is that the diluvion began only so late as 1886, and that the land was re formed in 1904. The determination of the question, when the diluvion commenced and when the re-formation took place, depends upon the appreciation of conflicting oral evidence. The Subordinate Judge has, upon a careful analysis of that evidence, held that the dates indicated by the respective parties cannot be accepted as absolutely correct. He has found that the testimony of the witnesses points to the conclusion that the diluvion commenced about the year 1890 and that the re formation took place during the early months of 1908. The evidence has been placed before us, and we see no reason to differ from the view adopted by the Subordinate Judge. The question of acquisition of title by adverse possession must consequently be investigated on this basis. In this connection, it is important to bear in mind the decision of the Judicial Committee in Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (4) which overruled the case of Koly Ohurn Sahoo v. Secretary of State for India (12) decided by a Full Bench of this Court in 1881. Lord Davey relied upon the earlier decision of the Judicial Committee in Trustees & Agency Company v. Short (13), in support of the proposition that on the dispossession of a trespasser by the vis major of the floods, the constructive-possession of the land is in the true owner; in other words, the land after submersion becomes derelict, and so long as it remains submerged, no title can be made against the true owner. If we apply this elementary principle to the circumstances of the present case, it follows that the defendants, in order that they may succeed on the strength of title by adverse possession, must prove, either that they had by adverse possession acquired such title since the date of re-formation and before the commencement of this litigation, or, that they had acquired such title to the extinction of the title of the true owner before the date of the diluvion. As regards the first alternative, the defendants cannot possibly succeed, because at the date of the institution of the suit on the 14th April 1914, only eleven years had elapsed from the date of the re-formation. As regards the second alternative, the defendants are in a similar jeopardy. The best attested instances of alleged possession do not extend beyond the 3rd February 1881 consequently not more than nine years had elapsed when the diluvion took place in 1890. There is thus no escape from the conclusion that even if we assume that the defendants were in actual occupation, their possession did not extend over the statutory period of twelve years either before the diluvion or after the re-formation. In addition to this, it is equally clear that the possession they allege does not satisfy the test formulated by Lord Robertson in Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (5), namely, that the possession must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent of area to take the title out of the true owner. Reference may also be made to the decision in Jogendra Nath Roy v. Baldeo Das (6), which is an authority for the proposition that the possession required must be actual, visible, exclusive, hostile and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitation. See also Amrita Sundari v. Sherajuddin (7). This is specially necessary in a case between landlord and tenant, because as explained in Ishan Chandra v. Ba Ramranjan (4) the tenant's possession of the lands encroached upon can commence to be adverse only when the title adverse to the landlord is asserted or the landlord becomes aware of the encroachment; this is essential to enable the tenant to acquire title to a limited interest by adverse possession thereof; see also Gopal Krishna v. Lakkiram (15), Sarada Kripalala v. Akhil Chandra Biswas (16), Muthuraku Thevan v. Robert Gordon Orr (17). The defendants thus find themselves in a situation of much embarrassment from the points of the view indicated and it is superfluous to investigate in detail how far the evidence of alleged possession is trustworthy, but we may add that no solid arguments have been advanced to shake the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that evidence is on the whole unreliable. There is little doubt that so far back as in 1881, steps were taken by them to fabricate evidence of possession by the acceptance of collusive kabuliyats which either related to fictitious tenancies or to lands situated beyond the limits of Khairaddi Kandi alias Edalair Kandi but designedly misdescribed as comprised within the ambit of its boundaries. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the defendants have signally failed to establish their alleged adverse possession of the disputed lands so as to extinguish the title of the true owner.

Burden of proof.*

In case of mortgaged land there can be no question of adverse possession unless the party claiming adverse possession had come into possession not only against the mortgagor but also against the mortgagee.

In a suit for possession the onus lies on the defendant to prove that the plaintiff having proved title is not entitled to possession of the suit property.

Second appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge, Poona, in Appeal No. 327 of 1919, reversing a decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Khed, in Civil Suit No. 732 of 1917.

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne),
for the Appellant.

Mr. M. H. Mehta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for possession of the suit property on the ground that he had purchased it from one Shripati on the 7th February 1916. The suit property together with certain other property was once in the ownership of Tabaji, who will be found at the head of the pedigree at page 1 of the print. The property was mortgaged in 1880 by Shivram the son and Bhau the grandson of Tabaji. In 1882, Shivram redeemed his share while Bhau continued the mortgage by a fresh mortgage, Exhibit 3. If the property was claimed to be joint and remained joint, so that Bhau's mortgage was a mortgage of an undivided half, then it could be said that Shivram and Bhau were tenants in common. But that is not the case which has been made out by either side. Clearly the title to half the property which was mortgaged by Bhau remained in Bhau, and the evidence shows that Shivram got possession of his half share. Thus the title remained in Bhau. The mortgagee, who was called as a witness, no doubt was unable to say when the mortgage was redeemed, but it is found that the mortgage has been redeemed. There can be no question of adverse possession unless the defendants had come into possession not only against the mortgagor, but also against the mortgagee. But they have not been able to prove that that is what has happened. It seems to me that the Appellate Court in reversing the decree of the lower Court has attached too much importance to the question of boundaries, although the learned Judge was satisfied that the disputed portion in this suit was in area about half of the land mortgaged in 1880, and that its assessment was about the half of what was then paid by the family. It seems, therefore, an inevitable deduction that the suit property is the share in the joint property which fell to Bhau after Shivram had redeemed half the joint property. There is no reason why Shivram's family who are admittedly in possession of one half should now seek to claim the other moiety without definitely proving that they had been holding that moiety adversely against the world for twelve years. I think, therefore, that the onus lay on the defendants to prove that the plaintiff having proved title was not entitled to possession of the suit property. Therefore, the appeal must be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside, and that of the Trial Court restored with costs in this Court and the Court below.

Inquiry as to mesne profits from the date of this Court's decree for three years or until possession is given.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 133, proceedings under—Obstruction of public way—Defendant setting up title—Magistrate, jurisdiction of, if ousted—Discretion of Magistrate to require party to assert his claim by civil suit—Power of Magistrate to continue the proceedings on failure to do so—Construction of Statutes.

Where in proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, arising out of an alleged obstruction of a way used by the public, the defendant sets up a claim of right the Magistrate's jurisdiction is not ousted even though he finds that the claim is made in good faith. [p. 183, col. 2; p. 186, col. 2; p. 187, col. 2; p. 191, col. 2; p. 195, col. 1.]

If the Magistrate does not consider such a claim of title to be well-founded, though he considers it to be made in good faith, he can, in the exercise of his discretion, allow the defendant a reasonable time to assert his claim by a civil suit and if the latter does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there, the Magistrate can continue the proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code. Per Sanderson, C. J.—The rules laid down in English cases should not be taken to bind a Court in construing an Indian Act. [p. 184, col. 2.]

The proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Statute and to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a Statute, intended to embody in a Code a particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a Statute surely was that on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used instead of, as before, roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions. Rule against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Alipore.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference made by Mr. Justice Newbould and Mr. Justice Suhrawardy on the 23rd August 1921 :—

This Rule is directed against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Alipore in proceedings under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Ali Naskar and others instituted proceedings under that section against the petitioners before us, Ram Sagar Mondal and another person, alleging that they had obstructed a public road. Ram Sagar Mondal showed cause denying the existence of the alleged public road and setting up a claim to the land in dispute. On the 5th April last, the Magistrate passed the following order :

"I have heard the Vakils for both the parties. The second party contend that in a criminal case I held that there was no pathway so the conditional order ought to be discharged. The Vakil for the first party has urged that this was a case of assault and my finding ought not to bind the present parties. I have given a careful consideration to the arguments advanced. I am of opinion that the claim of the second party though not substantiated is not mere pretence and is not raised to oust the jurisdiction of this Court but it is raised bona fide, so I think that following the ruling laid down in Manipal Dey v. Bidhu Bhukan Sarkar (1), I will give the second party a chance to go to the Civil Court. The second party should file a case within reasonable time and I allow them time till 25th May 1921 to do so, and if the second party does not go to the Civil Court within this time, the trial will be continued. Put up on 15th May 1921." The petitioner did not go to the Civil Court and on the 25th May 1921, the Magistrate refused to reconsider his order and directed witnesses to be summoned.

On behalf of the petitioner it is contended that on the Magistrate's finding that the petitioner's claim was bona fide his jurisdiction under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, came to an end and he was not justified in continuing these proceedings, because the petitioner failed to bring a suit in the Civil Court. On behalf of the opposite party it is contended that the finding that the claim, though made bona fide, was not substantiated, justifies the Magistrate's order which is supported by decisions of this Court. There is ample authority for the general proposition that in proceedings of this nature a bona fide claim of right raised by the person who is alleged to have obstructed a public way ousts the Magistrate's jurisdiction. This rule is clearly stated in Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu (2), which has been frequently followed. But in the case of Luckhee Narain Barer ee v. Ram Kumar (3), a distinction is drawn at page 573 between a claim of right which the Magistrate thinks well-founded and claim of right which the Magistrate does not think well-founded but considers to have been made bona fide. It was laid down that in the former case the Magistrate will take no further proceedings but in the latter he should allow the defendant an opportunity of asserting his claim by civil proceedings and that if he does not go to a Civil Court within a reasonable time or fails there the Magistrate will proceed.

We doubt the correctness of this view of the law. It seems to us that once the Magistrate has found that claim of right is made in good faith by the defendant he should stay proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code. We think it would be a waste of his time for him to enquire whether the defendant's claim is well-founded when he has no jurisdiction to decide the question of right. Also it appears to us unfair that a person in possession of land under a bona fide claim of right should be compelled by the Magistrate's order to be the plaintiff in a civil suit to maintain his right. A Magistrate might have doubts as to the bona fide of the defendant's claim and give him an opportunity of bringing a suit in order to prove his good faith but that is quite a different matter from compelling the defendant to institute a suit after the Magistrate has held that his claim is made bona fide.

In Luckhee Narain's case (3) it was found that the Magistrate was justified in coming to the conclusion that the claim of right was not bona fide raised and his order directing the removal of the obstruction was upheld. But though the remarks are an obiter dictum they have been followed and effect given to them in at least one decision of this Court, Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4). In that case the same point arose as arises in the present case and the learned Judge, who upheld an order of the Magistrate similar to that passed in the present case, cited the remarks in Luckhee Narain's case (3) in support of their decision. It is, therefore, necessary to make a Reference to a Full Bench to give effect to our opinion that the Magistrate's order is wrong.

It is not necessary to cite a large number of cases in which the broad principle, that a bona fide claim of right ousts the Magistrate's jurisdiction under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, has been affirmed. In many of them Luckhee Narain's case (3) has been relied on in support of this principle without any reference to the exception introduced by what may be called the doctrine of two degrees of bona fide. In one of them Nasaruddi v. Akiluddi (5) Princep, J., who was one of the Judges who decided Luckhee Narain's case (3), held that the Magistrate's order should be set aside on a finding that the plea was raised in good faith without any reference to the distinction between such a plea that is well-founded and one that is not well-founded. None of the other High Courts in India appear to have made such a distinction. It will be sufficient to cite those cases of this Court in which this distinction has been considered. In Mukunda Lal Dey v. Haribole Saha (6), Banerjee and Stevens, JJ., at the conclusion of their judgment reversed their opinion on this point. Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhusan

Sarkar (1) is the case relied on by the Trying Magistrate. There though Sharfuddin, J., in his judgment held that the party should be referred to the Civil Court if the claim is not substantiated though raised bona fide. Tennon, J., while holding, that the Magistrate must decide whether the question was raised in good faith stated that he did not agree in all the reasons advanced by his learned colleague. The case of Peary Lal Mullick v. Surendra Krishna Mitter (7), Peary Lal Mullick v. Surendra Kishore Mitter (8) came up to this Court twice. In this case the Magistrate's order was similar to that passed in the present case. On the first occasion Richardson and Shamsul-Huda, JJ., held that the Magistrate should not have passed the order in the form in which he made it without taking evidence and remanded the case. On the second occasion Shamsul-Huda and Ghose, JJ., held that the claim was based on substantial grounds and that it was not "necessary to consider whether, if and when a claim is found to be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court it is necessary to consider further, as appears to have been laid down in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3), whether the claim is well-founded, and if not well-founded whether the Magistrate has a right to direct one of the parties...within a reasonable time and on his failure to do so to resume the proceedings." We may also refer to the case of Kamini Kumar Biswas v. Emperor (9). There the Magistrate passed an order suspending proceedings for one month to allow the defendants an opportunity of establishing their claims in the Civil Court and cited Luckhee Narain's case (3) in support of this order. The Magistrate's order was set aside by Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ., on the ground that the petitioner's claim appeared to be bona fide. It, therefore, appears that though the general rule has been frequently applied, some doubt has been felt as to the correctness of the dictum which makes an exception by distinguishing well-founded and ill-founded bona fide claims. The point is one of considerable importance and as we doubt the correctness of the decision in the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4), a Reference to a Full Bench is necessary and we refer it accordingly. We formulate the points to be decided as follows:—

When in proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, arising out of an alleged obstruction of a way used by the public, the defendant sets up a claim of right which is found by the Magistrate to be made in good faith, is the Magistrate's jurisdiction entirely ousted?

Or can the Magistrate, if he does not think this claim well-founded though he considered it made in good faith, allow the defendant a reasonable time to assert this claim by a civil suit and if he does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there, can the Magistrate continue the proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code?

Was the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) giving effect to the dictum in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) rightly decided?

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerji (with him Babu Srish Chandra Biswas), for the Petitioner.—The facts of the case are shortly these: One Alek Naskar and others brought a criminal case against me under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was alleged that the petitioner-second party had included within their homestead a portion of a public road and had created a cowshed thereon. We showed cause denying the existence of the alleged public road and set up our claim to the land in dispute. The learned Magistrate was of opinion that our claim, though not substantiated, was not a mere pretence and had not been raised to oust the jurisdiction of the Court but that it had been raised bona fide. He thereupon fixed the 25th May 1921 within which we were directed to go to the Civil Court, in default the proceedings against us were to continue. We did not go to the Civil Court and for that reason the Magistrate directed witnesses to be summoned. Against that order we obtained the Rule out of which the present reference arises. The Rule was heard by Newbould and Suhrawardy, JJ., who has referred the matter for consideration by the Full Bench, (Reads the Order of Reference). If the Magistrate is not satisfied of the bona fide he may allow the parties to go to the Civil Court. The principle adopted in England goes to jurisdiction. But the case is wrong when they do not say that the parties should be referred to Civil Court in case of bona fides. The case of Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) has some bearing to the present case. Prior to this case there was no distinction between well-founded and bona fide claims. Intention to institute a suit is a test of a man's bona fides. That was held in Leg. v. Sandford (10). Refers to Nagaruddi v. Akiluddi (5). There the decision in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) was followed to this extent that the Magistrate should have refrained when he found that there was a bona fide claim of rights till that rights have been publicly declared by a competent Court. I submit that is the right view to take in the present situation. Refers to Queen-Empress v. Bisessur Sahu (2). There also the general rule laid down in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) was followed. [SANDERSON, C. J.—Look at Queen-Empress v. Bisessur Sahu (2)].

There may have been confusion between jurisdiction and judicial discretion in some of the decisions. The word 'jurisdiction' has been rather loosely applied, then. A Magistrate may enquire but not make a declaration till decision by a Civil Court. The Court ought not to go on further when the claim of right is a bona fide one. Refers to Preonath Dey v. Gobordhone Malo (11). There also "jurisdiction" and "judicial discretion" have been confusedly used. The head-note in the case is rather misleading. There they say that if the claim is bona fide that would notoust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate under sections 133 and 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Refers to Mukunda Lal Dey v. Haribole Saha (6). The Magistrate may find that it is a public way but the defendant may entertain a bona fide claim of right at the same time.]

[RICHARDSON, J.—That case has not much practical value.]

Except this that the case in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) has been followed. What is generally done is that the Magistrate holds a summary enquiry, finds whether the claim is bona fide or not and then decides the matter finally. Refers to Matuk Dhari Tewari v. Hari Madhab Das (12). There it was held that the Magistrate on ascertaining the bona fides of the claim should refer the parties to the Civil Court. Refers to Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) and Matuk Dhari Tewari v. Hari Madhab Das (12). In the last case the different functions of the Judge and the Jury have been laid down. There it has been laid down that the Magistrate has first of all to determine the bona fides of the case and then refer the parties to the Civil Court. The next case is Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhushan Sarkar (1). There for the first time a distinction is made out between a well founded bona fide claim and a not well founded bona fide claim. There, there was no enquiry made as to the bona fides of the claim and, therefore, the case was sent back for such enquiry. In effect their Lordships followed the decisions in Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) and Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3). The judgment of Sharfuddin, J. did not decide what ought to be done after the Magistrate was satisfied of the bona fides of the claim. Refers to Mahomed Ashrafuddin v. Sheikh Karim Buhsh (13). There it has been held that when a question of title is raised the question should be decided by Civil Courts. Refers to Kanini Kumar Biswas v. Emperor (9). There it was directed that the proceedings should be dropped after the parties have put forward bona fide claim although Magistrate was not satisfied of the bona fides. Refers to Peary Lal Mullick v. Surendra Krishna Mitter (7). This case came up again after remand to this Court and reported in Peary Lal Mullick v. Surendra Kishore Mitter (8).

It is an artificial distinction to draw a line between a well founded and a bona fide claim. A Criminal Court should see whether the claim is on substantial grounds and is bona fide, then it has no jurisdiction to entertain the case any further. My point is in every Criminal Court when it professes to deal with properties and not with offences belonging to individuals they have limited powers. Their duty is then to preserve the peace or remove the nuisance. It is only in exceptional cases, viz., in proceedings under sections 137 and 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code that the Criminal Court can make a final declaration. It is an error to suppose that because there is no Statute Law in this country there should be no ouster of jurisdiction. It is a principle of natural justice. Refers to Crais' Interpretation of Statutes, (2nd Edition) 472. Section 135, Criminal Procedure Code does not prevent the accused to put forward a bona fide claim of right. The rule as stated in Crais' Interpretation of Statutes, if it is in consonance with common law and principles of natural justice, ought to be given effect to in this country also. The cases only lay down that if there is a bona fide claim the parties should be referred to Civil Court. The moment the Court finds that it ought to stay its hands because the parties have bona fide claim, there ends his jurisdiction. I submit, therefore, that a distinction between a well founded or an ill founded claim is absolutely incomprehensible. It is an impossibility for the Court to find that a claim is bona fide but at the same time it is not well founded. This distinction does not appear to have troubled the other High Courts too. Refers to Ehagat Pershad v. Ramrup Karmokar (14), Fakir Mullick v. Emperor (15), Lakshman Chandra Ghose v. Bilash Roy (16).

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Babu Lalit Mohan Sanyal), for the Opposite Party.—Three questions have been referred to the Full Bench.—Whether jurisdiction is ousted, if not entirely ousted whether the Magistrate could allow the proceedings to be continued and lastly whether the case in Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) has been rightly decided. My submission is that jurisdiction has not been ousted. The provisions have been carefully made. A Magistrate's jurisdiction does not cease because a bona fide claim is set up. Refers to sections 133, 134, 136 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Jury has also the same function to discharge. The function of the Jury and the Magistrate are both the same. Refers to Norendra Nath Sarcar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (17), Satis Chandra v.

Ram Dayal (18). Penal Statute has been defined in Nassir v. Ohunder (19). The power exercised by a Magistrate is not summary judgment. Until the case in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) the law was different. The law has changed. Refers to Acts XXI of 1841 and XXV of 1861.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What do you mean by "bona fide is established" ?]

He succeeds in showing cause. No procedure for ouster of jurisdiction is indicated in the Act. Under section 137 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate has to see whether the order is reasonable and proper.

[RICHARDSON, J.—The onus under section 137 is upon the defendant. Assuming the Magistrate is satisfied that the claim is bona fide do you agree that he must hold that the order is not reasonable and proper?]

Y.s. The grounds of public policy and of uncertainty previous to the Full Bench decision in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) are no longer existing. We cannot invoke the principles of English Law to override the plain provisions of Indian Statutes. The provisions of Chapter X of the Criminal Procedure Code are not penal. Refers to Nassir v. Ohunder (19). There although section 183 is mentioned it is not penal. If the facts do come under the purview of section 183 irrespective of the provisions of section 136, the offence would be complete.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—In Basaruddin Bhuiish v. Baharali (20) the change was made. Need we go behind this ?]

Yes, to explain the case of Ohundernath Sen, In the matter of the Petition of (21). I will show how bona fide dispute originated. Refers to sections 308 to 310, 312, 320, Act XXV of 1861. At that time decision under section 303 was final and Civil Court had no jurisdiction. Refers to section 320, Criminal Procedure Code of 1861. There is no expression 'right of way' in the section. And because of this expression some Judges thought that cases would come under section 308. In section 320 only a temporary relief is granted pending decision of a Civil Court. But not so in section 308 which deals with public thoroughfare. Then (18) 59 Ind. Cas. 143; 43 C. 318 at pp. 418, 419; 32 C. L. J. 94; 24 C. W. N. 982; 22 Cr. L. J. 81. (19) 9 W. R. there was a change of Code in 1872. Refers to section 521. In section 532 the word 'right of way' is added.

[TEUNON, J.—Section 532 corresponds to section 147 of the present Code?]

With this important qualification that breach of peace is essential. Section 521 corresponded with section 320 of the Code of 1861 which corresponds with section 133 of the present Code.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What was the provision in Act X of 1882?]

They were sections 133, 147 which was the old section 532 plus breach of the peace. My submission is that on account of section 320 of 1861 and section 532 of 1872 the question of bona fide dispute was introduced in our case laws until the decision in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) where the principles of English Law were invoked. Refers to Angelo v. Oargill (22). That was a decision of Sir Richard Couch under the Act of 1861. When the matter is brought before the Magistrate he can determine whether it is a thoroughfare or not. Refers to Roy Omesh Chunder Sen v. Ichhanath Motumdar (23). That case was decided on account of the distinction between sections 521 and 532 of the Code of 1882. The functions exercised by the Jury and the Magistrate cannot be differentiated. Refers to Petamber Jugi v. Nasaruddin (24). That case also proceeds on the same footing. It follows Roy Omesh Chunder Sen v. Ichhanath Motumdar (23).

[TEUNON, J.—Was the case in Becharam Bhattacharjee, In re (25) under the Act of 1861?]

Yes. The next case of importance is Chundernath Sen, In the matter of the Petition of (21). It was under the Code of 1872. Here again section 532 was brought into requisition. The functions of the Magistrate and the Jury as provided in the Act were lost sight of. There it was question of discretion and discretion only, and the matter should be decided under section 532. In those days there was doubt whether the Civil Courts could interfere with a final order by Criminal Court. The matter was set at rest by Chunilal's case [Chunilal v. Ram Kishen Sahu (26)]. Refers to Basaruddin Bhuiah v. Baharali (20), Askar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (27), Lal Mish v. Nazir Khalaski (28). Uptill this time the principle of English Law was not imported. In Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3), for the first time they were introduced. If it is a question of discretion then Courts have the right to mould the precedences provided it is consistent with the law. All the claim that was made in the present case was that in a previous criminal case the Magistrate held that it was a private way. It is entirely a question of discretion to exercise jurisdiction or refer the parties to Civil Court if the claim made is bona fide and well-founded and postpone the case for a decision of the claim under section 344 and then finally decide the case. That I submit is the effect of the decision in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3). The Courts have power to mould the procedure consistent with the law. Refers to Pulin Behari v. Emperor (29). A Magistrate can postpone a case for a reasonable cause. I submit it being a question of discretion the order in question is fully within jurisdiction. The previous case was simply an assault case. I submit the Magistrate gave him two months' time to institute the suit. That was very kind and indulgent on the part of the Magistrate. The proceedings were started on the Police report by a responsible Magistrate.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Was the Police report made before or after the conditional order?]

It was made before the conditional order was passed. A prima facie case was made out. The question was raised by the second party. As a matter of indulgence the Court gives him an indulgence to establish his right of way in a Civil Court. I submit there is nothing wrong in that. There was no material before the Magistrate to judge of the bona fides of the claim. Here the question of title is in question and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to decide it according to principles of English Law.

RAM SAGAR MONDAL v. ALAK NASKAR.

Appellate Side, rule 5. A reference to the Full Bench in a criminal matter does not empower it to decide a case finally. It is a matter of discretion with the Full Bench to finally decide a case and no definite provisions have been made in the rule as in rules 2 to 4. I would ask you to accept as correct the findings of the Magistrate. The Magistrate says that my plea was not a pretence and, therefore, he referred me to Civil Court. I submit when it is raised not to oust the jurisdiction of the Court but bona fide.

I submit the finding is based on the material before him. I submit there is no provision of law to oblige me to run to Civil Court simply because section 137 is held in terrorem over me. The moment he finds that my claim is bona fide he should have dropped the proceedings. The proceedings are both penal and summary. Take the case of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. His decision on the question of title has no value whatsoever except to support his order. The word 'summary' means that an enquiry if held in the absence of a proper machinery or procedure, will be summary. Although it is not provided for in the Criminal Procedure Code in a case of bona fide defence it is the first question to be gone into but it has not the power to do.

[TRUNOV, J.—Whence does the principle come from?]

See Craik's Statutes, 472.

[TRUNOV, J.—If it is to be followed in India would we not find some provision in General Clauses Act?]

I submit it is a principle based on sound common sense. It has got to be followed on the ground of eternal justice. The Magistrate has no power to such claims. He could not waste his time because his decision would have no effect in Civil Courts. What does it mean if I have got a bona fide claim? I submit a Magistrate ought to stop his hands when he is satisfied of the bona fides of a claim.

That may be a historical case but it has never been mentioned in any of the subsequent cases. In that case it has nowhere been stated that the Magistrate had come to any finding of the bona fide of the claim nor were the facts such as to enable the Court to hold that the claim was bona fide. That is my submission with regard to that case. It is true that section 133 does not say that a person will be punished for non-compliance but the consequences are penal as provided in section 136, Criminal Procedure Code.

[RICHARDSON, J.—The proceedings under this Chapter have been described as quasi-civil and quasi-criminal.]

Yes. I submit a Magistrate is under no circumstances relieved from enquiring into the bona fides of the claim. It is only in exceptional cases that the Magistrate can interfere and must interfere without going into the bona fides of the claim. The English rule does not apply because there is no provision in the law empowering a Magistrate to proceed further when a bona fide claim is made.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Look at section 147. The Magistrate has got some facilities in section 133.]

Except this that under section 147 the chief thing to be averted is the breach of the peace.

[RICHARDSON, J.—Under section 147 the Magistrate would not go into the question of title?]

Only incidentally if it appears to him that such right exists. The framework of that section ought to be looked into.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Reference to a Full Bench by my learned brothers Newbould and Subhawardy, JJ. The questions which are submitted are:—

1. "When in proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, arising out of an alleged obstruction of a way used by the public, the defendant sets up a claim of right which is found by the Magistrate to be made in good faith, is the Magistrate's jurisdiction entirely ousted?"

2. "Or can the Magistrate, if he does not think this claim well-founded though he considers it made in good faith, allow the defendant a reasonable time to assert this claim by a civil suit and if he does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there, can the Magistrate continue the proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code?"

RAM SAGAR MONDAL v. ALEX NASHKAR.

"Was the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Bahim (4) giving effect to the dictum in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) rightly decided?"

The following facts may be taken from the case:—

"This Rule is directed against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Alipore in proceedings under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Ali Nashkar and others instituted proceedings under that section against the petitioners before us, Ram Sagar Mandal and another person, alleging that they had obstructed a public road. Ram Sagar Mandal showed cause denying the existence of the alleged public road and setting up a claim to the land in dispute." On the 15th April last, the Magistrate passed the following order:—

"I have heard the Vakils for both the parties. The second party contend that in a criminal case I held that there was no pathway, so, the conditional order ought to be discharged. The Vakil for the first party has urged that this was a case of assault and my finding ought not to bind the present parties. I have given a careful consideration to the arguments advanced. I am of opinion that the claim of the second party though not substantiated is not mere pretence and is not raised to oust the jurisdiction of this Court but it is raised bona fide, so I think that following the ruling laid down in Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhusan Sarkar (1), I will give the second party a chance to go to the Civil Court. The second party should file a case within a reasonable time and I allow them time till 25th May 1921 to do so, and if the second party does not go to the Civil Court within this time, the trial will be continued. Put up on 25th May 1921." The petitioner did not go to the Civil Court and on the 25th May, the Magistrate refused to reconsider his order and directed witnesses to be summoned."

On behalf of the petitioner it was contended that on the Magistrate's finding that the petitioner's claim was "bona fide" his jurisdiction under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, came to an end and he was not justified in continuing the proceedings, because the petitioner failed to bring a suit in the Civil Court. On behalf of the opposite party it was contended that the finding that the claim, though made bona fide was not substantiated, justified the Magistrate's order which is supported by decisions of this Court.

The case of Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) was referred to in the case as follows:—"But in the case of Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) a distinction is drawn at page 573 between a claim of right which the Magistrate thinks well-founded and a claim of right which the Magistrate does not think well-founded but considers to have been made bona fide. It was laid down that in the former case the Magistrate will take no further proceedings but in the latter he should allow the defendant an opportunity of asserting his claim by civil proceedings and that if he does not go to a Civil Court within a reasonable time or fails there the Magistrate will proceed."

The two learned Judges doubted the correctness of this view of the law and consequently they made this Reference to the Full Court.

With regard to the first question, in my judgment, the first step to be taken is to examine the sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, applicable to this matter, which are sections 133 to 139, and to interpret these sections according to the natural meaning of the language used.

I do not propose to discuss these sections in detail. It is sufficient for me to say that if the ordinary and natural meaning is given to the language used in these sections, in my judgment it is clear that the Magistrate had jurisdiction thereunder to decide the case even though a claim of title was raised by the petitioner, and even though, as the Magistrate held, the claim was "raised bona fide" and "was not a mere pretence and was not raised to oust the jurisdiction of the Court."

It was, however, argued on behalf of the petitioner that it had been held in England that, when the title to property is in question, the exercise of a summary jurisdiction by Justices of the Peace is ousted, and it was further argued that the same principle should be applied to the sections now under consideration. It was also urged that the principle is a principle of natural justice and should be applied unless an exception is made in the Act.

I cannot accept these arguments. In the first place I do not agree that the rule laid down in the English cases should be taken to bind the Court in construing the Indian Act in question: secondly, it is to be noted that the Code of Criminal Procedure is an Act for consolidating and amending the law relating to Criminal Procedure, and in my judgment the principle of construction laid down by Lord Herschell in the case of the Bank of England v. Vagliano (30) and affirmed by the Privy Council in Norendra Nath Sarcar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (17) should be applied to this Act. The passage in the latter case is as follows:—"It is hardly necessary for their Lordships to do more than express their concurrence with the judgment of the High Court. But they think it may be useful to refer to some observations in a recent case before the House of Lords as to the proper mode of dealing with an Act intended to codify a particular branch of the law. 'I think,' said Lord Herschell in the Bank of England v. Vagliano (30) 'the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Statute and to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a Statute, intended to embody in a Code a particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a Statute surely was that on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used instead of, as before, roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions.....'" Applying that principle to the sections of the Consolidating and Amending Act now under consideration, and giving to the language of the sections the natural meaning, in my judgment the Magistrate had jurisdiction to decide the questions before him, even though the defendants in the proceedings before the Magistrate set up a claim of title to the land in question.

Numerous cases were cited to us during the course of the argument, and it is said that there is a discrepancy to be found between the decisions of this Court. I think that to some extent there is a discrepancy. But on the whole, in my judgment, the weight of the decisions is in favour of the view which I have expressed.

For instance as long ago as 1872 in Angelo v. Oargill (22) the Court, when dealing with a section of the Criminal Procedure Code then in force, held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to decide whether the place was a thoroughfare and whether there was an obstruction, though the defendants claimed the land as their own property. The sections then under discussion do not differ materially from the sections now under discussion and the Advocate-General appearing for the defendants in that case, raised in his argument the identical points which have been raised on behalf of the petitioner in this case, yet the Court held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction.

In Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) which was decided in 1828, the decision, in my judgment, implied that the Magistrate had jurisdiction though the learned Judges stated that this Court in revision in several cases had given directions as to the mode in which the Magistrates should exercise their powers. The following passages in the judgment may be referred to. Page 570: "The ground upon which these decisions have proceeded is that there is no provision made in Chapter X of the Code for an enquiry into disputed questions of title; and that it cannot be held to have been the intention of the Legislature that question of this nature raised bona fide should be finally decided in a summary manner and to the exclusion of any recourse to the Civil Courts. These decisions go, not actually to the jurisdiction of the Magistrates, as the English rule referred to does, but rather to the mode in which, in revision, this Court has held that the Magistrates should exercise their powers, following the principles of the English rule so far as may be;" page 573, viz., "Our observations in this judgment are, of course, directed to that part of section 133, which relates to the case now before us and deal with obstructions to public ways. We may observe that in cases in which danger to public health or safety is involved, we by no means suggest that the Magistrate is fettered, in the exercise of the powers given to him under these sections, by the considerations to which we have adverted." It seems clear that if the Magistrate has jurisdiction in cases, where public health and safety are endangered, he must also have it in cases where they are not endangered, for the jurisdiction to deal with the two classes of cases is conferred by the same words in the Act.

These passages seem clearly to imply that the Magistrates had jurisdiction, but that this Court had from time to time given directions as to the mode of exercising that jurisdiction. It is to be noticed that the learned Judges in the last-mentioned case drew attention to the case of Ohuni Lal v. Ram Kishen Sahu (26) whereby it was decided that the right of an owner of land to bring a suit under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act against one of the public, who formally claimed to use such lands as a public road and who has thereby endangered the title of the owner, is not barred by an order of a Criminal Court under section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In Queen Empress v. Bisessur Sahu (2) the learned Judges held that the Magistrate "ought not to have made the order if there was a bona fide contention on Bisessur's part that the path was not a public way" and the learned Judges quoted with approval the passage from the judgment in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3). The head note of that case seems to me to go further than the actual decision.

Again, Fakir Mullik v. Emperor (15) (decided in 1916) is, in my judgment, a decision confirming my view that the Magistrate had jurisdiction even though a bona fide claim of right had been set up.

It was, at the end of the argument, practically conceded that to say that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction or that "the Magistrate's jurisdiction was entirely ousted" was putting the case too high, but the argument was urged that under the circumstances of the case the Magistrate ought to have stayed his hand and should not have proceeded with the enquiry when he found that the defendants were putting forward a claim of title in the land, bona fide, and the Magistrate should have allowed the parties to litigate the question in the Civil Court.

In my judgment, therefore, the first question should be answered in the negative.

The second question may conveniently be divided into two parts. With regard to the first part—the learned Vakil for the petitioner did not complain of the ruling at page 571 in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) which runs as follows:—

"When such a question is bona fide raised the Magistrate ought not to make an order under this section of the Code; he should allow an opportunity for the determination of the question by the Civil Court." But objection was taken by the learned Vakil to the passage at page 573: "If the Magistrate does not think this claim well-founded, so far as he can judge, but considers that it is made bona fide, he should allow the defendant an opportunity of asserting it by civil proceedings." It was urged that the defendants who might be in possession of the land, should not be forced into the position of plaintiffs in a civil suit to maintain the claim of right. It was argued further that the distinction between an ill-founded bona fide claim and a well-founded bona fide claim is unintelligible. In my judgment there is considerable force in those arguments. At the same time I am unable to say that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order of 15th April 1921. It seems to me that it was a matter for the discretion of the Magistrate. He had apparently on that date, on the materials then before him, come to the conclusion that the claim of title set up by the defendants had no substance in it; although he believed that the claim was not set up as a mere pretence. Having given the defendants an opportunity of instituting a suit in the Civil Court, of which the defendants failed to avail themselves, the Magistrate proposed to enquire further into the facts of the case. In view of the judgment which I have already given on the first question I am unable to say that he had no jurisdiction to continue the proceedings under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

With regard to the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) which is the subject of the second part of the second question, in my judgment, it cannot be said, having regard to the facts of that case, that it was wrongly decided.

It is necessary for the Court to decide whether the Rule in this case should be made absolute or discharged. The Magistrate, as I read his judgment, came to the conclusion on the materials then before him, that there was no real substance in the claim of title, and consequently, in my judgment, the Rule should be discharged.

TURNON, J.—In this matter the facts have been sufficiently set out in the order made by the Referring Bench and also in the judgment of his Lordship the Chief Justice. It is, therefore, unnecessary for me to recapitulate them.

In many cases decided under Chapter X of the Code of Criminal Procedure there has been considerable conflict of judicial opinion, and much that is not to be found in the sections themselves has been imported into them by the Courts.

In a case such as the present it appears to me that there are but two questions for the Magistrate (or for the Jury, if under sections 135 and 138, a Jury be substituted for the Magistrate) to decide, namely, (1) whether the way in question is one which is or may be lawfully used by the public, and (2) whether such way has been unlawfully obstructed. These two questions should be decided on evidence in the same manner as any other questions arising in criminal proceedings. There appears to me to be no reason why in a codifying enactment such as the Code of Criminal Procedure, we should introduce any rule of interpretation borrowed from English Law. It is also not for us, but for the Legislature, to say whether questions of title should or should not be decided in the Courts of Magistrates. When in proceedings under section 132, a claim of private title is asserted the good faith or bad faith of the defendant raising this plea, in my opinion, is immaterial. There is no reference to good faith in the sections themselves and if on evidence the Magistrate (or the Jury) be satisfied that the path is a public path, the Magistrate should act on that decision and conclude the controversy for the time being. The defendant, if aggrieved, still has his remedy in the Civil Courts.

Whether in any individual case before making his conditional order absolute, the Magistrate should give the defendant an opportunity of establishing by suit his claim of private title is at most a question of discretion and I am not prepared to lay down any general rules for the exercise of such judicial discretion. I may, however, point out that sub-section (2) of section 133, does not appear to favour any such reference of parties to the Civil Courts.

In the result I should answer the questions referred to us, which I take to be three in number, as follows:—To the first question my answer is 'No.' To the second question my answer is that in the exercise of his discretion the Magistrate may take the course indicated in the question.

To the third question my answer is that I am not prepared to say that on its own facts the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) was wrongly decided.

For the reasons given I agree in discharging this Rule.

RICHARDSON, J.—Section 133, and the following sections of the present Code substantially repeat the corresponding sections of the earlier Codes. The word 'thoroughfare,' however, used in the Codes of 1861-1869 and 1872 is re-placed in the Codes of 1882 and 1898 by the expression 'way which is or may be lawfully used by the public.' The purpose in view is the removal of unlawful obstructions from public ways and the abatement of certain other nuisances affecting the public health or safety such as the carrying on of a trade "injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community." Proceedings are initiated by a conditional order in appropriate terms. If the order is not obeyed, inquiry may follow whether it is a reasonable and proper order or not, the result depending on the finding arrived at upon that issue. The inquiry may be made, at the choice of the defendant, by a Magistrate or by a Jury.

The first and principal question referred to this Bench may be thus stated. Whether, a conditional order having been made for the removal of an alleged unlawful obstruction from an alleged public way, the Magistrate's jurisdiction to proceed further is ousted if the defendant raises a bona fide claim of right or title.

Under the Code of 1861-69 it was held that it was for the Magistrate to determine whether a way was or was not a "thoroughfare" [Beoharam Bhattacharjee, In re (25) and Angelo v. Oargill (22)]. But under the Code of 1872 there seems to have been either an abrupt transition to a different view or a reversion to some earlier view; witness the observations of Phear, J. in Roy Onesh Chunder Sen v. Ichannath Mozundar (23) decided in 1874, less than two years after Angelo's case (22) and without any reference thereto, and see also Petamber Jugi v. Nasaruddi (24) and Ohundernath Sen, In the matter of the Petition of (21).

The view then taken was apparently determined by two considerations. In the first place the power given by the provision in the two earlier Codes corresponding to section 147 in the later Codes, enabled a Magistrate to intervene in any case of dispute concerning a right of way, public or private. The provision was not restricted, as it now is, to disputes likely to lead to a breach of the peace. In the second place, it was doubted at the time whether an order made by a Magistrate under what I may call the section 133 procedure would be conclusive in the Civil Courts on the question of highway or no highway. There was some conflict of opinion and it was not till 1882 that the point was decided by a Full Bench in favour of the Civil Court Chunilal v. Ramkishan Sahu (26). Upon these considerations, it was laid down that where there was any dispute concerning the existence of a "thoroughfare" the Magistrate should follow, not the section 133 procedure, but the different procedure appropriate to cases of dispute under which the Magistrate's final order would be subject, by express enactment, to the result of proceedings taken in a competent Court by a party aggrieved.

Section 147 assumed in the relevant particular its present form in the Code of 1882 and this change in the law made it clear that section 147 and section 133 were entirely independent provisions and that neither section could be used to throw any light on the interpretation of the other, the object, scope and language being totally different. If there was any overlapping, that merely meant that in some cases where a public way was concerned, the Magistrate might have alternative procedures open to him. At the same time there was no reason why the restricted operation of section 147 as compared with the corresponding previous provision, should of itself enlarge the powers given by section 133. It became necessary, therefore, to re-examine the position and this was done in Luckhoo Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) which has since been treated as the leading case.

The judgment then delivered has already been referred to and I will only say that, as it seems to me, the learned Judges attempted to find a basis for previous decisions in the rule or maxim of English Law, that, "where the title to property is in question, the exercise of a summary jurisdiction by Justices of the Peace is ousted." (Paley on Summary Convictions, 8th Edition, page 157). It is this maxim which they set before themselves as one to be followed in India "so far as may be." The difficulty lies in this qualification, as the Magistrate cannot in the same case both have and not have jurisdiction. No satisfactory conclusion can be reached without considering whether the maxim should be, not partially, but wholly accepted or rejected.

The maxim is probably due in its origin to conditions which no longer obtain. There was a time when few Justices of the Peace had any training in law. Formerly also Statutes were less scientifically drawn than they now are and were in consequence more loosely interpreted according to their supposed reason or equity. An illustration lies ready to hand in the deer-killing case cited by Paley on page 158, where Holt, C. J., said this:—

"And, therefore, if there was a dispute concerning the limits of a walk in a forest; and one claims as part of his walk what is in fact a part of the division of another, and accordingly kills deer there, the case is out of the intent of the Act, but is plainly within the words. The intent of the Act was to punish rogues and vagabonds and not to persons who by mistake in the execution of their trust exceed what the law warrants." Rea v. Speed (31).

But however the rule originated, it has been explained in more recent times as a presumption applicable to the construction of statutory powers conferred on Justices of the Peace—a presumption which may or may not be displaced by the language employed. In Reg. v. Cridland (32) Oromptor, J., said: "Being an old maxim of law, which has been so generally applied for ages, we must assume that it is still intended to be applied by every Act relating to such matters though not specifically mentioned," and in White v. Feast (33), Blackburn, J., was explicit. "All summary jurisdiction," he observed, "is the creature of Statute and on the principle that title could not be intended to be decided by an inferior tribunal, there has arisen the well-established rule that every Statute giving summary jurisdiction has the implied restriction as to title and the Justices must hold their hands if a bona fide claim of right is set up. On the other hand, in some Statutes, as the Highway Acts, the terms used to show that the Justices were not to hold their hands even if a right were set up."

(31) (1700) 1 Ld. Raym. 583; 91 E. R. 1920.

No doubt the Justices were supposed to know all about the local highways and one reason why in my opinion this presumption should not be intruded into the Criminal Procedure Code, is that I doubt whether it has been consistently applied in England. It was not applied, for instance, in Williams v. Adams (34), and Vaughan, Ex parte (35), while it was applied in Reg. v. Justices of Forcet (35) and Reg. v. Stimpson (37). At any rate where it is not applied, the Justices retain full jurisdiction of the nature affirmed in Reg. v. Bolton (38), and where it is applied the jurisdiction ceases on a bona fide claim of title being raised.

In England, again, the Superior Courts derive their jurisdiction to decide questions of right and title from the Common Law and may at one time have regarded encroachments with suspicion. The jurisdiction of the Indian Courts from the highest to the lowest depends on Statute. No doubt Civil Courts of various grades have been created for the special purpose of deciding questions of right and title. But as time goes on, various powers may be conferred either on existing Courts or on newly created Courts outside the range of the ordinary Civil Courts. If the presumption that none but a Civil Court is to decide a question of right or title is admitted in one case, it may be extended to other cases and to other tribunals created, it may be, for some particular purpose or to administer some particular Act. Quite recently a tribunal was created by the Calcutta Improvement Act for purposes of that Act and only the other day the President of the Tribunal was vested with certain powers to deal with rents in Calcutta. Indian Statutes being of the modern character, it seems to me wholly advantageous and desirable that they should be interpreted by the ordinary canons without resort to an adventitious presumption recognised, it may be, in England, but not sanctioned by general principle and not authorised by anything in the Indian General Clauses Act, which is itself, so far as it goes, a statutory Code of construction. It is for the Legislature when it creates a new jurisdiction to define and limit the extent of that jurisdiction, as it does, for example, in the Small Cause Courts Act, and when the question arises what powers are or are not conferred, the answer ought to be found within the four corners of the Statute.

In conferring powers relating to land or any other subject matter on Magistrates, it is easy to say, if that is the intention, that the Magistrate's jurisdiction is ousted if a bona fide claim of right or title is raised. Or the restriction may be qualified so that the Magistrate's jurisdiction will not be affected unless the claim made is not merely bona fide but also fair and reasonable (c.f. White v. Feast (33), Re v. French (39)).

When we come to the actual language and scheme of these sections, it is clear that the question of public way or no public way, if it arises, is directly involved in the enquiry which the Magistrate or the Jury have to make. To use words which occur in the cases, the question is an essential element in, or goes to the foundation and merits of, the enquiry. Ever, therefore, if this were an English Statute it might well be debated whether the Magistrate had not a complete jurisdiction. But if, as I think, the language should be interpreted without any presumption one way or the other, it is plain that the Magistrate or the Jury have full jurisdiction to deal with a question of right or title for the purpose of determining whether a conditional order is reasonable and proper. The Jury, where there is a Jury, would presumably be persons acquainted with the locality, the Legislature relying not on their knowledge of law but on their local knowledge.

That construction is supported by the authority of Sir Richard Couch, C. J. in Angelo's case (22) though the learned Chief Justice did not consider the question of ouster of jurisdiction now raised. It is strange that Angelo's case (22) does not appear to have been cited in argument or referred to in any subsequent case before the present. The case was decided, as I have mentioned, under the Code of 1861-1869. I do not know whether the subsequent enlargement of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court was a factor in altering the course of opinion. Under the Code of 1861-69, the High Court could only intervene in respect of error in law. Under later Codes the High Court in revision may question "the correctness, legality or propriety" of any finding, sentence or order of an inferior Court and make an appropriate order.

If then the Magistrate has this jurisdiction, it is difficult to justify the general instructions laid down in Luckhee Narain's case (3) dictating how he should act in the exercise of his discretion. Such rules, with all respect, trespass beyond the legitimate sphere of interpretation and revision into the sphere of legislation. It is "wrong in principle for any Court or Judge to impose fetters on the exercise by themselves or others of powers which are left by law to their discretion in each case as it arises." Saunders v. Saunders (40).

The instructions involve the distinction referred to in the second question submitted between bona fide claims of title which are well founded and bona fide claims which are ill-founded. This distinction was a new departure, which has not met with undiluted favour. [See Mukunda Lal Dey v. Haribole Sahi (6) and Peary Lal Mullick v. Surendra Kesore Mitter (8)].

I do not say that an order giving a defendant whose claim the Magistrate considers ill-founded a limited opportunity to go to the Civil Court is not within the Magistrate's jurisdiction, but he also has jurisdiction, and in some cases it may be his duty, to act himself on his own finding that the claim is ill-founded. It is matter for his discretion. As I apprehend, it would, in the same sense, be within the Magistrate's discretion in such case to terminate his proceedings leaving it to either party desiring to do so to seek a remedy in the Civil Court in the usual way. All that can be said beforehand is that the existence of a bona fide dispute of title may be an element for the Magistrate's consideration.

Then, again, there is the difference which the learned Judges authorised between the treatment of obstructions to public ways and the treatment of the other nuisances, specified in section 13, which affect the public health or safety. In the case of these other nuisances, the learned Judges say, the Magistrate is not to be fettered in the exercise of the powers given him by the considerations applicable to obstructions to public ways. This difference of treatment is not easy to support. Questions of right, if not of title, may arise, for instance, in connection with the issue whether some trade should or should not be carried on in some locality. That no real distinction exists is shown by the fact that in one or two subsequent cases (no doubt of an exceptional character) this doctrine of urgency has been extended to obstructions to public ways, though nothing in the way of danger to the public health or safety seems to have been involved [Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) and Fakir Mullick v. Emperor (15)].

It cannot be said that the possibility of a conflict between the Civil and the Criminal Courts was eliminated by the judgment in Luckhee Narain's case (3). Even under the procedure there laid down a defendant might neglect the opportunity given him of going to the Civil Court pending the Magistrate's proceedings. But he might still succeed, after the Magistrate had made a final order against him, in establishing in the Civil Court that the way was not a public way. Would the Magistrate be bound by the Civil Court decree? Sir Richard Couch thought that the Civil Court had no power, in effect, to reverse the Magistrate's order because otherwise there might be a conflict of jurisdiction. "The consequence of that," he said, "would be that there might be another order by the Magistrate, another Jury appointed, another similar finding, and then another suit, and so on. The law does not allow that." Meechoo Chunder Sircar v. Ravenshaw (41). The Full Bench in Chuni-lal's case (26) overruled the view that the Magistrate's order could not be brought in question in the Civil Court, but were silent as to the effect of conflicting decisions. It may be that few Magistrates would go against a decree of the Civil Court. The danger may be remote. Nevertheless it exists and in some combination of circumstances the point may arise and cause difficulty.

In my opinion, the attempt made in Luckhee Narain's case (3) to find a half way house between holding that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction where a bona fide claim of title is raised and holding that he has full jurisdiction, placed the law on an unsound and uncertain basis. There can only be two alternatives, either the Magistrate has this jurisdiction or he has not. If he has the jurisdiction, it is beyond the province of this Court to curtail it. And the real difficulty in choosing between the two alternatives for the purpose of answering the first question submitted is this, that in actual practice the distinction which Luckhee Narain's case (3) draws between well and ill-founded claims has been generally disregarded, and the raising of a bona fide claim of title has been treated, apart from exceptional cases decided on the ground of urgency, as being in itself an effective bar to the Magistrate proceeding further, [cf. Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu (2), Pranath Dey v. Goborahone Malo (11) and Kamini Kumar Biswas v. Emperor (9)]. The case is often cited and profession is made of following it, but in general the result has been as I have said. In that state of things my doubt has been whether this Bench should radically alter a practice which goes back to the Code of 1872 or whether it should be left to the Legislature which is understood to be engaged in the revision of the present Code, to put its intentions beyond all doubt. On the whole, however, for the reasons which I have endeavoured to express I agree with my Lord and Teunon, J., that the first question referred to us should be answered in the negative. If it were answered in the affirmative further questions would arise which need not now be considered as to the time at which the objection to the Magistrate's jurisdiction should be taken and as to the position of a Jury where the claim is made after the case goes to them. Subject to what I have already said I agree that an affirmative answer should be returned to the first branch of the second question. Further than that I express no opinion in regard to Belat Ali's case (4).

I agree that in the result the Rule should be discharged.

NEWBOLD, J.—There is very little difference in practice between the rule of English Law that a bona fide claim of title ousts the jurisdiction of Justices proceeding in a summary way and the effect of decisions of this Court in revision that a Magistrate should stay his hand when in proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, he finds that a claim of title is raised bona fide. No reference was made to this distinction when the case was argued before my learned brother Subrawardy, J., and myself. Had there been we should have framed the questions which we referred for decision by a Full Bench differently. The form in which we have put the questions requires a decision on the point of ouster of jurisdiction. Now that I have considered these questions from the point of view of a member of a Full Bench and am no longer bound to follow previous decisions of Divisional Benches, I am convinced that there is no ouster of jurisdiction. I have read the judgment which my learned brother, Richardson, J., has just delivered and find myself so entirely in agreement with his views that I do not think it necessary to say more than that I fully agree with that judgment.

RAM SAGAR MONDAL v. ALEK NASKAR.

GHOSE, J.—The questions referred to the Full Bench for determination are as follows:—

"When in proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, arising out of an alleged obstruction of a way used by the public, the defendant sets up a claim of right which is found by the Magistrate to be made in good faith, is the Magistrate's jurisdiction entirely ousted?"

"Or can the Magistrate, if he does not think this claim well-founded though he considers it made in good faith, allow the defendant a reasonable time to assert this claim by a civil suit and if he does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there, can the Magistrate continue the proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code?"

Was the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4), giving effect to the dictum in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3), rightly decided?"

The present reference has arisen out of an application to this Court under the provisions of section 43 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by one Ram Sagar Mandal, described as one of the second party, against whom proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, had been instituted on the complaint of one Alek Naskar and several others. It was alleged that Ram Sagar Mandal and another person had included within their homestead a portion of a public road and had erected a cowshed thereon. Ram Sagar Mandal showed cause denying the existence of the alleged public road and setting up a claim to the land in dispute. The Magistrate was of opinion that the claim of Ram Sagar Mandal, though not substantiated, was not a mere pretence and had not been raised to oust the jurisdiction of the Court but that it had been raised bona fide. He thereupon directed that the second party should go to the Civil Court within a date fixed by him, namely, within the 25th May 1921, and that in the event of the second party not going to the Civil Court within the said period, the trial should be continued. The petitioner did not go to the Civil Court and thereupon the Magistrate directed witnesses to be summoned.

On behalf of the petitioner it was contended before the Division Bench and also before us that on the Magistrate's finding that the petitioner's claim was bona fide, his jurisdiction under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, came to an end and that he was not justified in continuing the proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, simply because the petitioner had failed to bring a suit in the Civil Court. On behalf of the opposite party, the contention was put forward that, having regard to the findings arrived at by the Magistrate, the jurisdiction of the Magistrate had not been ousted and that he was justified in making the order in the manner in which he did.

In order to appreciate the contentions set out above, it is necessary to refer to the terms of section 133 and of the sections which follow in Chapter X of the Criminal Procedure Code and to some of the more important cases decided under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The sections, it need hardly be stated, have to be interpreted according to the natural meaning of the words used. Section 133, so far as it relates to the case before us, lays down that whenever the Magistrates mentioned in the section consider on receiving a Police report or other information and on taking such evidence, if any, as they think fit, that any unlawful obstruction or nuisance should be removed from any way, river or channel which is or may be lawfully used by the public or from any public place, they may make a conditional order directing the removal of such obstruction or nuisance or directing the person responsible for the obstruction or nuisance to appear before a Magistrate and move to have the order set aside or modified in manner indicated in the Statute. Section 134 deals with the service of notification of the conditional order made under section 133. Section 135 lays down the courses open to the person against whom the conditional order has been made. He can either perform the act directed in the conditional order within the time limited therein or appear and show cause against the conditional order or he can apply to the Magistrate to appoint a Jury to consider whether the conditional order is reasonable and proper. The procedure which is to be followed in the event of the person affected failing to take advantage of the provisions of section 135, and also in the event of the person affected following the provisions of section 135, is indicated in sections 133 to 141 of the Ori-iminal Procedure Code. Further, in cases where there is likelihood of imminent danger or injury of a serious kind to the public, the Magistrate is empowered by section 142, to issue, whether a Jury is to be or has been appointed or not, such an injunction to the person against whom the conditional order has been made, as is required to obviate or prevent such danger or injury pending the determination of the matter.

It may be noted in passing that section 133 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure corresponds to section 521 of the Code of 1872, which again corresponds to section 308 of the Code of 1861. Under the Code of 1872, it was held by this Court that in proceedings under section 521 of that Code, if a claim of private right were set up in respect of what was alleged to be a thoroughfare or public place, the Magistrate could not make any order under section 521, and the following sections, but was to proceed under section 532 (which corresponds to section 147 of the Code of 1882, and of the present Code), so that the person claiming such private right should have an opportunity of having the question raised by him duly required into and determined. It is unnecessary to refer to the cases in support of this view: they will be found collected in the case of Chundernath Sen, In the matter of the Petition of (21). The ratio of the decisions was that it was no part of the duty either of the Magistrate or of a Jury acting under section 526 of the Code of 1872, to determine the rights of parties in property. Then came the Code of 1882, and in the case of Basaruddin Bhuiah v. Baharali (20) Mr. Justice Wilson observed as follows:—"It has been more than once held by this Court that the powers now embodied in sections 133 to 137, with regard to the obstruction of public ways, are not to be exercised where there is a bona fide dispute as to the existence of the public right. In the present case it is plain that the right of way is really in dispute, and that its existence is at least open to doubt. No order, therefore, can be made under the sections referred to, until the public right has been established by proper legal proceedings, civil or criminal." It is to be remembered that the Code of 1882 and the present Code of 1898 did not and does not in section 147 as in section 532, the corresponding section of the Code of 1872, give a Criminal Court power to deal with such a matter. The case in Basaruddin Bhuiah v. Baharali (20) was followed without any discussion in the cases reported as Astar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (27) and Lal Mich v. Nazir Khalzahi (28).

In Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) the question was discussed at some length and the cases under the Code of 1872 were referred to. It was pointed out by Prinsep and Pigot, JJ., that in accordance with the last mentioned decisions it had been held by this Court that a Magistrate proceeding under the like sections of the Code of 1882, was not, when a bona fide claim of title was set up, to proceed to make an order but was to allow the party setting up such a claim to substantiate it if he could do so by civil proceedings. It was further pointed out that there were no proper provisions in Chapter X of the Code of Criminal Procedure for an enquiry into disputed questions of title and that it could not have been held to have been the intention of the Legislature that questions of this nature raised bona fide should be finally decided in a summary manner and to the exclusion of any recourse to the Civil Courts. In the case in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3), the learned Judges after pointing out that these decisions in question did not go to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate but only to the mode in which Magistrates should exercise their powers, observed further as follows on page 571:—

"When such a question is bona fide raised the Magistrate ought not to make an order under these sections of the Code, but should allow an opportunity for the determination of the question by the Civil Court.

"The claim of title must, however, in order that it should be allowed to have this effect, be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction, and it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim be bona fide or a mere pretence. The Magistrate cannot, of course, in determining this, decide contrary to the facts that the claim is not made bona fide but must have reasonable and probable cause for his decision, which will be subject to revision by this Court. The rule, however, that a bona fide claim of title ought not to be determined in summary proceedings before the Magistrate is subject to this, that the objection must be raised by the defendant at or before the hearing; he cannot be heard afterwards to object to the result of proceedings to which he has deliberately submitted himself."

The broad principle thus laid down in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) has been followed or referred to with approval or has been acted upon in numerous cases in this Court and does not seem to have been questioned at all in subsequent cases: but the controversy, such as it has been, has raged round a distinction drawn in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) between a claim of right which the Magistrate thinks well-founded and a claim of right which the Magistrate does not think well-founded but considers to have been made bona fide. The remarks, last referred to, have been considered in several cases as has been pointed out in the referring order; they have been followed and effect given to them in the case of Belot Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4).

The rule laid down in the case in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3) that a bona fide claim of title ought not to be determined in summary proceedings before the Magistrate is often described as amounting to this, namely, that the Magistrate, having jurisdiction to enter upon the enquiry and having rightly entered upon it, becomes incapacitated to proceed because some fact appears which ousts his jurisdiction. No doubt it is a principle of the English Common Law that the jurisdiction of Justices is ousted by a bona fide claim of title on the part of a defendant; but it is to be noted that in England it has been held that although a claim of title is put forward bona fide by the defendant, if such a claim is necessarily involved in the very question which the Magistrates have to decide, their jurisdiction is not ousted [Reg. v. Bradley (42)]. In this country we have to proceed upon the words of the Statute as we find them. Now, excess of jurisdiction may either exist at the time when the Magistrate embarks upon the enquiry under section 133 and when the conditional order is made and in that case there is no jurisdiction to hear the case at all—a contingency which is excluded by the terms of the Statute itself, or it may crop up in the course of the hearing. When the Magistrate embarks upon an enquiry under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, there is clearly no want of jurisdiction as has been shown above; and having regard to the very careful and guarded language used by the learned Judges in Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3), I find it difficult to say that the assertion of a bona fide claim of title ousts the jurisdiction of the Magistrate in the sense in which the expression is used and understood in England. One test for ascertaining whether a matter is within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate or not is to consider the nature of the arguments used against the Magistrate. If there was no jurisdiction the Magistrate ought not to have entered into the enquiry at all; but if the argument is that the Magistrate's authority is not fettered in any way in cases where danger to public health or safety is involved but is fettered in other cases, it is quite clear that the Magistrate has jurisdiction. Where a Magistrate decides one way when he ought to have decided another way, that is not, in my opinion, absence or want of jurisdiction. The manner in which the Magistrate's discretion ought to be exercised in a particular set of circumstances is a different matter altogether and has nothing to do with questions of jurisdiction.

In my opinion there cannot be any manner of doubt having regard to the provisions of section 133 that the Magistrate has complete jurisdiction when he makes the conditional order under section 133. If the person, against whom the conditional order has been made, has a bona fide claim of right, he should draw the attention of the Magistrate to it at the earliest possible moment. On such a claim being put forward it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim has been advanced before him with some show of reason and whether it is something more than a bare assertion; in other words it is for the Magistrate to say whether there is a real or substantial question between the parties to be tried out. If the Magistrate is of opinion that there is such a question, he ought to stay his hands at once and take no further action in the matter but refer the parties to the Civil Court. Whether or not the claim can be ultimately maintained in the Civil Court is altogether another matter; it is not for the Magistrate to enquire into all the circumstances to see if it is impossible. But if the claim of right put forward is of a character unknown to the law, the Magistrate is under no obligation to stay his hands although it is bona fide; in other words a mere belief in a right, although bona fide, ought not to be sufficient to induce the Magistrate to stay his hands. This does not mean, however, that the Magistrate is to embark upon a prolonged enquiry into what has been described as the degrees of bona fide in the claim of right advanced before him. For instance, where the encroachment or obstruction complained of is upon a way admittedly public, there cannot be any question that the Magistrate must proceed beyond the stage of the conditional order, even if a claim of right were put forward by a person believing in the claim.

The view taken above is not inconsistent with what has been held to be the proper procedure to be followed in cases of emergency where there is likelihood of imminent danger or injury of a serious kind to the public. Indeed the Magistrate's discretion in cases of danger to public health or safety cannot be fettered as is amply recognised at page 573 of I. L. R. 15 Cal. [Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar (3)].

I, therefore, answer the first question by saying that if the Magistrate finds that there is a real or substantial question to be tried out between the parties he ought in the exercise of his discretion to stay his hands and not proceed any further after making the conditional order under section 133. In my opinion it is not a case of ouster of jurisdiction and there is no ouster of jurisdiction.

I answer the second question by saying that the Magistrate is entitled to continue the proceedings where the objector shows nothing more than a mere belief in the claim of right put forward. The Magistrate is not entitled to direct the objector to go to the Civil Court because in his opinion the claim of right cannot be ultimately maintained. So far as the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (4) is not inconsistent with the above view, it was rightly decided.

As regards the matter out of which the present reference has arisen, I read the Magistrate's order as meaning that he was of opinion that no real or substantial question of title between the parties had been raised before him. If I am right in this interpretation of the Magistrate's order, it follows that the Magistrate was not bound to stay his hands. In this view of the matter I would discharge the Rule which was issued by the Divisional Bench.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 612 OF 1921.

January 22, 1922.

Present :—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

BIRNARAYAN SINGH—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Accused acquitted—Judgment of acquittal recorded—Case "not false" according to Magistrate's own impression—Direction that case be entered as "true" in Police register—Magistrate's own impression and direction, recorded as part of judgment—Revision—High Court's power to expunge—Judicial or executive order—Government of India Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 81)—Acquittal—Not guilty—Judicial functions—Executive powers—Evidence of character—Admissibility of judgment of acquittal for injuring character of acquitted person.

In a case of extortion against a Police Officer the Trying Magistrate, finding the prosecution evidence as insufficient and unconvincing and the defence evidence as more convincing, recorded a judgment of acquittal but added that his own impression was that the case was "not false" and that it should be entered as "true" in the Police register. The Police Officer sought in revision that that part of the Magistrate's judgment which cast a slur upon his character and was inconsistent with the verdict of acquittal may be expunged:

Held, 1 that, the order of the Magistrate being a judicial one, the High Court had power to deal with it under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, and that it had also power to deal with it under its general superintendence under the Government of India Act; [p. 199, col. 2.]

(2) that as a judicial order the order objected to was illegal and inconsistent with the judgment of acquittal; that as an executive order it had no business to be in a judgment; and that, therefore, whether executive or judicial, it should be expunged from the judgment. [p. 199, col. 2.]

No suggestions of any kind can be made against the accused when a verdict of not guilty is recorded except that of establishing his complete innocence. [p. 198, col. 2.]

Rea v. Plummer, (1902) 2 K. B. 339 at p. 348; 71 L. J. K. B. 805; 66 J. P. 647; 86 L. T. 836; 18 T. L. R. 69; 5 W. R. 37; 20 Cox C. C. 243, referred to.

Even a judgment of acquittal, merely upon the benefit of doubt being given to the accused by reason of suspicious circumstances in the case of the prosecution is entitled to be regarded as a complete exoneration of the accused. [p. 198, col. 1.]

A Magistrate exercising judicial functions has to divest himself for a moment of his executive powers and has to forget himself that he has to deal with the person before him as an executive authority. [p. 199, col. 2.]

Judgments of acquittal are not admissible in evidence even in a case where the character of the person is directly under enquiry under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; far less can it be permitted to be used by the Magistrate in this case for the purpose for which he recorded it in his judgment, namely, to throw a slur upon the character of the Sub-Inspector for executive or administrative purposes. Petition for revision against an order passed by the Deputy Magistrate, Daltonganj, dated the 17th September 1921.

Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Petitioner.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued by Adami and Bucknill, JJ, against the following order passed by the Magistrate of Daltonganj, dated the 17th September 1921 :—

"At the same time my impression after going through all the evidence and Police papers, etc., in the case is that the case is not false. I do not believe that any money was extorted from Ram Pratap Singh, but it seems to me that the other two complainants were made to pay some money before they were let off, but on account of their being influenced by Ram Pratap Singh and Jai Pragash Singh, who wanted to improve upon the facts, they have not told a genuine story and have mixed up facts and thus made their evidence untrustworthy and unsafe. Enter true; sections 384 and 384—114, Indian Penal Code."

The petitioner is the Sub-Inspector of Police and was called upon to stand his trial before the Magistrate upon charges under the aforesaid sections 384 and 384—114, Indian Penal Code along with one Mahadeo Puri, for having extorted money from three persons, namely, Ram Pratap Singh (P. W. No. 1), Badri Dasadh (P. W. No. 2) and Bukhan Dasadh (P. W. No. 3), of village Sundipura, in connection with an enquiry into a case of wrongful confinement, assault, etc., alleged before the Sub-

The defence in the case of the accused was that the entire case was false and concocted, having been engineered by a veteran enemy of the accused. The trial ended in the acquittal of the accused of all the charges. The Magistrate examined the facts of the case and the evidence in a very great detail.

The case of the prosecution and the witnesses on behalf of the prosecution was that money was paid to the accused persons on the sixth day of their arrival in the village. To rebut this the defence filed diaries of the case of Deomonika Mallahin from the 16th to the 20th of April showing that the Sub-Inspector reached village Sundipura on the 16th of April, at 11 A. M., and left the village at 4 A. M. on the 20th, and thereby proving that he could not be in the village on the date on which the extortion is said to have taken place. In support of this, the Sub-Inspector also filed the personal diary of the Head Constable Abdul Rashid. The learned Magistrate accepted the defence case to be true and stigmatised the case of the prosecution to be false in the following words :—

"Thus there can be no doubt that the statement that money was paid to the accused persons at Sundipura on the sixth day of their arrival there (on the 21st April 1921) is false."

Similarly he characterised the statement of the witnesses on the point in the following words :—

"That it was perhaps forgotten that the witnesses thereby rendered their evidence valueless by their statements being shown to be contrary to facts."

The learned Deputy Magistrate proved by means of documentary evidence stated by him in his judgment that Ram Pratap Singh, complainant, had perjured himself at every material point of the case. He relied upon the bail-bonds (Exhibits G, H, I, J and K) containing the thumb impressions of the bailors, showing that those persons were present in Daltonganj Court on the 1st of April and consequently "if any payment was made, it must have been made on or before the 19th of April."

As to the persons named above having been called upon by the Sub-Inspector for purpose of negotiation at or about the time the search of the house was made, the learned Magistrate accepted the version of the accused that the houses were searched by the Head Constable and that the Sub-Inspector was examining the complainant and the witnesses on the 18th and the 19th and took bail from the accused on the fifth day. This he arrived at also upon a reference to the documentary evidence in the case, and came to the following conclusion:—

"The prosecution evidence on this point has already been shown to be unreliable and the prevaricating statements made by the prosecution witnesses on these points clearly show that they were not speaking the truth. I hold that the defence version on this point is the correct one."

As regards the actual payment and the motive for payment, the learned Magistrate devoted three typed pages of his judgment in order to show the material contradictions and improbabilities in the story told by the complainant and their witnesses of their having been threatened to be tied by ropes and having made the payments alleged by them to the Sub-Inspector. He held that Ram Pratap Singh and his cousin Jai Pragash Singh were the most influential men in the village and were clever men and could not easily be duped into doing a thing they did not like. As a result of the close investigation and scrutiny of the evidence upon the point of payment by the three persons Ram Partap Singh, Badri Dasadh and Bhukhan Dasadh, the learned Magistrate recorded a clear and definite finding in the following words:—

"It will be seen from the above that the prosecution evidence is discrepant and self-contradictory almost at every point regarding payment and time and motive. The diaries of the case of Deomonia conclusively show that all the prosecution witnesses have told lies regarding the date of payment."

He also criticises the attitude of Ram Pratap Singh and Jai Pragash Singh in the matter. He closes his examination of the evidence in the following words:—

"From the above it will be seen that the prosecution evidence is insufficient and unconvincing and having been rebutted in material details by the much more convincing defence evidence in the form of documents cannot be accepted. Coupled with the nature of the evidence, there are the irregularities in the proceedings, and the effect of all these taken together is to make the case a failure. The result is that I hold that the prosecution has failed to prove its case and I find that none of the two accused is guilty of the charges framed against him. I accordingly acquit them under section 253, Criminal Procedure Code".

The trial of the case and the enquiry into the charges of the accused ended here. The only issue before the Court upon the charges was whether the prosecution proved its case or not against the accused, or to put it shortly, whether the accused were guilty or not of the offences charged. All the points that arose in connection with the charges for the determination of the Court were set forth in the preceding paragraphs of his judgment and his decisions were recorded thereon seriatim with detailed reasons for those decisions. The judgment, therefore, was complete, and after the aforesaid verdict of acquittal was recorded, no other point arose before the Magistrate. It is said that the remark in question was added obviously for the purpose of administrative entry of the case being true or false under paragraph 314, Chapter XIII, of the Police Manual. Now, the object of this rule is to have a record of the opinion of the Magistrate upon the first information reports and final reports in cognizable case received from stations and outposts. Clause (d) of the rule requires the entry of the case to be in the form of one of the following in the general register:—true, intentionally true, mistake of law, mistake of fact, non-cognisable or not investigated, and the order with respect to the entry is to be made by the Magistrate of the district, the Magistrate in charge of criminal cases at Sadar and the Magistrate in charge of Sub-Divisions [vide clause (b)]. This rule does not apply to Magistrates trying the case. The register has to be filled in by the classes of Magistrates mentioned above, and he is obviously to do that upon the result of the case. The Magistrate trying the case may not necessarily be one of the three kinds of Magistrates, namely, the District Magistrate, the Magistrate in charge of criminal cases at Sadar or the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, as is contemplated by the rule. Therefore, it was not the judicial function of the Magistrate, who tried this case, to record this order in his judgment of the case. That judgment was a judgment of acquittal, and on a perusal of that judgment another Magistrate (whose duty was to record an entry in the register) was to find out what should be the nature of the entry. The entry in question is purely executive and administrative, and after the case had ended in the acquittal of the accused, the Magistrate had nothing more to decide as to what his personal impression was as regards the guilt or innocence of the accused. The judgment recorded in the present case by the Magistrate was a judgment entirely in favour of the accused. Nowhere throughout the judgment he suspected the defence made by the accused. On the other hand, he accepted all the counter-versions of the case, at each stage, made by the accused. In the present case the accused being a responsible officer, namely, the Sub-Inspector of Police chose to give evidence and his own version of the case. He took upon himself the responsibility of disclosing what truly happened. He did not content himself with only throwing doubt upon the case of the prosecution to obtain an acquittal by reason of the benefit of the doubt, as is often done by an accused in an ordinary position. He went further and laid his own case in order to show what the truth was. The investigation of the Magistrate, and, I may observe, a careful and searching investigation led to the conclusion that the prosecution case was improbable, false and concocted at every stage, and that the version of the accused was true in its substance. In vain have I ransacked the judgment of the Court to find out a single sentence about doubt and suspicion thrown upon the case of the defence. It was, as I may be able to say, an honourable acquittal. Even a judgment of acquittal, merely upon the benefit of doubt being given to the accused by reason of suspicious circumstances in the case of the prosecution is entitled to be regarded as a complete exoneration of the accused. A judgment of the type recorded by the Magistrate in the present case stands on a still higher footing and is a verdict of an honourable exoneration of all the charges and stigma cast upon the accused. Still with a view to make a record of an executive character the Magistrate thought it best to give his own impression and an impression derived, as he says (1) from the evidence generally which he had already discussed in detail and come to the conclusion that the prosecution case was false and the version of the defence was true, (2) an impression derived from the Police papers, most of them may not be relevant and the accused had not the opportunity to meet and (3) an impression derived from what he says "etc", which is too vague to find place in the judgment. The Magistrate was not entitled to use all these kinds of expressions against the accused, in order to give him a character which may injure the accused and which may throw a suspicion upon the careful judgment that he had already recorded just preceding the paragraph in question. The leading case of Re v. Plummer (1) is an authority for the proposition that no suggestions of any kind can be made against the accused when a verdict of not guilty is recorded except that of establishing his complete innocence. Bruce, J., in that case observes:—

"As to the note by Mr. Greaves in Russell on Crimes, 4th Edition, Vol. III, page 146, referred to in the judgment of Wright, J., where it is suggested that a verdict of not guilty is not to be taken as establishing the innocence of the person acquitted, because the verdict may have been arrived at simply in consequence of the absence of evidence to prove the guilt, I think, it is a very dangerous principle to regard a verdict of not guilty as not fully establishing the innocence of the person to whom it relates".

This decision has been followed in a number of cases in India, Emperor v. Nani Gopal Gupta (2) Fulin Behary Das v. Emperor (3) and Rajendru Narayan Singh v. Emperor (4). Judgments of acquittal are not admissible in evidence even in a case where the character of the person is directly under enquiry under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; far less can it be permitted to be used by the Magistrate in this case for the purpose for which he recorded it in his judgment, namely, to throw a slur upon the character of the Sub-Inspector for executive or administrative purposes, that is, to complete a record or register as required under the Police Manual. Even assuming for the sake of argument that the trying Magistrate in the present case could under the Police Manual make an entry as to the case being false or true, his direction to enter the case "true" is against his clear finding that it is false.

Now, what is the meaning of the words "Enter true. Sections 384 and 384—114, Indian Penal Code" recorded by the Magistrate? An entry made under the said rule of the Police Manual of the falsity of a case, such as "Enter false", has been interpreted to mean a discharge of the accused or a dismissal of the complaint even where the word "dismissal" was not recorded under section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore, the true interpretation of the words "Enter true. Sections 384 and 384—114, Indian Penal Code" means that the case of the complainants of a particular charge of extortion, which formed the subject matter of specific charges against the accused, was true. This is wholly inconsistent with what the learned Magistrate has himself recorded in his judgment that the case of the prosecution was not proved and was concocted and false. The principal charges under sections 384 and 384—114, Indian Penal Code, which the Magistrate now wants to be recorded as true, were held by him to be false. Therefore, this entry, if it has any judicial meaning, is inconsistent with the considered judgment of the Magistrate and is sought to be supported only upon his impressions. As a judicial order it is, therefore, illegal, and is not in accordance with his judgment. No reason has been given and, therefore, it must not stand in the judgment. As an executive order, it has no business to be there in a judicial pronouncement, without giving proper opportunity to the accused of meeting those impressions. The privilege of passing an opinion in a case of this kind has been overstepped. Non-compliance with the strict provisions of the law took away the privilege which was given to the Magistrate against the subject. Such an entry has been interpreted by certain authorities as an entry of a purely executive character. If it is so, the Magistrate exercising the judicial functions has to divest himself for a moment of his executive powers and has to forget himself that he has to deal with the person before him as an executive authority. What he would have done in his executive capacity, we are not concerned with. What he will do in his executive capacity we do not want to know, nor can we stand in his way; but we do not want that a judicial pronouncement should be disfigured, and the judicial functions exercised by a Magistrate should be blurred in the manner in which the Magistrate has done in the present case. We do not at all want to enter into a general enquiry into the character of the Sub-Inspector. He may or may not be a habitual offender, all the specific charges brought against him have been held not to be true and he has been acquitted without any suggestion of misconduct.

It has also been argued that this Court cannot interfere with the order in question. I have clearly shown that if it is a judicial order, this Court has power to deal with it. If it is an executive order, it must not remain in the judgment. Taking any view of the case, this Court has jurisdiction in the case. It has been said that section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not intend to cover a case of this kind, where the order passed is not based upon the evidence but upon an impression, the order being to enter true. When the order is deleted, the reasons in the preceding paragraph must also go. The High Court has also power to deal with a case of this kind under its general superintendence under the Government of India Act. The power of the High Court to delete irrelevant orders of this kind has been upheld in the case of Emperor v. Thomas Pellako (5) where the irrelevant remarks and the Judge's opinion on certain matters contained in the judgment were ordered to be expunged and deleted on the ground that they were "ill-judged and should not have found a place in a judgment in a criminal trial." This case is stronger than that.

I would, therefore, direct that the order of the Magistrate, whether it is executive or judicial, in the two concluding paragraphs of his judgment should be expunged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144, order under, legality of, whether can be questioned.

The mere fact that an application to revise an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, was rejected by the High Court on the ground that when the application was made, the period of the order had elapsed, would not preclude a Magistrate in a trial, under section 188 of the Penal Code, from questioning the legality of the order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Dinajpur, dated the 3rd May 1921, affirming that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Thakurgaon, dated the 11th January 1921.

Babus Manmath Nath Mukerjee and Pannalal Chatterjee, for the Petitioners in Rule No. 514.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal, for the Petitioners in Rule No. 515.

JUDGMENT.—These two Rules are directed against a conviction of the petitioners under section 188, Indian Penal Code. They were convicted on two trials; but the appeals against the conviction were heard jointly by the learned District Magistrate of Dinajpur. The convictions were based on the disobedience of an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, which was passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Thakurgaon forbidding the people in general especially the proprietor of Nitbazar hat contiguous to Lahiri hat which was owned by a different proprietor to hold the Nitbazar hat on Mondays and Fridays. At the hearing of the appeals, it was urged that there was no necessity of an order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The question of the legality of the order does not appear to have been properly considered by the lower Appellate Court. That Court appears to have held that the order must be held to have been legally passed because an application to the High Court against that order failed. But the application was rejected by this Court on the ground that at the time it was made the period of the order had elapsed and it was stated when the order was passed that the question of the legality of the order could be raised at the trial of the petitioners should they be prosecuted under section 188, Indian Penal Code. We, therefore, direct that the orders passed by the Appellate Court in these two cases be set aside and the appeals be re-heard. We think it desirable, as requested by the petitioner's Vakil, that the appeals should be re-heard not by the District Magistrate but by the Sessions Judge; and we order accordingly.

Punjab Excise Act (1 of 1914), ss. 58, 59, 65, 78—Licensee of liquor-shop contravening rules as to keeping correct registers—Sentence of fine and order for forfeiture of liquor, validity of.

The mere making of an incorrect entry in the registers, kept under rules framed under sections 58 and 59 of the Punjab Excise Act, is not an offence in itself. It is only a wilful contravention of any regulation made under sections 58 or 59 which is punishable under section 65 of the Act. [p. 201, col. 2.]

An order directing forfeiture of liquor and empty bottles found in the shop is illegal and cannot be passed under section 78 of the Act. [p. 201, col. 2; p. 202, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 2nd September 1919, confirming that of the Revenue Officer, exercising the powers of a Magistrate, First Class, Gujrat, dated the 16th May 1919.

SUNDAR DAS v. EXCISE.

Mr. Mokand Lal Puri, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The brief facts of the case, out of which the present applications for revision arose, are as follows :—

Sundar Das and Ganpat Rai are joint licensees of a liquor shop at Mauza Tanda in the Gujrat District. Two cases were started, one against Sunder Das under section 61 of the Excise Act for illicit possession of country spirit at Marza Lakhanwal where he has no shop, and the other against Sunder Das, Ganpat Rai, and Haveli Ram, son of Sunder Das, who works in the shop at Tanda, under sections 65 and 77 of the Excise Act read with rule No. 314 framed under sections 58 and 59 of the Act. Sunder Das had a pass for the importation of two dozen bottles and four dozen half-bottles of liquor for the shop at Tanda but on arrival of the consignment at Gujrat four of the large bottles were found to be missing. When the consignment reached Tanda, Haveli Ram entered in the register prescribed for the purpose, the receipt of two dozen large bottles and four dozen small bottles. He did not show that any of the bottles covered by the pass were missing.

In the case under section 61 of the Act Sunder Das was convicted by the Trial Court but his conviction was set aside by the learned Sessions Judge on appeal, it being held by that officer that Sunder Das was not found in possession of any illicit liquor at Mauza Lakhanwal. In the other case he convicted all the three accused persons and fined them Rs. 25 each. The Magistrate disposed of both the cases by one judgment and at the end passed an order of forfeiture under section 78 of the Act by which he confiscated all the liquor found in the shop at Tanda, 80 empty bottles also found there, and the bottles of liquor said to have been found in Sunder Das's possession at Lakhanwal. He did not state in the judgment in which case the order of forfeiture was passed. If it was passed in the case under section 61 of the Excise Act it should have been set aside by the Sessions Judge when he accepted the appeal of Sunder Das.

It is asked in revision that the convictions and sentences under sections 65, 77 and rule 314 of the Excise Act be set aside and that the order of forfeiture should also be set aside. The theory of the prosecution was that Sunder Das used to keep some of the bottles of liquor received in a consignment and take them to Lakhanwal and sell them there illegally, that this was known to Haveli Ram who entered in the register the total number of bottles covered by the pass no matter whether he received the full number or not. As the conviction of Sunder Das under section 61 has been set aside the alleged reason for the wrong entry by Haveli Ram in the register cannot be said to be proved. His explanation is that he intended in the evening to make an entry in the remarks column showing that so many bottles were missing and so many were broken out of the consignment covered by the pass. Counsel points out that under rule 314 all that is necessary is that the licensee should maintain the registers prescribed and that these should show the true accounts of transactions from day to day. It was admitted by the Excise Inspector that the amount of sales is entered in the evening of the day of sale and it is, therefore, contended that if the register be examined in the middle of the day it cannot be expected to show a complete account of all the transactions which had taken place on that day and that it is only when the entries are completed in the evening that the record of transactions is correct and up to date. It is quite clear that Haveli Ram should not have shown 24 large bottles as received when only 18 bottles actually reached him. But the mere making of an incorrect entry in the register was not in itself an offense. It is only a wilful contravention of any regulations made under section 58 or 59 which is punishable under section 65 of the Excise Act. Haveli Ram's explanation cannot, in my opinion, be said to be an unreasonable one and having regard to the fact that no sufficient reasons have been shown why he should have wilfully made a wrong entry, I think he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. In my opinion he has been wrongly convicted of an offense under section 65 (b) of the Act and if his conviction is set aside those of Sunder Das and Ganpat Rai must also be set aside.

I, therefore, allow the revisions and setting aside the convictions acquit Sunder Das, Ganpat Rai, and Haveli Ram and order refund of the fines paid by them. As the accused persons in both the cases have

I would also point out that the order of forfeiture of the liquor and empty bottles in the shop at Tanda was illegal and could not have been passed under section 78 of the Act. The offence, if any, committed at Tanda was merely a contravention of a rule as to the keeping of the registers framed under sections 58 and 59 of the Act. No offence would appear to have been committed in respect of the liquor and of the empty bottles within the meaning of section 78.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1899), ss. 367, 424—Judgment perfunctory—Illegality.

Where a District Magistrate disposes of an appeal against an order under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, passed in a case in which 42 witnesses were examined for the prosecution and 106 for the defence, in a few lines, making only some general observations on the volume of evidence, the judgment is perfunctory and not in accordance with law, and should be set aside.

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Moradabad, dated the 1st July 1921.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the District Magistrate, Moradabad:—

In this case Sunehri and five others have been ordered by the Sub-Divisional Officer to give security for good behaviour for one year or in default to suffer one year's imprisonment. They are alleged to form one gang and to be habitually engaged in committing theft, robbery, dacoity and burglary. A very large number of witnesses have been examined on each side. The number of witnesses called to the defence exceeds a hundred but I must weigh the quality of the evidence rather than count the number of witnesses. A large number of respectable persons, some of whom are closely connected with Sunehri, depose to the bad character of the gang. The defence witnesses, on the other hand, for the greater part belong to the same caste as most of the accused, that is to say, they are Gujars, a very turbulent tribe in these parts.

I consider that the case against the accused would probably have been stronger had the Police been a little more careful in testing the witnesses before they produced them in Court. But even setting aside the weaker witnesses for the prosecution there remains a very large mass of evidence which to my mind amply establishes the evil reputation of the accused as thieves, robbers, burglars and dacoits. The defence witnesses on the other hand have been unwilling to back their opinions with their money and not one of them has come forward to stand as security for the accused.

The appeal is dismissed.

JUDGMENT—The first ground taken in this revision is that the judgment of the Appellate Court is very perfunctory. That ground, in my opinion, is a good ground. I must set aside the orders of the District Magistrate and send the case back for re-trial and for proper consideration of the evidence. The case is a case under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and 42 witnesses were examined for the prosecution and 106 witnesses for the defence. The learned District Magistrate has disposed of the appeal in a few lines and has only made some general observations upon the volume of evidence which was put before him. This is not a proper way of disposing of an appeal of this kind and the learned District Magistrate's judgment is not in accordance with law. The order is set aside and the case is sent back for re-trial and for the recording of a proper judgment.

Criminal revision against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Gaya.

Messrs. K. P. Jyawal, S. S. Bose and H. Chakravarty, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Hassan Jan, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order passed in proceedings taken under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, declaring the first party to be in possession of an area of 4½, 36 acres of land in village Horio.

The first and second parties were co-sharer landlords of the village, each having an eight anna share.

In 1914 Gajadhar Singh and others in order to pay off the amount due by them under three decrees obtained by Karan Singh, sold 50 bighas of kasht land to Kali Charan Singh and mortgaged 26 bighas of their kasht holding to him. In 1917 Kali Charan Singh sold the 50 bighas to Bechan Khan and Dhanukdhari Singh and assigned the mortgage to Bechan Khan and Sadho Lal. Bechan Khan was admittedly the Farzidar of Qasim Ali the first party, and Dhanukdhari and Sadho are claimed by the second party as the Farzidars of their brother and karti, Ram Chariter Singh. One Bhageswari Prasad held a money-decree against Karan Singh, and in 1914 attached the three decrees obtained by Karan against Gajadhar, but he sold the decree to Qasim Ali first party in 1915, and the latter in execution of the three decrees of Karan Singh, entered a petition of satisfaction stating that the whole amount due on the three decrees had been paid. It is the case of the first party, that Qasim alone paid the amount, the second party ever that they paid their half share of the amount in the name of Dhanukdhari their Farzidar, while the first party claim to have been in sole possession of the kasht lands after their purchase, the second party claim that they held joint possession, having paid half the purchase price. The first party in 1920 instituted a suit on the basis of the mortgage assigned to Bechan and Dhanukdhari in 1917, making the second party among others defendants. In that suit it was found that the mortgage bond was not properly attested and valid and that consideration did not pass, it was also held that Qasim Ali had not acted fairly and that he had managed to abstract certain documents which went to help the defendant's case. The Subordinate Judge also held that Qasim Ali did not alone pay the amount which satisfied Karan's decrees. The suit was dismissed. While that suit was pending the second party instituted a suit for partition and obtained a preliminary decree in 1920. After that decree trouble arose between the parties as to possession of the lands and on a Police report, proceedings under section 144 were started, the first party claiming exclusive possession and the second party joint possession. Thereafter the proceedings under section 144 were converted into proceedings under section 145, and later on the proceedings were revised, but the revised proceedings did not contain clear particulars of the disputed land. The second party were called on to supply particulars of the lands they claimed, but as the final decree in the partition suit had not been passed the lands allotted to them had not been demarcated, they delayed filing the particulars until after the final decree had been passed. They eventually claimed possession of 32½ bighas out of the disputed area, being lands in the area allotted to them by partition. The learned Magistrate considered that the delay in furnishing particulars told against the second party, petitioners, but I am inclined to think that having obtained a preliminary decree in the partition suit, it was natural that they should be anxious to wait until they knew which of the lands in dispute fell into their takhts. The Magistrate took no notice of the findings in the judgment of the mortgage suit brought by Qasim or of the petition of satisfaction filed by Qasim. These show without doubt not only that Dhanukdhari was a Farzidar of the second party and thus the second party had a share in the purchase from Kali Charan, but also that the second party through Dhanukdhari paid their share of the amount due to satisfy the decrees. The petition of satisfaction clearly proves this. It was virtually held by the Magistrate that the second party had failed to show that Dhanukdhari was Farzidar or that the second party contributed to the satisfaction of the decrees. He considered the oral evidence as to possession and decided that that of the first party was preferable to that of the second party, and observed that possession under the partition decree could not help the second party, since the demarcation of the second party's takhts was made within two months of the order starting the proceedings. I might point out for the information of the Magistrate that for the purpose of a decision under section 145 the dispossession within two months must be a forcible and wrongful dispossession, and possession delivered under a decree would not be a dispossession of that character. However, that is besides the point, for possession delivered by the Court after a decree for partition of lands held in proprietary right cannot affect in this case the possession of the kasht lands which are in dispute; the parties base their claim on a purchase of kasht lands.

It is contended that inasmuch as the second party claimed joint possession of the purchased lands with the first party the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take proceedings under section 145.

Now I think it is clear on the strength of the judgment in the mortgage suit and on the petition of satisfaction which Qasim Ali filed that the second party had a rightful claim to joint possession of the purchased kasht lands, and that claim was virtually asserted in the mortgage suit, though the question of possession did not form an issue. It might be said that in that suit Qasim claimed exclusive rights and that the possession which has been found to be his by the Magistrate was all along adverse to the second party. That may be so but all along the second party were claiming that any possession which Qasim Ali might have was partly on their behalf, and, as I have found, they were justified in that claim.

That being so, as has been consistently held by this Court, there being a good and valid claim to joint possession the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take proceedings under section 145 and pass the order he did. The order declaring the first party to be in possession is, therefore, set aside.

Sanction to prosecute, whether ends of justice require —Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 191, 192, 193.*

On the 18th July 1919 the petitioner filed a written statement in a suit against him in which he denied the execution of a hand-note. On the 6th of November of that year in the course of certain criminal proceedings the petitioner was examined as a witness and there he admitted that as a matter of fact he had executed the hand-note. Sanction having been given for his prosecution under section 199, Penal Code, the present Rule was obtained:

Held, that the only question was whether the ends of justice required that there should be a prosecution of the petitioner in respect of the written statement filed on the 18th July 1919 and that on the whole after the lapse of time the ends of justice did not require that there should be a prosecution in respect of what may be spoken of as the petitioner's temporary lapse from probity not persisted in but rather apparently repented of.

Revision.

Babus Dcsarathi Sanyal, and Santosh Kumar Fore, for the Petitioner.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, and Nanda Gopal Banerjee, for the Opposite-Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case sanction for the prosecution of the petitioner has been granted to the opposite party. The prosecution for which sanction has thus been granted is with reference to a written statement in which in a certain suit brought against the petitioner he denied the execution of a certain hand-note. This written statement was filed on the 18th July 1919. On the 6th November of that year a co-sharer with the opposite party in a certain property purchased by the petitioner brought against the opposite party criminal proceedings alleging misappropriation by the opposite party of her share in the purchase money. In these proceedings the petitioner was examined as a witness and there he admitted that, as a matter of fact, he had executed this hand-note and that the sum of Rs. 250 in respect of which the hand-note was executed had not been, as he had alleged in his written statement, paid with the rest of the consideration money in cash. The sanction given for his prosecution is under section 199 Indian Penal Code.

It has been argued before us that this section can have no application to the facts alleged. That is probably correct. But when reference is made to section 191 it will be seen that though section 199 may not be applicable section 193 will clearly apply. The only question really before us then is whether the ends of justice require that there should be a prosecution of the petitioner in respect of his written statement filed on the 18th July 1919. On the whole after some consideration we think that after this lapse of time the ends of justice do not require that there should be a prosecution in respect of what may be spoken of as the petitioner's temporary lapse from probity not persisted in but rather apparently repented of.

We, therefore, make this Rule absolute and set aside the sanction granted for the prosecution of the petitioner and the proceedings that have been taken thereunder.

Rule against an order of the Magistrate, dated the 14th January 1922

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule relates to an order of the Magistrate, dated the 14th January 1922, directing the prosecution of the petitioners under section 188, Indian Penal Code.

PARMESHWAR RAI v. EMPEROR.

On a report of the Police, dated the 18th of November 1921, a notice was issued under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against certain persons forbidding them to hold a new bazar and interfering with the long-standing old Gondra bazar. This order was disobeyed and the offenders were prosecuted and convicted under section 188, Indian Penal Code.

The Police on the 13th of December 1921 reported that in spite of the conviction of the aforesaid persons their friends and helpers were threatening "to break again the old Gondra bazar" and were determined to hold a new bazar quite close to it and were ready to create a serious breach of the peace. Accordingly, he prayed for a general notice against the people preventing them from going to the particular plots where the new bazar was proposed to be held and to persuade customers to sit on the new bazar. As prayed by the Police, the Magistrate directed a general notice to be issued on the public and served on the spot, in the following order :—

"Issue a general order directed to the public frequenting the new market, or attending it to buy and sell, requiring them not to do so for the space of two months from date of service, and not to help in any way the continuance of the new bazar so that thereby there may be a speedy remedy to prevent an imminent breach of the peace between the old bazar people and these setting up and continuing the new one."

On the 20th of December, the Sub-Inspector of Police reported against the present petitioners, stating that in spite of the order of the Magistrate under section 144, these persons "set the orders at defiance and did not care for the legal orders duly promulgated. They persuaded people and customers to sit in the new bazar though they were quite willing to obey the orders and go to the old bazar."

Says the Sub Inspector :—

"They have deliberately disobeyed the orders and I, therefore, pray that they may be prosecuted under section 188, Indian Penal Code, for such disobedience."

The Magistrate called upon the petitioners to show cause why they should not be prosecuted for the disobedience of the orders under section 144 lawfully promulgated. On the 4th of January 1922 the petitioners showed cause. They denied that they ever held the market and also that any market was held on the land in question, or that they kept any shop thereon. They also attacked the order of the Magistrate and the notice issued against them on various legal grounds. In short, they disclaimed any connection with the new bazar or the plot on which it was held. They also denied having in any way disobeyed the order of the Magistrate.

The Magistrate on the same day considered that objection and held that no sufficient reason was shown as to why the order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should not be passed directing their prosecution. He held that, "the notice was general notice directed to the public under clause (3) of section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, in order to prevent an imminent likelihood of a breach of the peace between the people connected with the two bazars, the old and the new, meeting at the same place and on the same days of the week."

Continuing the Magistrate says :—

"Every member of the market going to the bazar prohibited under the said order, which was duly promulgated by beat of drum, and helping by his presence to continue the bazar in defiance of the said order which was a lawful one, is liable to prosecution for disobedience of order under section 188, Indian Penal Code. The local Police has reported that these men after the proclamation persuaded the people and the customers to sit on in the new bazar."

It was contended that the order of the Magistrate under section 144 was wholly illegal and without jurisdiction inasmuch as it was a general order prohibiting no new market to be held in the vicinity of the old market and such an order was calculated to interfere with the lawful exercise of the right of the people owning and possessing the land on which the new market was held. It is true that the general order under section 144 of the Code restraining the holding of a hat or market is not permissible

PARMESHWAR RAI C. EMPEROR.

Rakhal Das Singh [Sinha] v. Emperor (1). But the notice in the present case, which has been read to me, shows that the prohibition related only to the holding of the market on the same days as the old market is held and the object of the prohibition is to prevent a breach of the peace. The order passed by the Magistrate and the notice issued under section 144 in the present case are covered by the decision of a Full Bench in the case of Bykuntram Shaha Roy v. Meajan (2), and also by the decision in the case of Nagendra Nath Biswas v. Rakhal Das Sinha (3), which has been quoted by the Magistrate in his explanation submitted to this Court. The last ruling has discussed the previous authorities in the case and has held that the order such as the one that was passed in the present case under section 144 is legal. It is also clear that the disobedience of such an order is punishable under section 188, Indian Penal Code, prosecution for which might be started either by the sanction given under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or by an order passed under section 473 of the Code. This view is also supported by the case of Projapat Jha v. Emperor (4). I, therefore, hold that there is no defect or want of jurisdiction in the order passed by the Magistrate under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is not a general order, but it only prohibits the holding of the new market on the same days as those on which the old market is held. The prohibition against any person going to the place and sitting there for the purpose of holding the market or for the purpose of helping others and customers to carry on the market seems to me to be covered by section 144 under which a Magistrate may direct "any person to abstain from a certain act." The fact that the petitioners have no concern with the land in question in the sense that they do not own or possess it, does not absolve them from the responsibility of obeying the prohibition enjoined upon them under section 144 and directing them to abstain from doing the aforesaid act. The contention would have applied had the order of the Magistrate been "to take certain order with certain property" in the possession or under the management of these persons under another clause of section 144. Therefore, in agreement with the view of the learned Government Advocate, I hold that the petitioners cannot plead in their defence that they are not liable for prosecution under section 188, Indian Penal Code, because they do not own or possess the land in question. The order under section 144 was, therefore, valid and a disobedience of that order is punishable under section 188, Indian Penal Code, and if the petitioners in defiance of the order of the Magistrate under section 144 went to the place and persuaded people and customers to sit in the new market they disobeyed the order of the Magistrate, but the disobedience of such an order itself is not punishable under section 188 unless that disobedience "causes or tends to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed".

In other words, the petitioners would not come within the purview of section 188 unless the disobedience of the order of the Magistrate caused any annoyance, injury or obstruction to the old bazar which was being held in the vicinity. The petitioners deny in their petition, showing cause, having committed the offence.

Now, let us see whether the order of the Magistrate under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does in any way take into account the fact that there was no obstruction, annoyance or injury caused to the rival market. The order of the Magistrate is silent upon the point. It stops short with holding that the petitioners disobeyed the notice promulgated under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The report of the Police is also silent upon the point, and the only ground urged by the Police for an action to be taken under section 188, Indian Penal Code, is that the petitioners "did not care for the legal orders duly promulgated". It appears to me that neither the Police nor the Magistrate directed their minds to the most essential element for constituting an offence under section 188, Indian Penal Code, namely, that the disobedience complained of must cause or tend to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed. Now, if a conviction had taken place in the absence of the aforesaid element requisite for an offence under section 188, the conviction would have been set aside, Brojo Nath Ghose v. Emperor (5). It may be urged, and it has been urged by the learned Government Advocate in this case that the previous reports of the Police clearly indicated that there was a serious danger to a breach of the peace and the order of the Magistrate passed under section 144 also set forth the said fact; but that is not enough. That was a condition required to be fulfilled for the initiation of proceedings under section 144 and for the notice to be issued under that section under which a Magistrate can assume jurisdiction only when there is a danger to a breach of the peace. The prosecution for the disobedience of an order can only lie when the subsequent disobedience of the order promulgated under section 144 was likely to cause annoyance, obstruction or injury to a person lawfully employed. The reply to the argument of the learned Government Advocate was given by Princep, J., in the case of Brojo Nath Ghose v. Emperor (5) in the following order:—

"Now, there is not only no evidence as to the probable result of disobedience to the order under section 144, but there is no sufficient ground upon which such a finding could have been arrived at. No doubt, within our experience, the establishment of a rival hat at a place near to an old hat and to be held on the same day has often led to a breach of the peace, but it would not be safe or proper that such occurrences do sometimes take place should alone form a sufficient ground for a conviction under section 188, Indian Penal Code. It would be as well to consider that the prevalence of a crime in a particular locality was evidence that the accused did commit such a crime without any evidence thereof."

The present case has not reached the stage of conviction, but only has reached the direction by the Magistrate under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; but the principle of the aforesaid decision should apply to the case in its present stage also, inasmuch as in giving direction for the prosecution the Court is bound to find that there was a prima facie case with respect to all the elements which are essential to constitute the offence with respect to which the order under section 476 of the Code is passed. An order which does not set forth all the elements of an offence covered by it is, therefore, without jurisdiction. Under similar circumstances their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Frojapat Jha v. Emperor (4), referred to above, set aside the sanction given by the Magistrate for a prosecution under section 188, Indian Penal Code. Their Lordships observed:—

"A Magistrate should not sanction a prosecution under section 188, unless he thinks that all the elements necessary for a conviction are present. In the judgment of the Magistrate and in the subsequent order of the Sessions Judge, there is nothing to show that either officer ever applied his mind at all to the question whether the disobedience of this order caused or tended to cause annoyance, injury, obstruction or a riot. In the explanation (as in the present case) submitted by the Magistrate he has entirely ignored the two grounds on which the Rule was issued and has confined himself to discussing other points in the petition with respect to which he was not consulted. We, therefore, derive no assistance from his explanation in dealing with this point. There is nothing to show, as we have stated, that the Magistrate thought that disobedience to his order tended to cause a riot. That being so, we think the sanction is wrong, and must be set aside".

Accepting the soundness of the aforesaid view, I set aside the order passed in this case against the petitioners under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The proceedings are quashed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 13, 244
—Res judicata—Suit by Hindu widow dismissed as barred by s. 214, Civil Procedure Code—Subsequent suit by reversioners, maintainability of—Vatan lands—Alienation by widow—Legal necessity.

In execution of a money-decree obtained against a vatandar during his lifetime the property was put up for sale by the Court after his death and purchased by a vatandar of the same vatan. In the execution proceedings the judgment-debtor was represented by his widow who subsequently filed a suit for a declaration that the sale was illegal. The suit was dismissed as barred by section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. The widow died and within twelve years the plaintiff who was one of the reversionary heirs sued for possession of the lands. The defence raised was that the suit was barred by res judicata and that the sale was binding upon the reversioner.

Held, (1) that the suit was not barred by res judicata as there was no adjudication on the merits as between the widow and the purchaser which could affect the reversioners; [p. 210, col. 1.]

(2) that the sale was valid and binding upon the reversioners as it was in execution of a money-decree against her deceased husband and therefore for a legal necessity. [p. 210, col. 1.]

Obiter.—At a Court sale an auction-purchaser can get only such rights as could have been conveyed to him by a private sale. [p. 210, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SHR. J.—In this second appeal we are concerned only with Survey No. 4 and the eastern half of Survey No. 16 of Kamatnur. These were vatan lands held by Gopal. He died in 1894. In execution of a money-decree obtained against Gopal during his lifetime, the property was put up for sale by the Court and purchased by one Narayan in 1896. He got possession in September 1897. He was a vatandar of the same vatan. In these execution proceedings the judgment-debtor was represented by his widow. It does not appear whether she raised any objection to the sale in the execution proceedings: but she filed Suit No. 682 of 1897 for a declaration that the sale was illegal. This suit was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 and that she should have raised the objection in the execution proceedings. The sale certificate does not in terms state whose right, title and interest were put up for sale but it shows that there was a sale of the lands in question. The widow died in November 1901. The present suit is filed by some of the reversioners as the heirs of Gopal. The claim is resisted in respect of these particular lands by the defendants who claim under Narayan on the ground that the sale is binding upon the reversioners and that they have acquired a title by adverse possession for over twelve years from the time they got possession in 1897.

The Trial Court held that the cause of action accrued to the reversioners on the death of the widow in 1901 and that as the claim was made within twelve years from that time the suit was not time-barred. It further held that as the land was vatan property the sale was inoperative as it was not liable to be sold after the death of the last male holder. Accordingly the plaintiffs' claim in respect of the lands was decreed.

The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the question whether the sale was invalid was res judicata in virtue of the decision in Suit No. 687 of 1897 filed by Kashibai.

In the appeal before us it is urged that the sale is not binding upon the reversionary heirs of Gopal and that the question is not res judicata.

As regards the plea of res judicata, the lower Appellate Court apparently had only the decree in the suit and not the judgment. A certified copy of the judgment has been put in here as it was not possible to deal with this point satisfactorily without referring to the judgment. The lower Appellate Court should have insisted upon having the judgment before deciding the point. It appears from the judgment that the suit was dismissed on the ground that it related to a question which should have been raised in execution proceedings and that it was barred by section 244 of the Code then in force. There was no adjudication on the merits of the question. It does not appear that in the execution proceedings the widow had raised any objection to the sale. Thus there was no adjudication as between the widow and the purchaser which could affect the reversioners. The plea of res judicata must, therefore, fail.

As regards the question as to the validity of the sale, it seems to us that it was valid and binding upon the reversioners. The auction-purchaser is a vatan of the same vatan; and an alienation of of these vatan lands by Gopal during his lifetime in favour of the purchaser would not have been invalid under section 5 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act. But Gopal did not effect any alienation during his lifetime. The widow inherited her husband's property including these vatan lands. She would be able to alienate her husband's immovable property for legal necessity; and though there would be a special restriction on her powers in virtue of section 5 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, she might be able to deal with the vatan property as a Hindu widow for legal necessity provided the alienee was a vatan of the same vatan. That being her position, it is clear that at the Court sale the auction purchaser could get only such right as she could have conveyed by a private sale to him. At the date of the sale Gopal was dead; and though the sale deed refers to the lands it seems to me that at the date of the sale the purchaser could get only the right, title and interest of the widow. In the present case the sale was in execution of a money-decree against Gopal. The widow would be bound to pay the decretal debt of her deceased husband; and unless it were proved that she had other moveable estate of her husband from which the debt could have been defrayed the sale would be for a legal necessity and as such it would be binding upon the reversioners. We have the fact that she allowed the vatan property to be sold in execution of the decree, which she was bound to satisfy. An alienation by her for that purpose would be binding upon the reversioners; and I do not see any reason why the Court sale should not convey such title as a sale by her for the purpose could have conveyed. On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that the sale was good not only during her lifetime, but also against the reversioners.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court as regards these lands is right and must be confirmed with costs. The appeal is dismissed.

MACLEOD, C. J.—I agree.

APPELLANT

DASARATHI SINHA—PLAINTIFF

—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Succession—Posthumous son, rights of—Alienation by widow, if binding—Analogy of adopted son—Analogy of family settlement, application of.

The right of succession, under Hindu Law, is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property and cannot under any circumstances remain in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a preferable heir. To this fundamental rule there is an apparent exception in the case of a child already conceived and in the womb of its mother who will, on his birth, divest the estate of any person with a title inferior to his own who has taken in the meantime. [p. 202, cols 1 & 2.]

The title of a posthumous son relates back to the time of the death of his father. [p. 203, col. 2.]

The rights of an after-born son in the case of a disposition of the estate by his mother before his birth should be determined on the analogy of his rights in the event of a partition before his birth. Consequently a posthumous son would not be bound by an alienation by his mother of his paternal estate before his birth. [p. 214, cols. 1 & 2.]

The analogy of a family settlement being binding on the minors is not applicable to such a case, nor is that of an adopted son's rights to question previous act of the adopting widow. [p. 215, col. 2.]

Obiter dicta—An unborn child is supposed to be born when it is for its benefit to be so considered but this fiction does not apply when the advantage accrues to third persons. [p. 213, col. 1.]

An alienation made by the widow for legal necessity before adoption is valid and will bind the adopted son; but an alienation made without such necessity is good only up to the date of adoption; after that date, the alienee has no power to retain the property as against the adopted son and must deliver it to him. The rights of the adopted son are, for this purpose, deemed to spring into existence at the moment of his adoption and displace the rights of the widow; they do not await the determination of the widow's estate by her death as in the case of reversioners. [p. 214, col. 1.]

KUSUM KUMARI DAS V. DASARATHI SINHA.

Appeals against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Hughli, dated the 25th July 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Howrah, dated the 21st December 1919.

Babu Bhupendra Kumar Ghose, for the Appellant.

Babu Monnohan Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has led up to these two appeals is the estate left by one Premchand Sinha, who died on the 21st November 1900. He had married twice. By his first wife, Nityamoyee, who died in his lifetime, he had a daughter, Kusum Kumari, who had been already married and had a son, Haripada by name. By his second wife, Katyayini, he had a daughter, Subhasini, who was born on the 3rd June 1899. His second wife was pregnant at the time of his death and gave birth to a posthumous son on the 18th May 1901, who was subsequently named Dasarathi. The relationship of the parties is set out in the following genealogical table:

Differences arose after the death of Premchand Sinha between his widow and her step-daughter as to the title to properties which stood in the name of the daughter, but which, it was alleged by the widow, really formed part of the estate left by her husband and was held by the daughter only as ostensible owner. Ultimately, a deed of relinquishment was executed on the 2nd May 1901 between the widow and her step-daughter. On the 20th November 1915 the posthumous son represented by his sister as next friend, commenced this litigation for declaration of his title to all the properties left by his father and for recovery of possession with mesne profits. The claim rested on the hypothesis that the posthumous son was not bound by the settlement which had been effected a few days before his birth between his mother and his step-sister, on the assumption that his mother was entitled to the interest of a Hindu widow in the estate and her step-sister was one of the next reversioners. The claim was resisted by the step-sister, who was the first defendant, and by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, who was joined as the second defendant. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was bound by the deed of relinquishment. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge has taken the contrary view and has remanded the suit for investigation of the other points in controversy between the parties. The step-daughter and the execution purchaser have preferred separate appeals. The substantial question which arises for consideration in these appeals is, whether the posthumous son is bound by the deed of relinquishment between his mother and step-sister, executed shortly before his birth.

The position of a posthumous son has not escaped the attention of authoritative writers on Hindu jurisprudence. Indeed, at one time, his rights were so much respected that when a son was born after a partition had taken place between a father and his sons, the partition was opened up again in order to give him the share, which he would have had, if he had then been alive; Vishnu XV.11-3; Yajnavalkya II.122. Reference may in this connection be made to Krishna v. Sami (1); Narasimha Razu v. Veerabhadra (2) and Rai Bishen Chand v. Asmaida Koor (3). Jimutavahana went so far as to hold that the rule was still applicable where the property to be distributed was inherited from the grandfather; because distribution of such property was illegal so long as the mother was capable of bearing children, and, consequently, the rights of an afterborn child could not be prejudiced by the illegal act. Dayabhaga I.45, VII.10; Raghunandan II.30, 31, 36. This extreme view, however, is obsolete, and other writers, such as Manu IX.9.2-6; Gautama XXVIII.26; and Narada XI.1.44, hold that a son born after a partition could only take his father's share, representing him to the exclusion of the previously divided brethren; Nawal Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (4). Vijnaneswara reconciles this conflict of opinion, holding that the latter texts lay down the general rule, while the former are limited to the case of a son, who was in his mother's womb at the time of partition. Jimutavahana takes the same view in cases where the partition is made, by the father, of his self-acquired property. Consequently, in all cases where the number of sons would add to the number of sharers, if the pregnancy be known at the time, the distribution should be deferred till its result is ascertained; if it is not known and a son is afterwards born, a redistribution must take place of the estate as it then stands. Mitaksbhara I 6, 1-12; Dayabhaga VII.4; Yekeyamian v. Agniwarian (5), Kalidas v. Krishan Chandra Das (6). If the father had divided the whole property among his son, retaining no share for himself, it is said that the sons with whom partition has been made must allot, from their shares, a portion equal to their own, to an after born son, on the principle that the unborn son cannot be deprived of his share in the paternal estate by a prior partition; Vishnu is quoted by Jagannath, Colebrooke Book II.268; Chengama Nayudu v. Munisami Nayudu (7). The application of this principle is expressly limited to the case of partition between father and sons and is not extended to a son born to a separate co-parcener other than the father, of the family after partition. The texts cited are applicable only to the case of the son en ventre sa mere at the date of partition: Ganpat Venkatesh Deshpande v. Gopalrao Venkatesh (8), Shivajirao v. Vasantrao (9).

The anxiety thus evinced for the protection of the unborn son is reflected in the rules recognised in cases of succession. The right of succession, under Hindu Law, is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property, and cannot, under any circumstances, remain in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a preferable heir. To this fundamental rule, there is an apparent exception in the case of a child already conceived and in the womb of its mother, and it is well settled that a child, who is in the mother's womb at the time of the death is, in contemplation of law, actually existing and will on his birth devest the estate of any person with a title inferior to his own, who has taken in the meantime: See Lakhi Priya v. Bheerab Chandra (10), Keshub v. Bishnu Persaud (11), Bercjali v. Nubokissen (12), Kalidas v. Krishan Chandra Das (6), Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (13).

The favoured position which a child in embryo thus occupies under the Hindu Law in respect of partition and succession is by no means singular, for whatever may have been the law in early times, it is a rule generally adopted in mature systems of jurisprudence that a child in embryo is to be considered as born, when it will be for its benefit so to be considered, although the question is not free from metaphysical difficulties whatever view we may accept on the subject. In the Roman Law, existence was, for certain purposes, assumed to begin before birth. Thus, although upon the authority of Ulpian (Dig. 25, 4, I, 1). "The fruit of the body before it is born is part of the mother or the womb," and natural capacity for rights begins with the birth of men, that is, the complete separation of a living human being from the mother. Paul points out the ways in which the embryo in the mother's womb is recognised by law: "Attention is bestowed upon that which is in the womb, just the same as if it had come to life, whenever a question arises as the embryo's own privilege, although in no way benefiting another before it is born." Dig. 1, 5, 7. "Our speaking of him whose birth is anticipated as though he were in existence, is correct when the question is as to his own right," Dig. 50, 16, 231. "The ancients paid regard to the child in the womb in such way that they maintained all rights in its favour" (10) (1833) 5 Sel. Rep. S. D. A. 315 (new Ed. 262) 7 Ind. Dec. (o. s.) 612.

intact until the time of birth, as may be seen in the law of inheritance." Dig. 5, 4, 3. Similarly, under the English Law, as Sir William Blackstone puts it, "an infant in utero sa mere is supposed to be born for many purposes; it is capable of having a legacy or a surrender of a copyhold estate made to it; it may have an estate assigned to it and it is enabled to have an estate limited to its use and to take afterwards by such limitation as if it were then actually born"; Commentaries, Volume I-130; Doe d. Clarke v. Clarke (14). That questions of considerable nicety may arise in the application of this doctrine to unforeseen combinations of events may be conceded, and one of the most curious cases in the books is probably that of Walker v. G. N. Ry. Co. of Ireland (15) where the question of the liability of a carrier of passengers for injury to an unborn child came under consideration. But whatever difficulties may arise in the application of the principle, it is well settled that an unborn child, when it is for its benefit to be so considered, is not ordinarily regarded as born for the benefit of third persons. See Savigny, System, Art. 62, (tr. Rattigan p. 9; tr. Guenoux, II p. 13) where he says: "This fiction is universally restricted for the benefit of the child, and no one else ought to be permitted to employ it for his own purposes." See also Voet. Com. Book I, Tit. V. Art. 5 (tr. Buchanan, p. 108), where it is pointed out that although those in the womb are considered as born, whenever it is for their advantage, this fiction of law ceases, if the advantage be not to those in the womb, but to third persons. See further the judgment of Lord Chancellor Westbury in Blosson v. Blosson (16) where it was said "that the fiction or indulgence of the law, which treats the unborn child as actually born, applies only for the purpose of enabling the unborn child to take a benefit which, if born, it would be entitled to, and that it is limited to cases where de commodis ipsius partus quaeritur." Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, however, in Wallis v. Hodson (17), while noticing that the Civil Law confined the rule to cases in which it was for the benefit of the child to be considered as born, stated broadly the rule to be that such child was to be considered living to all intents and purposes. On these principles, we must regard it as well settled that the title of the posthumous son must be deemed to relate back to the time of death of his father.

Reference has been made in the course of argument to the analogy of an adopted son who also, by a well-recognised fiction of law, enjoys, for many purposes, the rights and privileges to which he would have been entitled, if he had been in actual existence at the time of the death of the father; Tarinee v. Bamun Das (18), Bamundoss Mookerjee v. Musammat Tarinee (19). No useful purpose is likely to be achieved, however, by an endeavour to assimilate and to establish a complete analogy between the legal fictions applicable to cases of a posthumous son and an adopted son, as is well illustrated by the futile attempt made in the case of Tarinee v. Bamun Das (18) to maintain the fanciful argument that a widow authorised to adopt a son was in a state of constructive pregnancy. As was ruled by this Court in Harek Chand v. Bejoy Chand (20) the title of a son adopted by a widow under authority from her husband does not relate back to the death of the husband, and when the adoption has taken place his fictitious birth in the new family cannot be antedated for all purposes. Lohiri (22), Faizuddin Ali Khan v. Tincowri Saha (23), Lakshmana Rau v. Lakshmi Ammal (24), Hanmant Ramchandra v. Bhimacharya (25). Consequently, we need not review the decisions which deal with the question, how far the adopted son may dispute the previous acts of the widow. There has been much divergence of judicial opinion on that subject, as is clear from the decision in Lakshman Bhaui Khopkar v. Radhabai (26), Moro Narayan Joshi v. Balaji Raghunath (27), Ram Krishna v. Tripurabai (28), Ram Krishna Kuppuswami v. Tripurabai (29) and Freeravulu v. Kristamma (30); the case last mentioned has now been overruled by a Full Bench in Vidyanatha Sastri v. Savithri Ammal (31). The result of the authorities as they now stand appears to be that an alienation made by the widow for legal necessity before adoption is valid and will bind the adopted son; but an alienation made without such necessity is good only up to the date of adoption; after that date, the alienor has no power to retain the property as against the adopted son and must deliver it to him. The rights of the adopted son are, for this purpose, deemed to spring into existence at the moment of his adoption and displace the rights of the widow; they do not await the determination of the widow's estate by her death as in the case of reversioners.

We are of opinion that the rights of the posthumous son in the case of a disposition of the estate by his mother before his birth, should be determined on the analogy of his rights in the event of a partition before his birth. This view is not opposed to the decision in Goura Ohcwihra v. Ohummun Ohowdry (32).

In that case it was ruled that proprietary right is created by birth and not by conception; so that a child in the womb takes no estate; where, when the succession opens out, a female member of the family has conceived, the inheritance remains in abeyance until the result of the conception can be ascertained; if the child be still born, the estate goes not to her heir but to the heir of the last owner. It must further be observed that the deed of compromise, which was challenged by the posthumous son in that case, had been executed by his father before his birth, and the Court declined to uphold the contention that a father was debarred from making an alienation while there was a possibility of his wife being en-ciente, to say nothing of the contingency whether the child in utero matris would be son or a daughter or be still born. This view, even if it be assumed to be correct in all its generality, does not militate against the conclusion that the posthumous son is not bound by an alienation by his mother of his paternal estate before his birth. In the case before us, there is the significant fact that the deed of relinquishment was executed by the mother two weeks before his birth. The Subordinate Judge has rightly pointed out that there was no necessity for this expedition and that the principle applicable to cases of family settlements cannot be rightly invoked in such circumstances.

It need not be disputed that in the absence of proof of mistake, inequality of position, undue influence, coercion, fraud or like ground, a partition or family arrangement made in settlement of a disputed or doubtful claim is a valid and binding arrangement which the parties thereto cannot deny, ignore or resile from; and this principle is applicable where some of the members of the family are minors, or where the settlement has been effected by a qualified owner whose acts in this respect will bind the reversioner; Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (33), Bicoy Gonal v. Girinara Noth (34), Upendra Nath

But the cases which hold that a minor may be bound by a family settlement effected bona fide and for his benefit by his guardian, are clearly distinguishable on the ground that the settlement put forward was effected on behalf of the infant; to this class belong the decisions in Keramutulla Meah v. Keramutullah Meah (39), Abdul Husain v. Mahomed Ibrahim Rowther (43), Viswanathaswami v. Kamulu Ammal (44), Prakateri Parkum Vatakakha Chettiatah Kandyil v. Eoram (45) and *Anantanarayana v. We are not unmindful of the principle, repeatedly emphasised by the Judicial Committee, that it is of the utmost importance to the right administration of justice that the substance and the real meaning of the parties and not the form of expression and the literal sense of the transaction are to be constantly kept in view as the basis of the decision; *Dhurm Das Panday v. doctrine, however, is plainly of no assistance to the appellants. When the deed was executed, the possible birth of a male heir to the deceased was not kept in view. The settlement was effected at a time when the widow was assumed to be the holder of the estate for life and the immediate reversioners were her daughter and step-daughter. If the child in the womb should be still born, the relative position of the parties would not be altered in any way. If the child should turn out to be a daughter, the relative position would not be affected in substance, though the number of reversionary heirs would be increased from two to three. On the other hand, if the child should turn out to be a son, the estate would vest absolutely in him; the widow of the last owner would have no interest therein and her daughter and step daughter would not be reversioners at all. In view of this aspect of the case, it would, indeed, be a bold fiction to hold that a deed executed between two ladies at a time when one was ostensibly the widow in possession as heiress at-law to her husband and the other was one of the reversionary heirs, was in essence a transaction carried out for the benefit of an unborn son whose birth would destroy the rights, present and contingent, of both the parties to the instrument. We hold accordingly that the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that the plaintiff is not bound by the deed.

The result is that the order of remand made by the Subordinate Judge is confirmed and the appeals are dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1105 OF 1918.

December 7, 1921.

Present :—Sir Norman Macleod, Kt.,
Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Shah.

TUNGABAI GOPAL DESAI—

PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

KRISHNAJI RAMCHANDRA

DESHPANDE—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Vatan—Gudgu li village—Deshpande's lands—

TUNGABAI GOPAL DESAI v. KRISHNAJI RAMCHANDRA DESHPANDE.

Palkhi Inam to vatandar—Appanage of vatan—Village grant—Presumption of occupancy right—Inam and other grants—Presumption—Vatan Inam, nature of, how determined.

The lands in the village of Gudgudi held by the Deshpandes are vatan and not ordinary inams. [p. 217, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Macleod, J.—A village granted by a Native Ruler before the British Rule to a vatandar to pay his palkhi expenses is an appanage of the vatan. [p. 217, col. 1.]

A grant of a village by or on behalf of the Crown under the British rule is in law to be presumed to be subject to such rights of occupancy, if any, as the cultivators at the time of the grant may have had. [p. 217, col. 2.]

Per Shah J.—Inam and other grants imply a grant of the royal share of the revenue and not necessarily the soil unless words suitable to indicate a grant of the soil are used in the document evidencing the grant. [p. 218, col. 2.]

In determining the nature of the Vatan Inam regard should be had to the terms of the Sanad and the nature of the settlement under which the Sanad was issued. [p. 218, col. 2.]

A Palkhi allowance, which is made in favour of the original grantee by a Native Ruler might not necessarily be part of the remuneration of the office held by the grantee. But it is also possible that it might be an appanage of the office and as such would go with the office. [p. 218, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 126 of 1917, reversing the decrees passed by the Subordinate Judge at Haveri, in Civil Suit No. 25 of 1921.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jeejee (with him Mr. H. B. Gumaste), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, O. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover from defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and 9 and 10 by equitable partition her one-third share in the properties mentioned in Schedules A, B and D of the plaint or one-third share in the lands in Schedule C even if the property in A was Deshpandegiri Vatan and for mesne profits. The properties in A, B and D originally belonged to one Gurnath Dattatraya Deshpande who died leaving three sons, Dattu, Shripad and Bhimappa. Shripad was the last owner as survivor and he died in January 1913 without issue, but leaving three sisters who filed three suits for partition. It was further urged by the plaintiff that though the property in Schedule C was Vatan, the occupancy rights were not Vatan as they existed before the grant of the Inam. The defence was that the lands were Vatan and so the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. One decree was passed in the three suits. The Trial Court held that the occupancy rights in the lands in Schedules C and D with certain exceptions were not Vatan. The plaintiff was also held entitled to certain sites in Schedule A. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was not the owner of the occupancy rights in the lands mentioned in Schedules C and D with the exceptions mentioned in the decree. The plaintiff has appealed and the only question argued in the appeal was whether the lands in the village of Gudgudi were ordinary Inam or Vatan.

The case has been unduly complicated by the view taken by the Trial Court that the rights of the plaintiff's ancestors in the village were partly Inam, partly Vatan, that the original grant was a grant of the royal share of the revenue, and any occupancy rights they possessed were acquired afterwards, so that they could not be considered as subject to the rules of succession to Vatan property. The learned Appellate Judge seemed to think that this was a possible inference, but came to the conclusion that the grant included extensive proprietary rights and was a grant of the soil in that sense subject to rights already existing. Now, if we concede that whatever rights the plaintiff's family now possess in the village arose from the original grant, it follows that those rights are either Inam or Vatan according to the purpose for which that grant was made. If, however, only the royal share of the revenue was granted for Vatan services it would not be impossible for the Vatan family to have acquired afterwards proprietary rights in the village lands which would be their personal property and would descend according to the rules of Hindu Law. But it has not been suggested in this case that the occupancy rights in the village have been acquired apart from the original grant or the Sanad issued in 1901.

Exhibit 112 contains a copy of the original grant, from which it appears that the village of Gudgudi was given as Palkhi Inam to the plaintiff's ancestors who were admittedly Deshpande Vatandars.

The village was described as having fallen fallow, the revenue being 150 Hons. Six hundred Hons were to be paid as premium while the Vasul was to be paid at stated times,

TUNGABAI GOPAL DESAI V. KRISHNAJI RAMCHANDRA DESHPANDE.

Judged by the rules laid down by the decisions of the British Courts, it might be said that this was only a grant of the revenue, but I quite agree with the learned Appellate Judge that those rules have been laid down without considering from the lessons of history what were the actual conditions when grants going back 250 years, as this one does, were made. To quote from the judgment, they assume a stabilised condition of the village granted where all-cultivable land is occupied by cultivators who are entitled to remain on the soil so long as they pay a definite amount out of the produce or a definite share of the produce to Government. In such a case nothing would be left to Government to give away except what it received itself as revenue. But we cannot assume that those conditions existed in the seventeenth century. The grantee may or may not have recognized existing rights but what those rights may have been it is impossible for us to say. That occupancy rights were recognized by Governments previous to British Rule may be admitted, but I very much doubt whether those Governments, in making grants considered that such grants were anything more than grants of the rights which existed in Government at the time they were made. However that may be, it is clear that the village was granted to the Vatan-dars to pay their Palkhi expenses and was, therefore, an appanage of the Vatan. Under the Gordon Settlement which dealt with service Inams, the village was classified as Deshpande Vatan and the Sanad, which was eventually issued in 1901 after reciting that certain lands and cash allowances were entered in the Government accounts for the years 1833-64 as held in service tenure, declared that the said lands and cash allowances should be continued hereditarily by the British Government on certain conditions. No distinction was made between the right to levy the assessment and the right to occupy the land so that it cannot be said that only the former was settled to be Vatan by the Sanad.

A very similar question arose in Amrit Vaman v. Hari Govind (1). The original grant was made in 1734 by a Maratha Ruler for maintenance in return for service. In 1884 the grantee accepted a settlement on the lines of the

Gordon Settlement and the Sanad issued was in the same terms as the Sanad in this case. Shab, J. said (page 249*): "In the absence of any clear proof that the occupancy right in the Survey Number in suit was vested in the plaintiff's ancestor independently of the grant and that the land in suit was outside the lands dealt with in the Settlement of 1834, I think that it must be held to be Vatan property like the village itself... Thus where the whole village is mentioned in a Sanad evidencing a settlement under section 15 of the Hereditary Offices Act, it is for the party alleging that a particular Survey Number of that village is outside the scope of the settlement to prove it." Even in the case of Inams, the decisions of this Court that in the absence of evidence as to the terms of an Inam grant made by a Native Ruler before British Rule, there is a presumption of law that the grant was only of the royal revenue from the land and not of the soil may require to be re-considered since the decision of the Privy Council in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (2). Their Lordships said at page 218†: "In their Lordships' opinion there is no such presumption of law. But a grant of a village by or on behalf of the Crown under the British Rule is in law to be presumed to be subject to such rights of occupancy, if any, as the cultivators at the time of the grant may have had." This judgment was referred to with approval in Upadrashta Ventata Sastrulu v. Divi Seetharamulu (3). I think the decision of the lower Court was right and all the appeals must be dismissed with costs.

SHAB, J.—The principal point argued in this appeal is whether the lands in the village of Gudgudi held by the Deshpandes is an ordinary Inam or part of their Vatan property. If it be an ordinary Inam, whatever the nature of the grant, whether the grant be of the soil or of the royal share of the revenue, it would go to the heirs of the last holder according to the Hindu Law. If it be a part of the Vatan property the females would be postponed to the male members of the family under Bombay Act V of 1883.

It is urged on behalf of the original plaintiff that the original grant was made in favour of the defendants' ancestors, who were the Deshpandes, by the then King of Bijapur about the end of the seventeenth century, and that it was given in Inam for Palkhi allowance and not as part of the remuneration of the office which the Deshpandes held. On the other hand it is an admitted fact that the whole of this Deshpandegiri Vatan was settled on the lines of the Gordon Settlement and the usual Sanad was issued in 1901 in which the lands in question are referred to as part of the Deshpandegiri Vatan.

Both the lower Courts have found that it is part of the Vatan property and not an ordinary Inam. This finding is amply supported by the terms of Sanad and by the fact that at least under the British Rule the grant has been treated by the parties and the Government as part of the Vatan property and as a part of the remuneration for services. It is no doubt possible that a Palkhi allowance, which was made in favour of the original grantees by the Bijapur authorities, might not necessarily be part of the remuneration of the office held by the grantees. But it is also possible that it might be an appanage of the office and as such would go with the office. The terms of the original grant so far as they are available do not throw any light on the point and the way in which the parties and the Government had treated it is indicated by the Sanad. This contention of the plaintiff must be disallowed.

It is further urged that even in the case of Vatan the distinction must be made between the occupancy rights and the Inam rights, which would be limited to the royal share of the revenue. In view of the observations relating to Vatan property in Amrit Vaman v. Hari Govind (1) Mr. Kelkar did not press this point seriously. It is clear on the terms of the Sanad that the grant must be taken to be a grant of the soil and not merely of the royal share of the revenue as was held in Amrit Vaman v. Hari Govind (1) on the terms of a similar Sanad. It is true that the terms of the original grant by the Bijapur Kings in this case do not clearly indicate a grant of the soil, but merely a grant of the royal share of the revenue. The usual expression (jal, taru, etc.) indicating a grant of the soil is not to be found: and if the matter depended entirely upon the terms of that grant there would be some difficulty in holding that it was anything more than a grant of the royal share of the revenue. So far this case differs from the case of Amrit Vaman v. Hari Govind (1). But in determining the nature of the Vatan Inam I think that regard should be had to the terms of the Sanad and the nature of the settlement under which the Sanad was issued and on that point this case is similar to the case of Amrit Vaman v. Hari Govind (1). I do not think that any real basis is made out for making such a distinction in the case of this Vatan, and for holding that it is the royal share of the revenue and not the land or the occupancy right therein that forms part of the Vatan.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. The other companion appeals also will be dismissed with costs.

I desire to make it clear that in taking this view as to the nature of the Vatan in this case, I do not mean to doubt in any sense the correctness of the view accepted in this Presidency as to the Inams and other similar grants being treated as implying a grant of the royal share of the revenue and not necessarily of the soil unless words suitable to indicate a grant of the soil are used in the document evidencing the grant. I have nothing to add to what I have stated in the last but one paragraph of my judgment in Amrit Vaman v. Hari Govind (1) as regards the effect of certain observations in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (2), on the view so far accepted in this Presidency beyond this that the ratio decidendi in the recent case of Secretary of State for India v. Srinivasiah Chariar (4) appears to me to support that view.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V. of 1908), s. 12, cl. (12)
—Mesne profits—Decree allowing mesne profits silent about interest—Interest deemed to have been granted.

When a decree granting mesne profits is silent as to interest, it must be taken to carry interest on them in view of the definition of mesne profits in section 2, clause (12) of the Civil Procedure Code.

A Court has, however, the discretion to penalise a party by disallowing such interest.

JUDGMENT.—The point raised by this appeal is covered by authority. The question is, what is meant by the expression "mesne profits" when the decree is silent as to interest. Section 2, clause (12) of the Code of Civil Procedure defines mesne profits as follows:—"Those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits." If there had been any doubt as to the meaning of those words, it has been set at rest, and ought no longer to be a matter of controversy in India, by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Grish Chauder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy (1), where the Privy Council pointed out, in construing section 211 of the old Code, which in this respect does not differ from the section quoted above of the present Code, that "its obvious effect was to provide that a simple decree for mesne profits shall carry interest on them." It is true that at the same time there is discretion in the Court to penalise a party by disallowing such interest. Their Lordships explain this in the same judgment by saying:—"Mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case." But the question in this appeal as in the case decided by the Privy Council is:—"What is the effect of a decree which grants mesne profits and says nothing about interest," which is what this decree does here. The Court below, possibly inadequately instructed, followed the Single Judge case of Abdul Ghofur v. Raja Ram (2) and appeared not to be aware of the two Judge case of Narpat Singh v. Har Gayan (3), which would have drawn its attention to the Privy Council decision referred to. But having regard to the cases decided subsequently, the decision in the case of Abdul Ghofur v. Raja Ram (2) must be taken to have been overruled. The appeal must be allowed and execution directed to take place for the interest at 6 per cent, due by law. The case will go back to the lower Court with this direction. The appellant must have his costs with fees on the higher scale.

(1) 27 C. 951 at p. 987; 27 I. A. 110; 4 C. W. N. 631; 10 M. L. J. 356; 2 Bom. L. R. 709; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 687; 14 Ind. Dec. (n. s.) 622 (P. C.).

Adverse possession—Mortgagee acquiring rights of co-mortgagor—Knowledge of other co-mortgagor—Redemption, right of, extinguishment of.

If a mortgagee gets in the equity of redemption from one of two co-mortgagors and claims to be in possession as owner to the knowledge of the other co-mortgagor, the right of the co-mortgagor to redeem his share will be extinguished after twelve years. But if the co-mortgagor is not acquainted with the purchase of the equity of redemption from the other co-mortgagor, time will not run against him in favour of the mortgagee who has purchased. Mr. G. S. Rao for Mr. B. V. Desai, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The suit property belonged to three persons, Gana, Tannu and Yasa. Whether they were joint owners or tenants-in-common does not appear. On 6th December 1884, Tannu mortgaged the property to Vithal Ganesh by Exhibit 54 and, on the 15th December 1884, all the three created a further charge in favour of Vithal, Exhibit 30. It was mentioned that all the three agreed to be bound by the previous mortgage of Tannu. On the 26th August 1889, one Chinto purchased at an auction sale in execution of a money-decree against Gana and others the equity of redemption of Gana in the suit property. In 1891 the sale-certificate, Exhibit 51, was issued. On the 27th September 1895, Vithal, the original mortgagee, and his son, Govind, sold their interest as mortgagees to the first defendant. On the 7th January 1905, a document was passed by Vithal, the son of Gana, and by Tannu to the first defendant. It purported to be a mortgage deed in substitution of Exhibits 54 and 30 and so creating a fresh mortgage for the previous amounts plus the amount admitted to have been spent by the mortgagees on improvements and further cash advance. On the 13th February 1906, the first defendant obtained a conveyance out and out from Vithal and Tannu.

On the 20th October 1895, Chinto, who purchased the interest of Gana and his right to redeem these properties, sold his right, title and interest to Vithal and his son Govind who had only recently, on the 27th September, sold their mortgagees' rights to the first defendant. On the 7th November 1908, the plaintiff purchased from Vithal's son Govind and another their interest in the property. He now resists the claim of the plaintiff to redeem on the ground that by the document of 7th January 1905 the previous mortgages were extinguished and he so held adversely to any one who claimed to have any right to redeem these mortgages.

The question is whether the plaintiff, after all these various transactions, has still retained a right to redeem the mortgaged property. If a mortgagee gets in the equity of redemption from one of two co-mortgagors and claims to be in possession as owner to the knowledge of the other co-mortgagor, then it may be said that the right of the co-mortgagor to redeem his share will be extinguished after twelve years. We have not been referred to any authority for the proposition that if a co-mortgagor is not acquainted with the purchase of the equity of redemption from the other co-mortgagor, still, time is running against him in favour of the mortgagee who has purchased.

The first defendant acquired nothing by the deed, dated 7th January 1905, from Gana's son Vithal, since Gana had no interest left in the property. If he is considered to have taken a fresh mortgage from Tannu, when, on the 13th February 1906, he obtained a conveyance out and out from Tannu, it might be said that, as far as that mortgage was concerned, the equity of redemption had gone, still the holder of Gana's equity of redemption would be entitled to fight out the question of redeeming Gana's share from the mortgagee who, he says, bought the equity of redemption from Gana's co-mortgagor. In any event, limitation would not run until the 13th February 1906 in which case the suit would be in time. But, as far as we can see, Vithal and his son Govind were the owners of Gana's right on the 7th January 1905, and it could not be shown that there was anything which prevented them from suing out those rights against the first defendant. The plaintiff who purchased those rights on the 7th November 1908 is, therefore, able to sue. Although the transactions relating to the suit property were somewhat complicated, (and we are much indebted to Mr. Croyjee for his lucid exposition of them), we think they were made very much more complicated by the lower Courts not taking a clearer view of the issues involved when considering the facts of the case. No doubt, in the Trial Court the real issues were obscured by the various other issues raised which had no connection with the issue of limitation.

We think the decree dismissing the suit with costs was wrong, and the plaintiff should be held entitled to redeem one half of the suit property from the first defendant on payment of what will be found due on half the mortgage. We have heard nothing about the third mortgagor Yesa and this decree must be without prejudice to the rights of Yesa or his descendants who may be entitled to come in and ask for redemption with regard to one-third of the property.

The plaintiff must get his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court and will have to pay costs in the Trial Court.

There will be an inquiry as to the amount payable by the plaintiff in order to redeem his share, and when that is ascertained, a preliminary decree for redemption will be passed.

Cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The only question raised in this appeal is whether the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who are the appellants before us are not entitled to priority in respect of 4 annas share in a property bearing Tauzi No. 123. The material facts are as follows:—

On the 22nd December 1905, one Bisheshwar, the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, borrowed a sum of money from one Ram Lagan and executed a mortgage in his favour in respect of 4 annas share in a property known as Matza Parmanandpur bearing Tauzi No. 126. Bisheshwar executed two further mortgages, one dated the 19th June 1911 and the other dated the 27th April 1913 in favour of the plaintiffs. In 1912 Ram Lagan brought a suit to enforce his mortgage and on the 24th September 1912 he recovered a decree as against Bisheshwar. Thereafter the mortgaged properties were put up for sale and were in fact purchased by Ram Lagan. On the 14th December 1914 Bisheshwar along with two other persons borrowed a sum of Rs. 4,935 from the appellants and executed a mortgage in favour of the appellants in respect of certain properties including 4 annas share in Matza Parmanandpur bearing Tauzi No. 126. The mortgage in favour of the appellants recited that Ram Lagan had recovered a decree as against them and that it was absolutely necessary for them to deposit the decretal money in Court in order to have the sale in favour of Ram Lagan set aside. On the 15th December 1914, Rs. 4,192-11-9 was actually deposited by Bisheshwar in Court and a receipt was granted to the appellants by Bisheshwar in respect of the money which was advanced by the appellants to Bisheshwar in which it was distinctly stated by Bisheshwar that out of the money which was advanced by the appellants to Bisheshwar he had deposited the decretal money due to Ram Lagan Singh, decree-holder. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the money actually advanced by the appellants went to satisfy the mortgage-bond of Ram Lagan. The question, therefore, arises, was the charge in favour of Ram Lagan extinguished, or was it kept alive by the transaction which took place between the appellants and Bisheshwar. In my opinion, there cannot be the slightest doubt that the charge was kept alive. It was manifestly to the interest of the appellants that the charge should be kept alive and there is no reason at all to hold that they did not intend that which was manifestly to their advantage and for their benefit.

The learned Subordinate Judge has taken the view that the allegation that Ram Lagan's debt was satisfied out of the consideration money of the appellant's bond is not supported by any reliable evidence. In my opinion, it is supported by the recitals of the bond and also by the receipt Exhibit A, to which I have already referred. Then the learned Subordinate Judge says that there is no agreement in the appellants' bond that the debt of the appellants will have priority over the plaintiffs' mortgage. Of course there is no such agreement nor could there be any such agreement. The question that the learned Subordinate Judge should have considered was this: was the mortgage bond of Ram Lagan extinguished or kept alive; and had the learned Subordinate Judge referred to the numerous authorities on the point he would have had no sort of difficulty in coming to a proper conclusion on this point.

It was lastly argued by the learned Vakil for the respondents that the Judicial Committee in the case of Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (1) has taken the view that upon an order absolute for sale being passed under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, the security is entirely extinguished and cannot be kept alive for any one's advantage. It is, of course, conceded in this case that an order absolute for sale was passed in Ram Lagan's suit and that thereafter a sale of the property actually took place. If the decision of the Judicial Committee in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (1) be the last word on the subject, then there can be very little doubt that the respondents will be entitled to succeed. But this case was considered by the Judicial Committee in the case of Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (2). It was pointed out that various cases which have taken the opposite view were not brought to the notice of the Board in Het Ram's case (1), and that whatever the difficulty might have been under the Transfer of Property Act, the position is entirely different now that we are governed by the Civil Procedure Code and not by the Transfer of Property Act. Their Lordships in the course of their judgment said as follows:—

"Now the words being gone," namely, the concluding words in section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, which gave rise to a conflict of authorities on the subject, "their Lordships feel no difficulty in holding that the law remains as it certainly was before the Transfer of Property Act, 1832, namely, that an owner of the property who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage, is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee, who is not bound by the sale of the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield".

In my opinion, this decision is conclusive on that point.

I hold that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question that has been argued before us cannot be supported. I must accordingly modify the decree which has been passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and direct that the sale of 4 annas share in Mauza Parmanandpur bearing Tauzi No. 126 must be subject to the prior mortgage lien of the appellants to the extent of Rs. 4,192 11-9.

The appellants will be entitled to their costs both in this Court and in the Court below from the plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover damages in respect of non-delivery of certain goods by the defendants. Under the contract, which is dated the 17th June 1916, the plaintiffs agreed to purchase certain goods produced by the defendant mill. The contract states:—

"We have purchased goods that are in course of preparation so that we shall take delivery of the goods from time to time as we receive notice from the Company of their being ready. If we do not take delivery of the goods purchased within the period fixed for taking delivery as stated above, you are at liberty to keep the said goods on our account and risk or to sell them either by public auction or by private contract, and we shall make good to you the damage, if any, that you may have to suffer by reason of your having to re-sell the goods in that way. If we do not take delivery of goods which are purchased under preparation on receiving notice from you or goods to be delivered at a particular period on the expiration of that period interest at the rate of six per cent. and expense of insurance etc., will run against us so long as the goods remain on our risk and account either in the godown of the mill or in the Company's godown in the market. If the Company's mill stop or if the mill meet with any accident or obstacle or if the mill stop by reason of some circumstance or on account of strike you are at liberty to cancel all the goods written in the contract or the portion that may have remained undelivered without giving us damages. If you are not in a position to deliver the goods or if there be any dispute in respect of the goods or if the Company do not give delivery for any reason the utmost that will be the result will be that the 'Soda' will be cancelled but we shall not ask for damages arising from the same from you in any way."

The plaintiffs took delivery of 90 bales out of 151 mentioned in the contract. Then the defendants declined to give further delivery without giving any reason for such refusal. Accordingly the plaintiff filed this suit for damages. So far as I can see the defence was that the defendants were not obliged to give any reasons according to the terms of the contract for refusing to complete the delivery. The first issue raised was whether the plaintiffs have got a cause of action to sue for damages. The learned Judge held that the clause with regard to the avoidance of the contract of any reason should be read strictly, and, therefore, the defendants were justified in merely refusing to give delivery without assigning any reason, and the plaintiffs had no remedy. The suit was accordingly dismissed. I need not refer to the amendment which was allowed in the plaint so as to include a prayer for specific performance, beyond stating that it was obvious, from whatever point of view we look at the case, that the plaintiffs could not demand specific performance.

Now, I do not think that the learned Judge has construed the contract in the proper way, CHUNILAL DAYABHAI & CO. v. AHMEDABAD FINE SPINNING & WEAVING CO.

I do not think that those particular words "If the Company do not give delivery for any reason the utmost that will be the result will be that the 'Soda' will be cancelled, but we shall not ask for damage arising from the same" can be read as meaning that the parties agreed that if the defendants simply refused to give delivery, the plaintiffs were bound to accept such a refusal without being able to claim damages, if they wished to do so. It seems to me that the clause evidently means that some reason must be given by the defendants which would justify their refusing to give delivery, and that they were not entitled merely to say that the contract was off because they did not wish to deliver any more goods under it.

A reference has been made to New Zealand Shipping Company v. Societe Des Ateliers Et Chantiers De France (1). The facts there were different, but the principles laid down by their Lordships would apply to a case of this kind. The terms of the contract in that case were—If the construction of the steamer contracted to be built was delayed by an unpreventable cause beyond the control of the builders, the time for the construction would be extended, and in case the builders should be unable to deliver the steamer within, in the event of France becoming engaged in a European war, 18 months from the date agreed by the contract for completion, thereupon this contract shall become void.

Lord Shaw said at page 12 :—

"The answer to the whole of this is clearly put by Bailhache, J.—that the stipulation as to the contract becoming 'void' is a stipulation in favour of both parties. This is subject only to this, that the conduct or situation of the party treating the contract as void shall not have been the means whereby the event which gives rise to the condition has been brought about. What I have ventured last to express appears to be sound in principle and to be a better and broader expression of the principle than a reference to either a party's own wrong or a party's own default, for without either definite wrong or default the action, or even the situation, of one the parties may be sufficient to produce the condition. I prefer more than any other as an expression of the principle that which occurs in Coke upon Littleton (206b), and is quoted with approval by Lord Ellenborough in Bede v. Farr (2), 'for that he himself is the man that the condition could never be performed.'"

Therefore, if the parties agreed in certain events that the contract should become void, that would not mean that one of the parties could himself bring about the state of affairs which would avoid the contract. So that in this case it was not competent for the defendants merely to say that they did not wish to give any further delivery, and that, therefore, the contract should be cancelled without any claim for damages arising in favour of the plaintiffs. The decision of the lower Court was wrong. The case must go back to be tried on its merits. If the defendants are able to satisfy the Court that they had just cause for cancelling the contract, of course, it is open to them to do so. The plaintiffs must have the costs of the appeal. Costs in the Court below will be costs in the cause.

An appeal lies against an order of a lower Appellate Court dismissing an appeal on the ground of deficiency of Court-fee, the appellant having failed to make good the deficiency within the time allowed for the purpose. [p. 227, col. 1.]

(Case-law considered.)

An application for compensation by a judgment-debtor under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of first appeal against an order on the application is 8 annas [p. 228, col. 1.]

(Case-law considered.)

Once a memorandum of appeal has been registered it cannot merely be rejected, and even though an Appellate Court in terms does no more than reject the memorandum, the appeal must be deemed to have been dismissed. [p. 226, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 29th June 1920, confirming an order of the Second Subordinate Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 12th November 1919.

Mr. Balwantrao Peshankar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the present respondent, Kanchhedilal, claimed a final decree for foreclosure on foot of a mortgage and under that decree remained in possession of the mortgaged fields between three and four months. In appeal the decree was set aside and the judgment-debtor after being restored to possession applied under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, for compensation alleging that some of the land was improperly left fallow and that crops which he had sown in the rest deteriorated owing to the decree-holder's neglect. On the application a Court fee of 8 annas was properly paid under Article 1, Schedule II, Court Fees Act. The Subordinate Judge who dealt with the application declined to hold the decree-holder responsible for leaving part of the land fallow and found that no damage had been caused to the crops actually raised. The application was, therefore, dismissed with costs and the judgment-debtor appealed to the District Court which, after admitting and registering the appeal, rejected the memorandum of appeal on the ground that an ad valorem Court fee was payable on it according to the amount claimed, under Article 1, Schedule I, Court Fees Act, whereas the judgment-debtor had paid 8 annas only, and on being given time to make good the deficiency had failed to do so. This decision was based on Jagdish Narain Singh v. Mahant Keshogir (1), a case decided by a Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court on the 13th August 1900, at which time the following order passed in exercise of the powers conferred by section 35 of the Court Fees Act was in force:—

"The Governor General in Council is pleased to direct that the fee chargeable on appeal from orders under clause (c) of section 214 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1832) shall be limited to the amounts chargeable under Article 2 of the Second Schedule to the Court Fees Act, 1870."

It was held that where, on an application under section 583, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, compensation for the loss of possession of land in the shape of mesne profits was prayed for, the Court fee payable on the memorandum of appeal was an ad valorem fee. The decree of the Appellate Court contained no express order directing the plaintiff (appellant) to restore possession to the defendant (respondent) or to pay him the mesne profits, but the learned Judge held that mesne profits were granted by way of executing the decree passed in appeal and that the order for restitution amounted to a decree as defined in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882.

The judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court and the decree-holder has raised a preliminary objection that no appeal lies.

It is contended for the respondent that, while section 2 (2) in the Civil Procedure Code of 1903 includes the rejection of a plaint in the definition of a decree, the rejection tion of a memorandum of appeal is not so included and that a right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure and cannot exist unless expressly conferred. In support of this view I am referred to the remarks of Bore, A. J. O., in Onkar v. Lakhmichand (2) and to Nur-ud-din Khan v. Fran Kishan (3). In the latter case it was held that no appeal lies against the order of an Appellate Court returning a memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court. It is also contended, on the strength of my own decision in Fariabi v. Mohamad Amin (4), that section 107 (2) read with section 141 of the present Civil Procedure Code does not suffice to place the rejection of a memorandum of appeal for the amount of Court-fee on the same footing as the rejection of a plaint.

For the appellant, on the other hand, it is urged that the memorandum of appeal having once been admitted could not thereafter be rejected and that the appeal should, therefore, be considered to have been dismissed under section 10 (ii) of the Court Fees Act. That provision, however, has plainly no application as appears on a perusal of section 9 of the Act. In Trimbak Fatil v. Madho Rao (5) it was held by me in February 1905 that a plaint can be rejected after registration, but on this point there was then a conflict of authority and the point has not been made clear by the present Code.

The decision in Rupsingh v. Mukhroj Singh (6) favours the competency of the appeal, though there the real question decided was one of limitation, it being held that an order rejecting a memorandum of appeal must be regarded as equivalent to a decree for the purposes of Article 179, Schedule II, Limitation Act, 1877. Again, in Gurga Dass v. Ramjoy (7) the question was whether an order dismissing an appeal under section 4 of the Limitation Act, 1877, is a decree passed in appeal and section 582 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, was prayed in aid to establish that an order dismissing an appeal on the ground of limitation amounted to a decree just as an order rejecting a plaint was a decree according to the express terms of the definition in section 2 of the 1882 Code. The decision in Gulab Rai v. Mangli Lal (8) is to the same effect and was followed in Ayyanna v. Nagabhoochanam (9) and Raghunath Gopal v. Nilu Nathaji (10), of which the former was in turn followed in Zamindar of Tuni v. Bennyappa (11). In the last mentioned case the memorandum of appeal was rejected by a District Court on the ground that it contained language disrespectful to the Court of first instance.

The present Civil Procedure Code, like that of 1882, admits of the rejection of a memorandum of appeal solely for defeat in certain matters of pure form which do not include the amount of Court-fee and it would, therefore, seem that once a memorandum has been registered, it cannot merely be rejected. In this respect the memorandum of appeal differs from a plaint, for a plaint must be rejected in any of a number of specified cases, one of which is deficiency of stamp. For authority in favour of the view that a memorandum of appeal cannot be rejected after admission I may refer to Gopes Eullub, Rcy v. Goluck Prothad (12) and to Ayyanna v. Nagabhoochanam (9) (above cited). In this view I think the lower Appellate Court must be treated as having dismissed the appeal although in terms it did no more than reject the memorandum.

It is well settled that section 12 (i) of the Court Fees Act does not make a decision final which fixes the category in which a document falls for the purposes of determining the Court-fee payable thereon. The question for decision, therefore, is solely whether the lower Appellate Court's order amounts to a decree or not. It is, of course, clear that no question within section 47 or section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code has been actually determined by the lower Appellate Court; indeed, the view taken as to the Court-fee payable has precluded the determining of any such question. On the whole, I think the authorities cited justify the conclusion that an order in effect dismissing an appeal for deficiency in Court-fee should be treated as on the same footing with the rejection of a plaint for the purposes of determining whether it amounts to a decree or not. In Faridbai v. Mohamad Amin (4) I pointed out that the appellant had a remedy by way of fresh suit. No corresponding remedy is available in the present case, nor would an application for revision of the lower Appellate Court's order have any chance of success, inasmuch as that order decides what is a mere question of law which may be classed with one of limitation or res judicata. I hold, then, that an appeal lies against the lower Appellate Court's decision.

With regard to the merits, the question for decision is, whether the reduction of Court-fee ordered by the Governor-General in Council under section 35, Court Fees Act applies to this case. Authority in favour of the appellant is to be found in Madan Mohan v. Narendranath (13), the decision in which is based on the view that an order under section 144 of the present Civil Procedure Code comes under section 47 (1) of that Code. As to this I would remark, in the first place, that the reduction ordered under section 35, Court Fees Act, applies only to a certain class of appeals, namely, those from orders under clause (c) of section 244, Civil Procedure Code, 1882. Now those orders do not include any which decide questions falling under clause (a) or clause (b) of the same section and those clauses in terms relate only to mesne profits as to which the decree has directed inquiry or which it has made payable. In my opinion there is no decree at present in existence which can be said to meet either of those descriptions, and I, therefore, respectfully dissent from the view taken on this point in Jagjit Narain Singh v. Mahant Keshogir (1). The appellate decree which enabled the judgment-debtor to regain possession of the mortgaged land made no reference to any question regarding the compensation to which he might be entitled by reason of his temporary dispossession by the decree-holder. Moreover, the definition of the term "mesne profits" in section 2 (12) of the (13) 39 Ind. Cas. 640; 21 C. W. N. 544.

present Civil Procedure Code covers only profits received or obtainable by a person in wrongful possession of the property and the meaning of that term as laid down in the Explanation to section 211 of the 1882 Code was precisely the same. It seems to me clear, however, that this question of compensation does relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the appellate decree and there is authority for this view in Somasundaram Pillai v. Ohokkalingam Pillai (14) and Kurgodigaud v. Ningangauda (15). I do not feel at all pressed by my own decision in Radha v. Sakhu (16), where Article 181 of the Limitation Schedule was thought to be applicable to an application for restitution under section 144, Civil Procedure Code. It is true that section 144 omits all reference to execution and that the position of the section as compared with that of the corresponding one (No. 583) in the Code of 1882 has been changed, so that it seems no longer possible to hold that an application for restitution is one for execution of the appellate decree which forms its basis. Nonetheless, to use the language employed in the latest of the Madras cases cited, the party seeking the aid of the Court is agitating a question relating to the execution of the decree under which the other party deprived him of his property.

Whether Article 181 or Article 182 of the Limitation Schedule applies to an application for restitution under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, is not really material. In favour of applying Article 181 there is an addition to my own recent decision (above cited) in Krupasindhu Roy v. Mahanta Balbhadra Das (17). That conclusion, however, is not really inconsistent with one which treats an application under section 144 as raising a question which relates to the execution of a decree under which one party was deprived of property by another. Indeed Somasundaram Pillai v. Ohokkalingam Pillai (14), was followed on the question whether the provisions of rule 2, Order II, First Schedule, to the Civil Procedure Code, apply to such an application.

For the appellant it was urged that it would be anomalous if the Court-fee of 8 annas only were payable on an application for restitution under section 144, while the Court-fee on a memorandum of appeal from the order passed thereon is calculated ad valorem according to the relief sought by the appellant. I do not think there is much force in this contention. Other instances of similar anomalies are referred to in Falmukund v. Haji Hasan Ali (18), and difficulties of this kind can be removed either by express legislation or by the issue of a suitable order under section 35 of the Court-Fees Act. It is, however, worthy of mention that a draft notification recently received in this Court from the Government of India through the Local Government includes a clause directing that the fee chargeable on appeals from orders under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code shall be limited to the amounts chargeable under Article 2 of the Second Schedule to the Court Fees Act, though the draft includes no specific provision regarding appeals from orders under section 144 of the Code.

The third ground of appeal is not and could not be pressed for, as already stated, the appellant was allowed time to make good the deficiency in Court-fee.

My conclusion is that the decision of the District Court as to the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of first appeal was incorrect and that the fee of 8 annas which was actually paid is sufficient. The appeal is, therefore, remanded to that Court with directions to re-admit it on its original number in the register and to decide it on the merits. A certificate for refund of the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal to this Court will be granted. Other costs hitherto incurred will be costs in the cause.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24—Transfer of suit—Judge having decided the same law point in another suit, whether good ground for transfer.

The fact that a Judge has decided a point of law arising in one case is not a good ground for transferring from his Court another case of the same party in which the same point arises.

Petition, under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, for transfer of the case—the Firm of Johri Mal-Chunna Mal versus the Firm of Jai Narain-Babu Lal—from the Court of the subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, to some other Court at Delhi.

Pardit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Petitioner.

Lala Mohi Sagar, R. B., for the Respondent.

ORDER.—It is contended for the petitioners that as Khwa a Abdus Samad has decided eight of the ten suits filed by the respondents the other two suits, in which the same point for determination arises, should be transferred to another Court. The point for determination in all the cases is purely one of law, and Counsel for the petitioner has not cited any authority for the view that the fact that a Judge has decided a point of law arising in one case is a good ground for transferring from his Court another case in which the same point arises. There is, in my opinion, no sufficient ground for transferring the cases, and I accordingly dismiss the applications.

Mr. V. D. Sathaye, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. O. Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is a Hindu woman of the Maratha caste. As the first defendant in this suit she resisted the claim of the plaintiff malguzar for possession of an occupancy holding which had once been occupied by her father on the ground that she was the next heir to the last tenant who was her brother's son and died in 1916. It has been found and is not now denied that she is a permanent resident of the village in which the holding is situated. A father's sister is no heir under the Hindu Law as it is interpreted in these Provinces, but Sakhu Bai pleaded that her family is governed by the Bombay School of Law under which she would be an heir to her brother's son. In the First Court it was held that she had failed to prove that she was governed by any system of personal law other than the lex loci and the other questions that arose in the case were left undecided.

Her appeal to the Court of the District Judge was dismissed for a reason which is stated as follows: "Assuming that the defendant is governed by Bombay School of Hindu Law and that a paternal aunt succeeds to the estate of her brother's son, the O. P. Tenancy Act, 1898, does not allow her to succeed to an occupancy holding. Section 46 of the O. P. Tenancy Act, 1898, which governs this case is a bar to her inheritance to the holding [vide Ghanya v. Ukund Rao (1), Tek Chand v. Tulai (2), Bhura v. Ramrao (3), Kanhayalal v. Dularsingh (4), Aimaram v. Lala (5)]." The real meaning of this passage I am unable to discover. Of the five cases cited by the learned Additional District Judge four seem to have no bearing whatever on Sakhu Bai's claim and the last seems to support it. In this Court the learned Pleader for the respondent admitted that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court could not be supported, but he attempted to support the final decision by urging that in section 46 of Act XI of 1898 the words "in the male line of descent" mean "a male in the male line of descent."

Section 11 of the Tenancy Act which superseded the Act in force at the time of the death of the last tenant, that is, Act I of 1920, expressly limits the collaterals who can succeed to an occupancy holding to males in the male line of ascent or descent from the tenant. The learned Pleader urges that the framers of the new Act were only expressing more clearly the intention of the Legislature in 1898 without changing the law in any way. But section 11 of Act I of 1920 does make two very considerable changes in the law as expressed in section 46 of Act XI of 1898, in omitting both the qualification of residence or the holding of other land in the village and also the condition of descent from an ancestor who occupied the holding. The new Act is, therefore, of no help at all in interpreting the old on this point.

CHANDMAL KESARMAL v. VISHVANATH BALVANT SOHONI.

Thellusson v. Rendlesham (6) quoted in Strond's Judicial Dictionary under the heading "Male Line: Male Lineal" that the expression means "male in a line of males." The meaning, however, is assigned to the expression "male lineal," not to "in the male line." The article in the Dictionary goes on to quote other English cases in which it was held that "in the male line" does not necessarily mean that the person at the lower end of the line, so to speak, must be a male, and in Sayer v. Bradley (7) it was held that "the nearest of kin in the male line in preference to the female line" was the testator's sister in preference to a more remote male relative connected with him through an unbroken line of males.

I hold that section 46 of Act XI of 1898 does not disqualify a female from inheriting an occupancy holding, if she is otherwise qualified to do so according to the personal law to which she is subject. Sakhu Bai is, therefore, heir to the holding in dispute in this case provided it is proved that she and her family are subject to the Hindu Law as it is interpreted in Bombay. The case must, therefore, be remanded for a finding on this question of fact and a fresh decision in accordance with that finding. Costs in this Court will follow the result.

A lease was granted of certain premises for forty years to the lessee and his sons, grandsons and lineage. On the death of the lessee before the expiry of the period, the lessor sued to recover the premises. The lessee's sister's sons resisted the claim. The lessor contended that the lease was only to the lessee and his wife and his direct descendants and that the collaterals were excluded:

Held, on the construction of the lease, that it was a lease to the lessee for forty years without any limitation and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to possession. [p. 231, col. 1.]

Mr. Ooyates (with him Mr. G. S. Mulgaonkar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Company sued to recover land which was originally leased to one Pemraj under a rent-note passed by him on the 1st October 1905. The defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who resist the plaintiff's claim are the sister's sons of Pemraj. The case for the plaintiff is that the lease was only to Pemraj and his wife and his direct descendants, thus excluding the collaterals. This construction of the document has found favour in both the lower Courts. But I do not think that that is the way to look at this particular document which amounts to a lease of particular premises for forty years to Pemraj, and if there had been no words of limitation the lessor's interest would pass to his heirs. The question is whether we can extract from the document any intention that the lease on the death of Pemraj and his wife should descend in a particular manner. The words are * * * * which are translated "sons and grandsons and our lineage." It is clear from the decision in Ramlal Mookerjee v. Secretary of State (1) that those words when found in a Will convey an estate of inheritance, and the same conclusion was arrived at in Ferkash Lal v. Rameshwar Nath Singh (2), where their Lordships recognised that these words had been held to convey absolute estates of inheritance, alienable and never resumable, unless in a particular case some custom were proved which would exclude the ordinary law, for instance, if it were found that these words were applied to a devise of an estate which by custom descended only in the male line, then they could not be held to convey an absolute estate of inheritance. There is no difference whether such words be found in a Will or lease, and there is nothing in this particular document on the facts proved which would show that the period of forty years for which the rent note was to run, was to terminate before the expiry of forty years, in the event of the line of the direct descendants to Pemraj coming to an end. In my opinion this document should be construed as leasing the premises absolutely to Pemraj for a period of forty years, and the result would be that on the death of Pemraj it would go to his heirs. No doubt the fact that the wife is mentioned in the document might create a difficulty, since, in the event of Pemraj dying before his wife, she might claim a life estate in the lease to the exclusion of his heirs. However, that question need not be considered. Taking a general view of the lease, and in the absence of any claim by the wife, we are entitled to come to the conclusion that it was a lease to Pemraj for forty years without any limitation. Therefore, the appeal should be allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout. The direction that the plaintiff should get possession should be struck out. The direction with regard to payment of rent should stand.

JIWAN LAL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Agency, contract of—Custom turning agent into principal outrageous—Right of re-sale—Re-sale, when breach of contract—Custom, essentials of—Recent instances, whether sufficient proof.

The suggestion that an agent, being a medium of communication between two parties, without the consent of his principal or without a term in his contract authorising him to do so, which is the same thing, can turn himself into a principal and use his principal's money and the advantages which he has obtained from his position as agent, to make a profit for himself, is unheard of and outrageous. Such a custom is unreasonable, even impossible as a matter of law in a contract of agency. [p. 234, col. 2.]

The vendor's right of re-sale does not arise until the date fixed by the contract has expired. If the property has undoubtedly passed and the real date for paying the balance of purchase-money and for delivery of the article has not arrived the re-sale is a breach of contract entitling the vendee to repudiate the transaction. [p. 234, col. 2.]

A custom should be universal, reasonable and, with some qualifications, immemorial. A number of instances which have recently occurred are not sufficient to create a custom in a trade; on the contrary, they show that it is entirely a modern idea. [p. 233, col. 2.]

Plaintiff employed the defendants who were grain agents at Hapur to purchase certain grain-pits for him and paid the advance money. The defendants purchased seven grain-pits but before the date of delivery to plaintiff sold four of them to another person. When the date of delivery to plaintiff came, the defendants refused to give delivery even of the remaining three pits, (which the plaintiff was willing to accept; unless the latter also agreed to take delivery of another four grain-pits which were different from those originally purchased for him. Upon this the plaintiff repudiated the entire contract and sued for the return of the advance money. The defendants set up a trade custom in defence of their attitude:

(2) that even if the custom be taken to be established it was unreasonable and immoral in the sense that it was likely to lead to gross fraud, as it put an agent into a double capacity where his duty and interest must necessarily conflict and as such was contrary to the general principles of agency and could not be given effect to in a Court of Law. [p. 233, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the S.D.ordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 17th of April 1919.

Dr. K. N. Katja and Mr. Saila Nath for the Appellant.

Mr. Pannu Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, two suits have been brought arising out of some transactions, which may or may not have been speculative in the real sense of the word, for the purchase and sale of grain-pits containing wheat in the town of Hapur. The period fixed for delivery and completion of the purchase-money was the month of March 1916, the contracts having been for the most part made in the previous October. It appears that there were at least two contracts, one for two grain pits and one for five but, although that might have been material in one aspect of the case, neither party has made anything of the point and the transaction has been treated as that of one contract only for the sale of seven grain pits. Where it does not otherwise appear in this judgment, the purchaser, Kishori Lal, is called the plaintiff and Jiwan Lal, the agent, is called the defendant. It is admitted on both hands that the contract was not carried out. The purchasers who were plaintiffs in one of the suits paid a sum of Rs. 3,500 in advance as earnest money for the purchase of the pits, whereas, on the other hand, the defendants, before the time allowed by the contract for the purchaser to take delivery, re-sold four of the pits to other purchasers, so that the sellers whether they were actually agents or principals in their dealings with Kishori Lal, the purchaser, were unable to deliver more than three and declined to deliver even these three, which the purchaser was willing to accept and pay for, unless he also took four other pits which the sellers undertook to deliver, and which were different from those which were originally purchased for the plaintiff-appellant. It should be noted that the price in March 1916 had fallen so that the plaintiff, if he had been compelled to take delivery, would have completed the contract at a loss. This may account for the advantage which he has taken of the alleged breach of contract by the agents who bought for him, and this may also possibly have influenced the mind of the learned Judge against Kishori Lal's case though we are not prepared to agree if it did so, that there was not a legitimate reason for Kishori Lal repudiating the whole contract as will appear (sic). Under these circumstances, the defendants brought a suit for the loss which they had incurred by re-sale owing to the refusal of the plaintiffs to take delivery of the entire quantity tendered. They have recovered in that suit a sum of Rs. 5,757-4-0 with costs against Kishori Lal, the purchaser. In the other suit, Kishori Lal sued for the return of his principal and Rs. 339-8-0 interest from the 23rd of October 1915 which was presumably the date of payment, down to the 16th of February 1917 presumably the date of the institution of the suit. That suit was dismissed. The purchaser appeals against both the decrees. It would not be necessary to deal with the same case and detail with the matters raised by these appeals which are really perfectly simple and straightforward, if it were not for the public importance involved in the main contention of the respondents, the ascending proposition which they have had the courage to put forward in justification of their defence to the suit and the remarkable dicta contained in the judgment under review. Although a portion of the contract is in writing, namely, what is called the langot or parcha indicating the situation, quantity, price, rate and sale of the grain-pits and certain express stipulations as regards risk, the contracts are made up partly of letters and telegrams and partly of interviews which passed between the plaintiff Kishori Lal, the appellant, and Jiwan Lal, the respondent, his alleged agent. It is extremely difficult to give a clear definition of the capacity in which the defendants acted, for the purpose of rebutting the allegations of the parties, as the defendants themselves do not know what they were, and they have shifted their ground in the First Court and in this Court, in defence of the attitude that they have adopted, but it is pretty clear from the evidence of Kishori Lal himself and of Pearey Lal, the son of Shib Ram, Munim of the defendants, that Kishori Lal employed the firm of Jiwan Lal, which is known by another name, as his agents to buy a quantity of grain in pits or khattis. In the English translation, it is true, that Kishori Lal used the expression "purchased from" but we think we are right in saying that there is no vernacular exactly corresponding to the English word "through" and the preposition "se" frequently stands in the vernacular both for "from" and "through" and the general tenor undoubtedly of his evidence conveys the impression that he purchased through the firm of Barsidhar Jiwan Lal. Pearey Lal, the other party to the contract, or rather the only witness who purported to represent the other party, is much more specific. He clearly entered into the contract as an agent. He explains that, in such cases, he purchases for his customers and asks them to deposit money and he makes it quite clear that this was an agency contract because he goes out of his way to explain the reason why his own firm's name was inserted in the langot which is done for obvious reasons, although his own firm are not, in fact, the purchasers at all, but merely the agents for the purchasers, and, in this case, were, in fact, agents for Kishori Lal. The langots make it clear that

KISHORI LAL V. JIWAN LAL.

According to section 78 of the Indian Contract Act, the property passed at the time of the sale, or bargain for sale, not only was part of the purchase price paid by payment of the earnest money already referred to but payment of the interest for the balance of the purchase-money was provided for. Certain express responsibility for damage was laid upon the person in whose original ownership the grain was, and rent was payable by the purchaser for the use of the place where the grain was stored. All these things are inconsistent with the hypothesis that the property was not intended by both parties to pass as between Kishori Lal and the sellers at the time of the sale. It is quite immaterial that the sellers were unknown to Kishori Lal, the purchaser; indeed that is usually the case and explains the need for the employment of an agent or middle-man. Although the order and original proposal for the purchase made was, as we have said, for an indefinite quantity, the amount became eventually ascertained and identified as being of a particular weight and situated in particular grain pits which had been filled by a particular person who was named. They, therefore, when the bargain was eventually made a contract for the purchase of specific ascertained articles ear-marked to the contract by which the firm of Jiwani Lal Bunsidhar, for commission which they were to receive, had undertaken as agents to purchase from the sellers for the purchasers.

They brought their suit for damages and recited the plaintiff's claim for return of the earnest money, as principals, and set up a perfectly hopeless allegation of custom, (the learned Judge seems to have been persuaded that it was introduced from Bombay to Hapur though, for the sake of Bombay, we hope he is under some delusion upon this subject) which entitles the corn agents or brokers of Hapur to disregard their capacity of agents and to assume that of principals, without either the knowledge or the consent of their own principal just when and how they please. The allegation is so unheard of and outrageous that it is really difficult to treat it as a serious matter requiring judicial determination, but inasmuch as it has succeeded in the First Court and Kishori

Lal has been compelled to appeal to us, it is necessary shortly to point the overwhelming reasons which are almost as old as the common law itself, why such a custom cannot possibly exist. In the first place, a custom has to be universal. In the second place, it has to be reasonable. In the third place, according, we believe, to one decision, at any rate, in this Court, it has to be immemorial, though in the case of some commercial customs, that proposition requires to be stated with some qualification. The custom alleged in this case is not universal by any means. It is not necessary to review the evidence on this point but it was strenuously denied by, at any rate, one witness and many others could be cited from this and other cases to show that it is by no means universal. The right of sale possessed by the agent in whose name the langot happens to be drawn up (and to that extent the langot being a title deed enables him to obtain delivery to himself in his own name) was stated by one of the witnesses called by the plaintiff whose name is also Pearey Lal, son of Lala Khushi Ram, is really the only way in which a reasonable man could have stated it:—

"The practice is that when there is an apprehension of loss, khattis are sold after giving notice and that, if the goods are not weighed on the due date (we take that to mean delivery taken by the purchaser who would naturally weigh them), they are sold."

He thus makes it clear that the right of sale does not arise until the date fixed by the contract has expired; in other words, he is stating the practice to be in accordance with the simple and fairly obvious proposition of law that, if a purchaser does not take delivery and pay the balance of the purchase money on the due date, the seller or his representative may sell the goods against him and charge him with the loss. There was abundant evidence before the learned Judge on which he could have dismissed this allegation of custom without more ado as having no foundation of fact. Secondly, the alleged custom is unreasonable; it is immoral in the sense that it is likely to lead to gross frauds and, in any event, puts an agent in a double capacity in which his duty and interest must necessarily conflict and is contrary to the general principles of agency and, therefore, needless to say, highly unreasonable. The learned Judge has cited a passage from Anson on Contracts which, even if separated from its context, does not appear to apply to this case at all, because the passage cited represents Jiwan Lal as selling to Kishori Lal at a price equal to the price that he has had to pay to the original owner plus his own commission and award, and if that were the real contract in this case and that had been the real position of Jiwan Lal-Bansidhar, as the learned Judge conceived it, there would have been no room and no necessity for any allegation of custom. The case, as put by the learned Judge, may be illustrated by a simple example. If a resident in the country applied to the Army and Navy Stores to obtain for him and send a box of Sunlight Soap, the Army and Navy Stores in such a case are a kind of agent whether working for a profit on a sale, or working for a commission based upon a percentage of the value of the article it is selling, which again depends upon his contract with the proprietors of Sunlight Soap. In such a case, it is no business of the purchaser what arrangement the middle man, who is only a sort of agent, has with the vendor, and there is no privity between the purchaser and the owner of the proprietary article and, in effect, the Stores are selling the soap to the purchaser (themselves although they are probably controlled by their contract with the proprietors of the soap as to the conditions and price at which they are to sell. The learned Judge has found nothing in this case and could have found nothing which corresponded in the slightest degree with that illustration, and if he had taken the trouble to study the three classes of contract with which the late Sir William Anson was dealing in the passage cited, he would have found it laid down in the most unequivocal language that, both with regard to the first and the third, (the one that the learned Judge selected was the second), it is said that, an agent, in the true sense of the word, is a medium of communication between the two contracting parties and it is imperative that he should not divest himself of his character as agent and become a principal to the transaction.

Thirdly, the learned Judge states that "only two or three years ago, commission agents at Hapur were not in the habit of selling grain-pits that they had once bought for their constituents without the latter's permission but recently a number of instances of this kind have occurred" which the learned Judge seems to think are sufficient to create a custom in a trade. In the face of this fact, he would have been justified in rejecting the custom on the ground that it was an entirely modern idea. To sum up, therefore, the suggestion that any agent, without the consent of his principal or without a term in his contract authorising him to do so, which is the same thing, can turn himself into a principal and use his own principal's money and the advantages which he has obtained from his position, as agent, to make a profit for himself, is unheard of in a Court of Law, and outrageous and ought to have been dismissed with contempt by the learned Judge. If the position of the defendant really is that he was the principal in the transaction, his position became almost equally hopeless. As we have already pointed out, the sale was for specific articles in an ascertained situation and indeed the defendant's Counsel actually asked the plaintiff whether he had been to the place to see them, a question impossible upon any other hypothesis, and inasmuch as the property undoubtedly had passed and the real date for paying the balance of the purchase money and for delivery of the wheat had not arrived, the resale by the respondent, even in that view, was a breach of contract entitling the plaintiff to repudiate the transaction. It may be that the plaintiffs were glad to get out of this bargain on account of the drop in the price, although, according to their agent whom they employed to take delivery, they were always willing to take the three pits that were left. We do not think that any shabby or unfair conduct ought to be attributed to them in this respect. They had entered into a forward contract which always involves a risk of loss. They had chosen to do it through an agent and if the agent had conducted himself as an agent should, when the time came for the completion of the contract, the plaintiffs would have found themselves faced with a loss on their purchase, but, when the time came, they found that their agent had committed a breach of contract and they were clearly entitled to take advantage of that and of any legal right which he had placed in their hands by his own folly, in order to escape from the loss which would otherwise have fallen upon them and there is nothing inequitable, in any point of view, in this result, inasmuch as, in any event, the seller gets his contract price, indeed must have received it long ago, if Jiwan Lal and Bansidhar had really re sold this grain, and the loss which would otherwise have fallen on the plaintiff, has fallen upon the agents who are alone responsible for what has happened and has, therefore, fallen on the right shoulders. In conclusion, it is impossible to pass the judgment by without inviting the learned Judge, in matters of this kind which are frequently matters of great importance and, in this case, we are told, affect a number of other disputes, to clear his mind as to the fundamental principles involved, and the real questions which he has to determine. The judgment in this case simply bristles with legal fallacies and contradictory views. The learned Judge has allowed himself to be persuaded to follow an authority in Bombay which has no more to do with the question in this case than the man in the moon and he has cited a passage from Anson on Contract which does not apply. He points out, with great care, that the relation of principal and agent did not exist between the parties in the Bombay case, and then he goes on to apply that principle to the case which he is deciding and, as a result of such application, to hold that no special usage in Hapur need be proved but that the right of the commission agent to sell away the pits follows as an incident of his contract; thus applying the decision which he himself said did not relate to principal and agent, to the duty of an agent. He seems to vacillate continually between the question whether Jiwan Lal Bansidhar were agents or not and, among other inconsistencies, he arrives at the extraordinary conclusion, (apparently in considering the question whether specific grain was dealt with by the contract or not) that so long as there was no difference in the capacity of the particular grain-pits at Hapur, it was immaterial whether the grain-pits which were subsequently tendered, were those which the plaintiff originally bought or not. If the learned Judge had stopped to consider what would have happened, if after the purchase and, as we have pointed out, the passing of the property, some fire or riot or inevitable accident had destroyed one of the grain-pits mentioned in the plaintiff's original langot and the question had arisen as between the plaintiffs and the owner of the grain pits as to whether they had intended to buy that one or any other and as to whether the loss should fall on the plaintiffs or the original vendor, he would have realised the fallacy of this view. The main ground on which we rest our decision in these two appeals is that this was a contract of agency, and that, as between principal and agent the custom alleged is unreasonable even impossible, as a matter of law. The result is that the two appeals are allowed. The defendant, Jiwan Lal's suit in appeal No. 191 of 1919 is dismissed with costs in all Courts. The plaintiff's appeal against Jiwan Lal (Appeal No. 305 of 1919) is allowed with costs and a decree must be granted to him for Rs. 3,500 plus interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from the 23rd of October 1915 to the institution of the suit and thereafter at the rate of 6 per cent. until payment with costs in the Court below, costs in this Court to include fees on the higher scale.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Surat, in Suit No. 84 of 1918.

Mr. Ouyajee (with him Mr. G. N. Thakor), for the Appellant.

Mr. B. J. Desai, (with him Mr. N. K. Mehta), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was filed by the plaintiff to recover the plaint property as a reversionary heir of one Daji Bhikha on the death of his widow from the defendant to whom the property had been sold by Bai Beni in 1889. The defendant disputed the claim of the plaintiff as being the nearest reversionary heir of Daji. But assuming that Kanbaji was a relation and agnate of Daji, the defendant could not point out the existence of any other agnate or relation except Daji's sister's daughter, Bai Hari. The defendant, therefore, attacked the pedigree on which the plaintiff relied. That pedigree had been deduced from the evidence of one Mohansing who produced his book which had been kept by himself, his father and his grandfather, recording the family events of various Rajput families of which the family in suit was one. With regard to this witness who was acquainted with this family and who kept the record of family events, the Judge said :—

"These entries are made in the course of the tour made by these chroniclers from the information given by the Yajmans, though the names of the informants are not given. Still admittedly all the Girasia Rajputs rely upon this book for correct information about their ancestors and I must accept their correctness and hold that it is admissible either under clause (2) or (6) of section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. Kanbaji and Daji both being dead, the entries can be held to be relevant under clause 6."

We see no reason to differ from that opinion if the Court was satisfied that the witness in a sense was a professional man or a person whose business it was to keep a book of this kind for the advantage of these Rajput families. There is no reason why, if the book is shown to have been kept in the ordinary course of business, it should not be admitted as evidence. Even if that were incorrect, still, sub-section 6 of section 32 enables a family pedigree to be admitted in evidence so long as the members of the family depend upon a particular person like the witness to keep a record of the family events before them. We think, therefore, the Judge was entitled to rely upon Mohansing's evidence fortified by his book. Once the book was proved, then it is clear that Kanbaji was the agnate of Daji and it is not suggested that there was any other agnate in existence at the present time. He would, therefore, be entitled to succeed as a reversioner on the death of Bai Beni unless the defendant can show that in 1889 the debt was for legal necessity. The Judge said :—

"In the deed the property is stated to be sold for debts. Particulars of debts are not given, but attempt is made to show that at least two creditors were satisfied. It is said that two creditors were paid Rs. 100 and Rs. 800 respectively. But the evidence is unsatisfactory and no reliance can be placed on it. There is no writing about the debts and such oral evidence can be prepared at any time."

On reading the evidence admittedly adduced to prove the payments, there can be no doubt that the learned Judge was right in his appreciation of it. Because the sale-deed passed thirty years ago by a Hindu widow to an outsider could not be attacked until the death of the widow, it may seem hard that the defendant-purchaser should be deprived of this property. But still the law in this country is perfectly well-known that a widow cannot sell more than her own interest unless there is legal necessity, and the onus has rightly been placed on the purchaser to prove that the sale was for necessity. Therefore, it was desirable that at any rate the debts which it was suggested were paid off out of the purchase price should have been recited in the deed and it was not sufficient that there should be merely a recital that the property had been sold for debts. The learned Judge pointed out :—

"There is absolutely nothing to show that Daji was really indebted. He possessed considerable land, both at Delada and Dholgam. It is probable that the suit lands were sold because the widow who resided at Dholgam could not manage them. On the evidence I am not prepared to hold that the sale was for necessity."

In any event it is impossible to come to the conclusion that the learned Judge was wrong in his appreciation of the evidence. The defendant has also failed to prove that his father spent about a thousand rupees on improvements as alleged in this case, and as the revenue of the land is said to be Rs. 320 a year, we think the defendant must have recouped the money which his father spent in purchasing the property with interest thereon. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 14th of February 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 83 of 1921.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are fully given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiffs (of whom the second plaintiff is a minor) sue in the suit out of which this appeal arises, and in the connected suit on which Second Appeal No. 308 of 1921, arises, on two mortgages, dated 2nd August 1907. It was stated by the plaintiffs that the original mortgage deeds had been lost, and the plaintiffs sued on certified copies obtained from the registration office claiming their right to do so under section 65 (c) of the Evidence Act. Among other contentions raised by the contending defendants, it was denied that the original deeds had been lost, and it was asserted that when the first plaintiff brought Suit No. 17 of 1907 on a prior mortgage, the claims on the mortgages now in suit which the plaintiff had just purchased, were included in the compromise by which that suit was settled and the mortgage-deeds were returned to the then defendants. I may say at once that the compromise judgment and decree in that suit which are on the record do not make it clear whether or not the compromise related only to the mortgage sued on.

The first issue was whether the original deeds were lost, and the 8th issue was whether the mortgage deeds were returned to the mortgagors and others in the circumstances stated by the contesting defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge held the evidence as to the alleged loss of the deeds to be untrue, and that though there was not any reliable direct evidence on the point it was extremely probable in the circumstances that the deeds were included in the compromise and returned to the mortgagors.

Gendaji, one of the original mortgagors, who had not appeared in the first Court, appeared in the lower Appellate Court and produced four pieces of paper, which he said were pieces of the original mortgage deeds torn up and returned at the time of the compromise. The learned District Judge admitted further evidence for the defendants to prove Gendaji's story. It has been proved beyond any possibility of doubt that two of the pieces of paper are parts of one deed, and the other two are parts of the other. It has also been found on the fresh evidence admitted that these two mortgages were included in the compromise and the deeds torn and returned to the mortgagors. The main ground of appeal is that this fresh evidence should not have been admitted and that the case should have been decided by the lower Appellate Court on the original evidence; it is also urged that on the original evidence the suit should have been decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

I agree that the fresh evidence should not have been admitted in order to enable the Court to decide the case in favour of the defendants. This view finds ample justification in the cases reported as Krs. sowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1), Kalika Dutt Mandar v. Tuli Mandar (2) and Krishnama Ohariar v. Narasimha Ohariar (3).

Nevertheless the appellants themselves wish to take advantage of some of the evidence admitted in appeal; I called upon the appellants to elect whether they wish the existence of the documents in defendant Gendaji's hands to be taken into consideration or not. The learned Pleader for the appellants thereupon admitted the genuineness of the pieces of the documents, which was denied in the lower Courts. The object of this admission is to admit secondary evidence of the mortgages under section 65 (a) of the Evidence Act. Of course if the fresh evidence is excluded the whole of it should be excluded. But if, as is desired, the single fact that the deeds are in the hands of one of the mortgagors is admitted as evidence, then the presumption under illustration (i) to section 114 of the Evidence Act comes into play, and affords great support to the conclusions of the First Court arrived at before the reception of fresh evidence. It is quite impossible to reconcile the story of the loss as described in the plaintiffs' evidence with the fact that torn portions of the documents are in the hands of one of the mortgagors, and their being in his hands supports the conclusion on the 8th issue originally arrived at. If on the other hand we exclude the fresh evidence altogether, then after reading the evidence I agree with the finding of the First Court that the loss of the documents has not been proved, and secondary evidence cannot be given. It is complained that no clear history of the compromise has been given, but the plaintiff had the opportunity on the 8th issue to give a full account of the compromise, and as he has not done so the probabilities are in favour of the view taken by the Subordinate Judge. In any case the plaintiffs could not sue on the mortgages without proving any ground for not producing the originals.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

LAXMI BANK, LTD. v. RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN APTE.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner filed a petition under the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) shortly before Act V of 1920 was passed. The petition, therefore, would have to be proceeded with under the provisions of Act III of 1907.

Under section 14 (1) of the Act, on the day fixed for the hearing of the petition, or on any subsequent day to which the hearing may be adjourned, the Court shall require proof that the creditor or the debtor, as the case may be, is entitled to present the petition. Under section 6 (3) the debtor shall not be entitled to present an insolvency petition unless (a) his debts amount to five hundred rupees; or (b) he has been arrested or imprisoned in execution of the decrees of any Court for the payment of money. Under section 11 (1) every insolvency petition presented by a debtor shall contain a statement that the debtor is unable to pay his debts.

When the petition came on for hearing the following issues were raised: (1) whether the petitioner has made a true and full disclosure of his property, (2) whether his debts amount to Rs. 500, and (3) whether he is unable to pay them. Under section 15 (1) where the Court is not satisfied with the proof of the right to present the petition, or of the service of notice on the debtor, or of the alleged act of insolvency, or is satisfied by the debtor that he is able to pay his debts or that for any other sufficient cause no order ought to be made, the Court shall dismiss the petition. The issue whether the petitioner has made a true and full disclosure of his property would not be pertinent at the inquiry under section 15, provided the petitioner has given the particulars required with regard to his property, as it is not until after the adjudication that it can be ascertained whether the petitioner has made a true and full disclosure. The Trial Judge seems to have dismissed the petition on the very ground on which he ought to have entertained it, namely, the unsatisfactory conduct of the debtor with regard to his property, for it would only be by the administration of the estate in insolvency that the claims of the creditors could be properly protested. He also thought that the debtor had not satisfied the Court that he was unable to pay his debts, but we think that this finding was based on wrong grounds.

In appeal the Joint Judge dealt merely with the question whether the debtor was unable to pay his debts, and though it was rightly held that the insolvency should proceed under the provisions of Act III of 1907 he appears to have thought that the new Act had made a change with regard to what was required to be proved before it could be decided that the petitioner had a right to present his petition. As a matter of fact there is no material difference in this respect between the Act of 1907 and the Act of 1920. Under section 11 (1) of Act III of 1907 the debtor has to state in his petition that he is unable to pay his debts, and if either on the face of the proceedings or on a representation by the opposing creditor the Court is satisfied that this statement is not correct, it can dismiss the petition. But if the debtor has made a disposal of his property with a view to defraud his creditors who might otherwise have been paid, then the Court is not justified in holding that he is able to pay his debts, but should admit the petition, so that the interests of the creditors may be benefited by the special powers given to the Court while administering an insolvent's estate. The order of remand was rightly made though the reasons given for making it were not correct. Therefore, we dismiss the appeal. When the Trial Court takes up the petition again according to the order of remand made by the lower Appellate Court, the learned Judge will, no doubt, deal with the petition in the light of our remarks.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this second appeal has arisen related to a piece of common land in the village Nizampur, Tahsil Gohana. It consists of 56 bighas 18 biswas and is known as Bani Laiqawala. In the Settlement of 1879 the co-sharers entered into an agreement that this would continue to be joint and impartible. The terms of the agreement were entered in the wajib-ul-arz of that Settlement. In the subsequent Settlements, however, the entry was not repeated. The Collector has directed its partition by pannas, and his order has been upheld in appeal by the Commissioner. Fifty-five of the proprietors of pannas Mehr Chand instituted this suit in a Civil Court for a declaration that the land was not subject to partition according to the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. The defendants to this suit were 128 proprietors of the four other pannas of the village. One of the pleas raised in defense was that the suit was not cognizable by a Civil Court. Both the Courts below have accepted this plea with the result that the suit has been dismissed. The plaintiffs have preferred this second appeal and it is urged on their behalf that the suit indirectly raised a question of title and has wrongly been thrown out on the ground that it is not cognizable by a Civil Court. Section 158, subsection (2) of the Land Revenue Act, provides that—

"A Civil Court shall not exercise jurisdiction over any of the following matters."

Among those matters is mentioned in clause (xvii).

"Any claim for partition of an estate, holding, or tenancy or any question connected with, or arising out of, proceedings for partition, not being a question as to title in any of the property of which partition is sought."

This provision is very comprehensive and certainly includes any claim of the nature put forward in the plaint. The present suit clearly comes within the exemption provided by section 158, clause (xvii) of the Land Revenue Act, no question of title being involved. The proposition is so clear that it is hardly necessary to cite any authority in support of it. This very question has clearly been decided in Lakhi v. Malik Dost Mohammad Khan (1). In this case with respect to a similar entry the Hon'ble Mr. A. H. Dicks, Financial Commissioner, held—

"That an entry in the wajib-ul-arz prohibiting the partition of the shamilat is not necessarily a bar to partition and the Revenue Officer dealing with the partition should himself decide whether, under the circumstances of the case, the prohibition should prevail or not."

Deva Singh v. Musammat Jawali (2), Sundar v. Wazira (3) and Rahmun v. Hasham (4), relied upon by the plaintiffs have no bearing on the facts of the case, and the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has given good reasons for holding that they are distinguishable and are inapplicable to the present case. We have not the least doubt as to the correctness of the view taken by the Courts below.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 106—Suit for enhancement of rent—Rent fixed per drone without reference to area—Vendee of tenancy rights, position
of.*

Where the rate of rent is not fixed at the inception of the tenancy with reference to any particular area but is fixed per drone of the arable land and the tenant agrees to pay this rent so long as the lands are not measured, the landlord is entitled to claim, according to the agreement, enhanced rent for the area which the tenant is found to possess, at the time of the suit. [p. 242, col. 1.]

Where a person purchases a tenancy, executes a kabuliyat in respect of it, which simply mentions the fact of the purchase, and prays that his name may be entered in the landlord's register in place of the last tenant, it does not amount to the creation of a new tenancy but is a mere recognition of the original tenancy, as held by the transferor. [p. 242, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nankhali, dated the 8th of December 1919, reversing a decree of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Nankhali, dated the 29th of July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Bhagirath Chandra Das), for the Appellant.—This is a suit in a proceeding under section 105 of Bengal Tenancy Act for fair and equitable rent. The question of law is that according to section 52, Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord will get additional rent for additional area. The last assessment was in 1249. There was no term as regards enhancement. The document is a contract between the landlord and the tenant. In determining the area for which rent has been previously paid, the Court shall have regard to the length of time during which the tenancy has lasted without dispute or to rent or area, see section 52 (2), clause (c), Bengal Tenancy Act. I submit that the document of 1849 creates a new tenancy. Refers to Durga Priya Choudhury v. Hazra.

Bain (1), Akbar Ali Mian v. Musammmt Hira Bibi (2).

Babu Girija Prosonna Ray Choudhury, for the Respondent—I claim settlement of rent under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, in respect of land held by the tenant. There has been no objection to the area in the written statement. So I say that no question of area arises upon the proceedings. Refers to Jnanaki Sundari v. Abdur Rahman Khaisa (3), and reads the concluding portion of the judgment of Mookerji, J. There is no decision of status, so there is no second appeal. And there is no decision on the question of area. I claim assessment on the basis of kabuliyat. Refers to Bisesswar Roy Choudhury v. Rajendra Kumar Singha (4), Upendralal Gupta v. Jogesh Chandra Ray (5). I submit that Akbar Ali Mian v. Musammmt Hira Bibi (2) does not apply.

Babu S. C. Sen, in reply, referred to Sarati Chandra Ghose v. Sham Chand Singh Roy (6) and Abhoy Sankar Motumdar v. Rajani Mandal (7).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a decision of the Special Judge under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act holding that the tenure in the occupation of the defendant is liable to enhancement of rent on the ground that when the tenure was first created rent was fixed at a certain amount per drone without any reference to the area let out. It appears that in 1323 B. S. one Baidya Nath Chakrabarty executed a kabuliyat in favour of the then landlord in which he mentions that he has purchased a taluk standing in the name of Kamdeb Chakrabarty and petitions the landlord to remove the name of Kamdeb from his sherista and to insert the name of the petitioner for which he executes a fresh kabuliyat. The terms of the kabuliyat are that the tenant agrees to pay to the landlord at a certain rate per drone of the arable land and so long as the lands are not measured the tenant will pay rent at the old rate which, however, is not mentioned in the document. In 1216 the widow of Baidya Nath files a petition to the landlords intimating that on account of her inability to pay the rent for the tenure regularly, she has transferred the tenancy to one Ram Das Chakraburttty and requests the landlords to enter the name of the said Ram Das as the tenant in her place and to accept in future the rent from the transferee. In 1219 B. S. the said Ram Das Chakraburttty executed a kabuliyat which is described as a doul kabuliyat in respect of the tenure mentioned as mutofat. Baidya Nath Chakraburttty in which he mentions the fact of his purchase and prays that his name may be entered in the landlords' office in the place of the late tenant.

In the state of documentary evidence the Revenue Officer held that as the kabuliyat of 1223 did not mention the previous area with reference to which the rent was to be adjusted but only the rate of rent at which the rent payable was fixed the rent of the tenure cannot be enhanced. On appeal the Special Judge has held that as the rate of rent was not fixed at the inception of the tenancy with reference to any particular area the tenant is liable to pay enhanced rent for the area which he is now found to possess. Against this decree the tenant has appealed.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the respondent to the competency of this appeal inasmuch as the decision appealed against settles a fair rent within the meaning of section 109A of the Tenancy Act. It is, on the other hand, argued that the decision involves a further question as to whether the tenure is one of which the rent can be enhanced. It is not necessary for us to decide this question as the view we take of the evidence in this case coincides with that taken by the Special Judge.

It is evident that at the time, of which we have got any historical knowledge, this tenure was created, the lands were not all cultivable and had to be reclaimed. The rent was, therefore, fixed not on the quantity of the land let out but on the quantity of land that could be brought under cultivation by the talukdar. It is specifically mentioned in the kabuliyat of 1223 that the rent payable at that time was to be paid on the quantity of the land under cultivation until there was a measurement. We agree with the learned Special Judge in construing the document of 1249 and holding that it was a mere recognition of the original tenancy which was created in 1223.

It is argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the document should be treated as creating a new tenancy. But as we have said before the document makes no mention of the area let out nor of the rate but is simply a prayer by the tenant to substitute his name in respect of the holding known as mutofat Baidya Nath Chakraburttty. We are of opinion that the right of the landlord to claim enhancement is based upon contract as embodied in the kabuliyat of 1223 and that, according to its true construction, the rent is liable to enhancement.

The only point raised having failed the appeal is dismissed with costs.

(1) a.—Deposit of decretal amount in Court by judgment-debtor—Notice of payment to decree-holder—Duty of Court.

In all cases of suits, appeals and applications, when decretal amount is deposited in Court by the judgment-debtor, and when this fact is brought to its notice by permission being asked to deposit the money, it is the duty of the Court to give notice to the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor should, however, pay the necessary process fee. But even if he does not pay the Court is bound to inform the decree-holder of the payment when he appears to ask for sale of the property. [p. 243, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 20th March 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 196 of 1919.

NARAYAN V. GANPATRAO.

Sir B. K. Rose, Messrs. A. Bhagwant and P. N. Rudra, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—All the trouble in this case arises out of the slovenly and prohibited practice of scribbling orders on the backs of petitions. The first respondent obtained a decree for Rs. 420-12-3 against the appellant on the 12th February 1919 for the arrears of revenue and cesses of a mālik makbūsa holding and costs. On the 1st of March 1919 he applied for execution of that decree by attachment of a house and on the 5th of March 1919 the Court ordered a warrant to issue. This warrant was issued on the 10th of March 1919 and the attachment was effected on the 18th of March 1919 but in the meantime on the 12th of March 1919 the judgment-debtor had deposited Rs. 420-12-3, the amount payable under the decree, in Court. This payment seems to have escaped the notice of the Court which went on with the execution and eventually sold the house. The payment by the judgment-debtor has been held to be incomplete and of no avail in the lower Appellate Court because he failed to give the notice required by rule 1 (2) of Order XXI to the decree holder. But it seems to me beyond question that it was the duty of the Court to give that notice. As is done in all cases of suits and appeals and applications, when the payment under rule 1 (1) (a), of Order XXI was brought to the notice of the Court by permission being asked to accept the money, the Judge should have ordered that notice should be given to the decree-holder. It would then have been for the judgment-debtor to pay the necessary process-fee. But even if he did not pay them the Court was surely bound to inform the decree-holder of the payment when next he appeared to ask for sale of the property.

In complete oblivion of the payment that had been made the learned Munsif went on to fix a date for the sale of the house and to issue a proclamation. The date fixed was the 4th of August 1919, the sale being ordered to be put up four days later on the 8th of August 1919. But a month before that on the 2nd of July 1919 the judgment debtor, doubtless astonished that a sale-proclamation should have been issued, put in an application stating that he knew nothing about the proceedings and had paid the full amount of the decree into Court on the 12th of March 1919 as was proved by the receipt accompanying the application, and praying that the sale might be stayed, enquiry made into his allegations and the execution proceedings dismissed, the decree being fully satisfied. On this the learned Munsif endorsed the following undated order "Put up on the date of hearing". The sale was held in what must here be called undue course on the 4th of August 1919 and when the proceedings came before the Court on the 8th of August 1919 the order passed was this: "Parties absent. House sold for Rs 760. Quarter amount deposited. Judgment-debtor has deposited Rs. 420 annas 12 pies 3. There is still balance of Rs. 4. For confirmation of sale on 8th September 1919." On the 8th of September 1919 we find the following record of orders and proceedings: "Decree holder by agent Bala. Judgment-debtor absent. Full amount deposited. The judgment-debtor has not deposited the balance. No objection filed. Sale confirmed. Case struck off as fully satisfied. Balance refunded to judgment-debtor."

Apart from the minor mistake of saying that costs which really amounted to Rs. 480. were only Rs. 4, the errors committed were many and various. If the application had received a moment's consideration when it was filed it would have been seen that it contained an allegation that the money had been paid into Court even before the execution of the warrant of attachment and a prayer that the sale should be stayed and it would have been noticed that the sale had not then taken place. But no more care was expended over it even when it was formally placed before the Court at the two subsequent hearings. The application with the deposit was treated as an application to set aside the sale made under rule 89 of Order XXI which it would not possibly be, having been made before the sale took place. Still less could the deposit have been under rule 89, having been made before even the property was attached. A fairly casual perusal of the application would have made this clear as it gives dates and expressly asks not for a cancellation but for a stay of the sale, of which it mentions the date as in the future. But even greater carelessness was displayed in the Appellate Court, where the dates and the sequence of events were prominently brought to the notice of the learned Additional District Judge who still treated the application as one to set aside a sale that he knew had not taken place when it was made, and held that the payment into Court could not help the judgment-debtor because he had not given the decree holder a notice which it is clearly the duty of the Court to give him, secondly because he had not paid costs which had not been incurred when he made the deposit and would never have been incurred if the First Court had done its duty and thirdly because he failed to pay the five per cent. commission on the amount bid at a sale held very nearly five months later, which also never ought to have been held.

The orders of both the Courts below are set aside. The First Court will now take up the proceedings again as they stood on the 11th of April 1919, and will issue notice to the decree-holder to show cause why he should not accept the amount of Rs. 420-12-3 in full satisfaction of his decree. That costs incurred by him up to the date of the deposit have not been paid with it is of course no reason for refusal provided the judgment debtor is now willing to pay them or has already paid them. As far as I can make out they amount to Rs. 2-8-0 only. All the costs incurred by any party after the date of the deposit are due to the initial default of the First Court in not informing the decree-holder of it at least on his next appearance in the Court. I do not go so far as to suggest, as was done in somewhat similar circumstances in the Allahabad High Court, that learned Munsif should compensate the parties to the decree and also the auction-purchaser out of his own pocket, but only for the reason that he has been transferred long ago. Costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court will be paid by the respondents, the decree holder and auction purchaser. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 15.

The provisions of section 26 of the Limitation Act are applicable where plaintiff sues for a declaration of a right of easement on the basis of prescription but it has no application where the claim is based upon a lost grant. [p. 245, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 23rd of December 1919, affirming a decree of the Officiating First Munsif at Bolpur, dated the 12th of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nakuleswar Mukerjee for Babu Kali Das Sarkar, for the Appellants.—Both the Courts below have wrongly thrown the burden of proof upon the defendants. My next contention is that the case should have been remanded by the lower Appellate Court for a consideration of the question of drawing water by two pits. My last and strongest point is that the suit should have been dismissed on the ground of limitation by reason of its not having been instituted within two years of the interruption of the plaintiffs' alleged right. See section 26 of the Limitation Act. Refers to Jakhari Chowdhurani v. Bindu Bathini (1) and Achul Mahta v. Rajun Mahta (2). Even if section 26 of the Limitation Act is not applicable, then Article 37 of the Schedule to the present Limitation Act corresponding to Article 31 of the old Act applies.

HOOKAMCHAND V. NIDHANSING.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred against a decision of the District Judge of Birbhum affirming a decision of the Munsif of Bolpur.

The suit was one for a declaration of the plaintiffs' right to take water from a tank belonging to the defendants. Both the lower Courts have decreed the suit and the defendants now appeal.

On their behalf the main contention is that the suit was barred by limitation by reason of its not having been instituted within two years of the last interruption of the alleged exercise of this right to take water. Now, if the success of the plaintiff's claim had depended only on section 26 of the Limitation Act there would have been force in this contention. But as the learned District Judge has pointed out, the plaintiffs in their plaint set out an alternate claim based upon a lost grant. The learned Munsif expressly found that it is "quite clear that the plaintiffs are using the water of the tank for irrigation purposes for a long time and from time immemorial." With this finding the learned District Judge evidently concurred. We think, therefore, that there is no force in the contention which is founded on section 23 of the Limitation Act.

The only other point taken is that the question as to whether the water should be taken from the tank by means of two pits should have been remanded for a further decision to the Court of first instance. That, however, was a matter which was within the discretion of the learned District Judge and on a consideration of the facts we are not prepared to interfere with the exercise of his discretion.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the Sub-Judge, Damoh, dated the 5th May 1921, in Civil Suit No. 32 of 1920.

Messrs. G. L. Subtelar and J. O. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The grounds of appeal relate solely to interest. It is contended that the lower Court erred in law in holding that the stipulation of compound sawai was penal, and that in any case some compound interest, even at a low rate, should have been allowed. The actual amount of further interest asked for is Rs. 2,000. According to the mortgage deed 4 Manis of seed wheat and 2 Manis of linseed were borrowed by the mortgagors on the 20th January 1901. The value of the grain borrowed was stated to be Rs. 93. We may call it Rs. 100, for convenience of calculation. As in the plaint linseed is valued twice as high as wheat, the price of the wheat advanced was on the date of the mortgage Rs. 50, at Rs. 12-8-0 a Mani and of the linseed Rs. 50 at Rs. 25 a Mani. It was stipulated that this grain was to be re-paid in 16 years, a most unusual stipulation in the case of seed grain, which is usually to be re-paid at the next harvest. The interest in kind was to be at the rate of 25 per cent. compound interest. It is perfectly certain that the mortgagors would not realize what compound interest at 25 per cent. would amount to, if payment were not regularly made. The suit was brought on the 16th of November 1920, and the amount claimed was Rs. 9,729-6-0, being the current value of 349 odd Manis of grain, after allowing for a re-payment of 9 odd Manis of wheat. The current price is given as Rs. 20 a Mani for wheat and Rs. 40 a Mani for linseed. Thus a grain debt of 6 Manis has swollen to nearly 350 Manis and a cash debt of Rs. 92, to Rs. 9,729. The lower Court has allowed 24 per cent. simple interest on the grain giving the plaintiff the benefit of the rise in price of the grain. The decree is for Rs. 755-14-6. This amounts to about 33 per cent. simple interest on the original Rs. 99, even not taking re-payments into account.

In appeal reliance is placed on Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) and Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2) in which the terms of the actual contract were held binding on the debtors. But their Lordships were deciding the actual cases before them. In the first case, which was not one of a grain debt, the interest was 25 per cent. compound, and the amount claimed was over a lakh of rupees. The First Court gave a decree for Rs. 4,301. In first appeal the plaintiff claimed only Rs. 10,000 more, and the decree with which their Lordships refused to interfere on the appeal of the defendant was one for Rs. 14,301 as against over a lakh claimed. In the second case the circumstances were peculiar. The rate of interest was 30 per cent. simple, but from time to time the interest was capitalised and fresh bonds given for the sum of principal and interest. This is very different from 25 per cent. compound interest on a grain debt which was to run for the abnormally long period of 16 years. In Gopaswar Saha

v. Jadab Chandra (3) Mookerjee and Newbould, J.J. referred to Khigiran Das v. Ran Sankar Das (4), Abdul Ma'id v. Ksheroie Chandra Pal (5) and Ohallaphroo v. Bangur Betary Sen (6), as showing that a Court is competent to grant relief whenever the rate of interest appears to the Court to be of a penal character, that is, so unconscionable and extravagant that no Court shall allow it. In this case I am convinced that the terms of the contract were unconscionable and extravagant, and that the mortgagors could not possibly have realized the real effect of the stipulations as to interest.

As the appellant has got 33 per cent. on the Rs. 99 I see no reason to interfere in appeal and dismiss the appeal. As the respondents have not appeared there will be no order as to costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I Art 142—"Abandonment or 'discontinuance' of possession," meaning of—Adverse possession by successive trespassers—Continuous trespasses, without privity of title or devolution of interest—Suit for possession by persons claiming under real owner—Cause of action

'Discontinuance' of possession within the meaning of Article 142 of the Limitation Act takes place when the person in possession goes out and is followed into possession by another person. [p. 248, col. 1.]

In all cases where the person who was in possession at one time and discontinued possession or was dispossessed seeks to eject a person in possession, he must show that he was in possession within 12 years before the suit. [p. 249, col. 1.]

VENNA M R. MAYKA V. KUSURU KOTAMMA.

Time commences to run against the last full owner of property from the date when he was dispossessed and the operation of the law of limitation would not be arrested by the fact that, on his death, he was succeeded by his widow, daughter or mother or any other heir, as the cause of action cannot be prolonged by the mere transfer of title. [p. 243, col. 1.]

In order that the title of the true owner may be barred by the adverse possession of a trespasser or a series of trespassers the possession by them must be continuous, and so long as it is continuous it is immaterial whether they claim through one another or independently; but if a period of time should elapse, however short, after the abandonment of one trespasser who has not been in for the full statutory period and the entry of another the title of the true owner is, as from the time of such abandonment, restored to him without any entry or act done on his part, for the Statute does not apply to a case of a want of actual possession by the true owner, but only to cases where the owner is out of possession and another is in possession for the prescribed time. [p. 243, col. 2.]

Obiter.—Article 141 of the Limitation Act applies to cases where the last full owner was in possession at the time of his death. [p. 243, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 40 of 1918, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Original Suit No. 6 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi (with him Mr. K. Kamanna), for the Appellant.—Here is a case of independent trespasses. The gift to Pannaya by the last owner Mallabattudu was invalid, being oral. As the heir to Pannaya was his mother and his brother Subbarayudu continued in possession after Pannaya's death, the trespasses were independent of each other and Subbarayudu could not tack on Pannaya's possession to his own. As there was a break and 12 years had not elapsed since Subbarayudu entered in possession the suit by plaintiff is not barred. See Trustees and Agency Company v. Short (·).

Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar (with him Mr. T. V. Ramanatha Aiyar), for the Respondents.—The principle underlying the statutory bar is that the last owner should have been dispossessed and should not have re-gained possession. Here there has been no break in the possession of the trespasses and the property did not re-vest in the true owner. There are not successive trespasses by Pannaya and Subbarayudu but only a continuous trespass for over 12 years. The suit is barred. See Mohenira Nath Biswas v. Shamsunnissa Khatun (2) and Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamani Gupta (3).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff as purchaser from the reversionary heirs of one Mallabattudu to recover possession of the properties specified in the plaint and the question is whether the suit is barred by limitation.

Mallabattudu, the last male holder of the properties, died in 1839 leaving two daughters, Ramamma and Govindamma. Ramamma died in 1914 and Govindamma who is the fifth defendant surrendered her estate to her sons who are the sixth and seventh defendants. They sold their rights to the plaintiff in this suit. The findings are that Mallabattudu, about two years before his death, made an oral gift of the suit properties to his grandson Pannayya, the son of his daughter Ramamma, that the properties were managed by Subbarayudu the elder brother of Pannayya, as Pannayya was a minor, that Pannayya died in 1894 during minority, that the properties were thereafter enjoyed by Pannayya's brothers Subbarayudu and two others, that Subbarayudu was the last surviving member of Pannayya's family and that on Subbarayudu's death the properties were sold by Subbarayudu's daughters to the third defendant. It is argued for the appellant that, as the gift to Pannayya was oral, it was invalid, that consequently Pannayya was in possession as trespasser, that on Pannayya's death his heir would be his mother, that, as Subbarayudu continued in possession, Subbarayudu's possession was also that of a trespasser, that, as neither Subbarayudu nor Pannayya completed adverse possession of 12 years, they could not tack on the possession of one to the other and that the plaintiff claiming through the nearest reversioner is not barred. The contention for the respondents is that there was no break in the possession so as to re-vest the properties in the rightful owner, that Punnayya and Subbarayudu cannot be treated as successive trespassers and that, in any event, the real owner having been out of possession for over 12 years the suit is barred by limitation.

It is clear in the present case that as Mallabattudu himself gave up possession, the case would not fall under Article 141 of the Limitation Act as that Article applies to cases where the last full owner was in possession at the time of his death. As pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in Mohendra Nath Biswas v. Shamsunnissa Khatun (2) time begins to run against the last full owner if he himself was dispossessed and the operation of the Law of Limitation would not be arrested by the fact that, on his death, he was succeeded by his widow, daughter or mother as the cause of action cannot be prolonged by the mere transfer of title. We are of opinion that Article 142 of the Limitation Act applies to the facts of the present case. It is clear from the findings that Mallabattudu, when he made a gift of the properties to his grandson and transferred the patta in his name, discontinued his possession. Discontinuance of possession has been explained by Fry, J., in Rains v. Buxton (4) as taking place where the person in possession goes out and is followed into possession by another person. In all cases where the person who was in possession at one time and discontinued possession or was dispossessed seeks to eject a person in possession he has to show that he was in possession within 12 years before the suit. We need only refer to Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (3). We do not think that, on the facts of the present case it can be said that there has been independent trespasses by successive persons so as to give the plaintiff 12 years against each successive trespasser. Mr. Narayanamoorthi has referred us to Trustees and Agency Company v. Short (1) as authority for the proposition that in cases of successive trespassers the limitation ceases to run against the lawful owner of land after an intruder has relinquished his possession. Lord Macnaghten, after dealing with the contention that, if the Statute once commenced to run, it would not stop except by the owner going into possession and so getting, as it were, a new departure, observes: "Their Lordships are unable to concur in this view. They are of opinion that if a person enters upon the land of another and holds possession for a time, and then, without having acquired title under the Statute, abandons possession, the rightful owner, on the abandonment, is in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. There is no one against whom he can bring an action. He cannot make any entry upon himself. There is no positive enactment, nor is there any principle of law, which requires him to do any act, to issue any notice, or to perform any ceremony in order to rehabilitate himself. No new departure is necessary. The possession of the intruder, ineffectual for the purpose of transferring title, ceases upon its abandonment to be effectual for any purpose. It does not leave behind it any cloud on the title of the rightful owner, or any secret process at work for the possible benefit in time to some of some casual interloper or lucky vagrant. There is not, in their Lordships' opinion, any analogy between the case supposed and the case of successive disabilities mentioned in the Statute. There the Statute continues to run because there is a person in possession in whose favour it is running." This case does not help him as it is not shown in the present case that anybody gave up possession which was taken up by a fresh trespasser. It is argued by Mr. Narayanamoorthi that, on the death of Punnayya, it must be taken that there was an interruption in the possession and that there was an interval between Punnayya's death and Subbarayudu's taking possession in his own right, however minute the interval may be, and that except in the case of succession or devolution all other cases would fall within the principle enunciated in Trustees and Agency Company v. Short (1). We do not think that there is anything in the case to support this extreme contention. In Willis

v. Howe (Earl) (5) a person trespassed upon property of another alleging himself to be his brother when he was not his brother and continued the trespass. It was argued that they must be treated as separate trespassers as they were not brothers. Kay, L. J., observed: "It was suggested in reply that, as the alleged brother was not really the brother of George, his taking possession formed a new departure, and that the Statute would begin to run from that entry, and that the previous possession of George was not material. The effect of that would be that if a series of occupiers, not claiming under one another, kept out the real owner for 120 years, time would only run against him from the moment when the last of such occupiers entered into possession. I am of opinion that this is not the law. A continuous adverse possession for the statutory period, though by a succession of persons not claiming under one another, does, in my opinion, bar the true owner. I desired to consider the case to which I referred during this part of the argument but which was not then before the Court; Trustees and Agency Company v. Short (1). In that case there had been an adverse possession of land for some time short of the statutory period, which was then abandoned, and the land left vacant, and after the statutory period had elapsed, but within 20 years before the plaintiff's action, the defendant, or his predecessor in title, took possession. The law is thus stated in the language of Lord Macnaughten (already set out above). These observations were made in a case in which, as I have already noticed, the defendant or his predecessors had not been in possession for the statutory period. If his defence could prevail, it would be enough for a man who entered the day before the action brought to say that the true owner had left the possession vacant for more than 12 years. But it was not meant that if the possession had not been vacant, but some one or other had been in adverse possession during the 12 years such possession would not bar the true owner, unless all such occupants could show a title derived from one another." The law is thus stated in Part on Vendors and Purchasers, Volume I, 7th Edition, page 474: "In order that the title of the true owner may be barred by the adverse possession of a trespasser or a series of trespassers the possession by them must be continuous, and so long as it is continuous it is immaterial whether they claim through one another or independently; but if a period of time should elapse, however short, after the abandonment of one trespasser who has not been in for the full statutory period and the entry of another the title of the true owner is, as from the time of such abandonment, restored to him without any entry or act done on his part, for the Statute does not apply to a case of a want of actual possession by the true owner, but only to cases where the owner is out of possession and another is in possession for the prescribed time." It is, no doubt, true that on the death of Punnayya during minority his mother would be his heir. But it appears from the facts of the present case that Punnayya and his brother Subbarayudu and the other brothers were undivided and that their mother was living with them. Subbarayudu would, therefore, be the presumptive reversioner on the death of the mother and it is clear from the documents filed that Punnayya's mother was a consenting party to Subbarayudu enjoying the properties after Punnayya's death. She was living with them and raised no objection. Under these circumstances we find it difficult to hold that there was a fresh trespass by Subbarayudu after the death of Punnayya. There was continuity of possession, the person holding possession being the next presumptive heir of the deceased. As the plaintiff has not proved that he or his predecessor in title was in possession of the properties within 12 years before the date of the suit, we are of opinion that the suit is barred and was rightly dismissed.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 15, Expl. 2—“Interruption,” meaning of—Acquisition of easement of light and air—Interruption.

Where in the course of acquiring by prescription an easement of light and air for certain windows of a building, the building is burnt down, but the owner begins immediately to re-build it and places windows exactly in the same position as the old ones, he will be regarded as having enjoyed the access of light and air continuously, and will be entitled to protection after twenty years from the first building. Any delay in re-building, however, might be evidence of an intention not to resume the user. [p. 251, col. 2.]

An interruption in user owing to a building being burnt down and having to be re-built is not an interruption within the meaning of Explanation (2) to section 15 of the Easements Act as the interruption in such a case is not owing to the act of some person other than the claimant. [p. 250, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Khandesh, in Appeal No. 256 of 1921, confirming a decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Bhusaval, in Civil Suit No. 193 of 1915.

Mr. P. V. Kaxe, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. V. Bhat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to restrain the defendants from blocking up certain windows of his house.

The defendants replied that the plaintiff had not acquired a complete prescriptive right to the light and air of the windows mentioned in the plaint so that they were entitled to block up these windows.

The Trial Court granted an injunction with regard to the windows of the western wall in the second storey of the plaintiff's house. An appeal from this decision was dismissed.

In the lower Appellate Court the only question argued was whether the windows on the second storey of the plaintiff's house were built more than twenty years before August 1915 when the plaint was filed.

Apparently the question whether the enjoyment of light and air had been continuous since the building of the second storey was not argued.

In second appeal the appellants contend that the plaintiff had not peaceable enjoyment of the light and air which he claimed as an easement for twenty years, on the ground that the building was burnt down in 1905 and re built, so that during the period of re building there were no windows with regard to which the use of light and air could be enjoyed. There does not appear to be any authority, strange to say, on this question. Admittedly, if the plaintiff had already secured an easement of light and air for certain windows in the building before it was burnt down in 1905, and had re-built his house with windows corresponding with the old windows, he would be entitled to the same access of light and air as that enjoyed by the old windows. But in 1905 the plaintiff was in the process of acquiring an easement of light and air for these windows, and since peaceable enjoyment for twenty years is necessary, it is contended that during the period of re-building he could not have enjoyed the access or use of light and air to these windows. Section 15 of the Indian Easements Act says that the user must be peaceably enjoyed without interruption. But 'interruption' is defined in Explanation 2 and it is contended by the appellants that the interruption in the user, owing to the building having been burnt down and having to be re-built, was not an interruption within the meaning of the Explanation, because the interruption to the user was not owing to the act of some person other than the claimant. The appellants' argument seems to be that the period of re-building ought to have been deducted from the period of user. But I do not think that this is correct. Either the period of re-building must be included in the twenty years, or the interruption in the user would stop time running in favour of the owner of the building, so that he would have to start afresh acquiring a right by prescription to an easement of light and air for the windows of the new house. Therefore this is a case, where, owing to an accident, the person who was endeavouring to acquire a right by prescription to an easement of light and air for the windows of his house was prevented during a short period from enjoying any light and air as there were no windows through which he could enjoy them.

The case of Andrews v. Waite (1), may help us to decide this question, although the question there was whether the right to the access of light to a building which had been enjoyed through one window was preserved upon an alteration of the building. It was decided that the answer to that question depended on the identity of light, not on the identity of aperture. The Judge after setting out the facts said:

"Has there been such an alteration of his (the plaintiff's) premises, both in 1898 and again still more conspicuously in 1895, as to prevent his acquisition of any right to light over the defendant's premises at all. That, I think, must depend upon the proper construction to be put upon section 3 of the Prescription Act, which refers to acquisition of rights of light, taken in connection with the decisions of the Courts in respect of the matter. It is said that, except with regard to the term necessary for the acquisition of the right, the Prescription Act did not alter the law as it existed at the time the Act was passed. I think that is probably true, but if so, the Act shows what the law at that time was, so far as the Act purports to state anything in connection with it."

Then this is the important passage:—

"I do not think that any distinction can be drawn between what, in the way of alteration, involves the loss of the right to light when once indefeasibly acquired, and what is sufficient to prevent the acquisition of the right during the twenty years."

Therefore paraphrasing these words, non-user during the twenty years must be such non user as would involve the loss of the right to light if it had been indefeasibly acquired. I may now refer to Giddard's Law of Easements (7th Edition) at page 269:—

"Mere non-user will not, in every case, prevent acquisition of an easement; but, to have that effect, it must be coupled with some act indicative of an intention to abandon the claim, or it must be of such long continuance, and so constant, as to indicate an intention not to resume the user. Non-user, however, which would not prevent acquisition of an easement at common law, may often be sufficient to do so under the Prescription Act, which requires actual enjoyment for the full period."

I do not think that the last sentence in any way weakens the effect of the last passage of the judgment in Andrews v. Waite (1), to which I have referred, because it is not necessary that there should be actual enjoyment of the right every moment of each twenty four hours during the twenty years. I do not suppose that if the owner of a building, who was seeking to acquire a right by prescription to an easement of light and air for his windows, went away for six months, and during that time the shutters of the windows of his house were closed, such non-user would stop time from running in his favour. It seems to me, therefore, that the question must depend very much on the facts of each case, and that if the owner of a building, who, in the course of acquiring a right of easement by prescription is so unfortunate as to have his house burnt down, begins immediately to re-build his house and places the windows exactly in the same position as the old ones, it may be said that he has been enjoying the access and use of light and air continuously, and he will be entitled to protection after twenty years from the first building. If, however, there is any delay in re-building, then that might be evidence of an intention not to resume the user.

The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27
—Additional evidence, admission of, in appeal—
Appellate Court, discretion of—High Court, interference by.

The power vested by rule 27 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code in an Appellate Court to admit additional evidence is purely discretionary, and where, in exercise of that discretion, an Appellate Court declines to allow the production of additional evidence, the High Court will not interfere on the ground that the Appellate Court has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Rangpur.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Ohandra Gupta, for the Petitioner.—I beg to submit that the case clearly comes under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, as the learned Judge has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction in refusing to take in evidence the petitioner's pucca account-books. I contend that that was an illegal exercise of jurisdiction. The petitioner had no opportunity to show that his accounts are not worthless. The petitioner wanted to produce his pucca account-books to clear up certain discrepancies in the kucha account-books. Your Lordships can interfere under the provision of clause (c) of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judge should have admitted and considered the additional evidence the petitioner wanted to put in.

Babu Henendra Ohandra Sen, for the Opposite Party.—I submit that your Lordships cannot interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. Where is the illegal exercise of jurisdiction, or has there been any material irregularity? Refers to Order XLI, rule 27. This rule shows that the Appellate Court, to which application for production of additional evidence is made, is to be the sole and final judge. It is a matter of discretion which is vested in the Court. Refers to Upendra Mohan Ghose v. Gopal Ohandra (1).

Babu Atul Ohandra Gupta, replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this Rule are as follows:—The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 14½ alleged to be due on two unregistered bonds. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit holding that certain account-books which were produced by the plaintiff were not reliable.

The plaintiff has now moved this Court on the ground that the Judge in the lower Appellate Court acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction in refusing to take in evidence the plaintiff's pucca account-books to clear a misapprehension which was occasioned for the first time during the hearing of the appeal which the plaintiff had no previous opportunity of explaining.

The facts would appear to be these: the appeal was heard on the 20th May and judgment was reserved. Then on the 27th May the respondent apparently for the first time asked to put in certain account-books which, he alleged, would clear up the discrepancies in the account-books which he had already filed.

The learned Vakil who urged this Rule states that the accounts actually produced were kucha accounts and the books which he then wanted to produce were pucca accounts. The learned Judge refused to allow these books to be put in in evidence. We are of opinion that in doing so it cannot be said that he acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. Order XLI, rule 27, is the rule which deals with admission of additional evidence in the Appellate Court and the rule runs as follows: "The parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to produce additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, in the Appellate Court. But if (a) the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted, or (b) the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence or document to be produced or witness to be examined." Clearly, therefore, admission of additional evidence in appeal is a matter within the discretion of the Appellate Court; and there is further provision that where additional evidence is allowed to be produced the Court shall record the reason for its admission. It is impossible to say that the learned Judge acted with material irregularity in exercising his discretion under the section in refusing to admit additional evidence three days after the argument had been heard and the appeal was reserved for judgment.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Where in a suit to recover upon a promissory note against an agriculturist, to whom the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act apply, the defendant admits the whole of the plaintiff's claim and asks the Court to pass a decree in accordance with such admission, rule 3 of Order XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code does not oust the Court of its jurisdiction from going behind the transaction and inquiring into the nature of the admission so as to satisfy itself whether the admission is true and made by the debtor with a full knowledge of his legal rights as against the creditor. Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Khandesh, in Appeal No. 407 of 1919, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Erandol, in Civil Suit No. 884 of 1911.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover on a promissory note, dated 29th December 1915, Rs. 450 principal, and Rs. 139 8-0 for interest. The defendant admitted the promissory note but denied consideration and prayed for an account and instalments. The defendant is an agriculturist. When the suit came on for hearing what was represented as a compromise was presented to the Court, under which the defendant agreed that he should pay the amount demanded, Rs. 589 8-0, and the costs by instalments of Rs. 100 each. In default of paying any two instalments the whole amount was to be recovered at once; interest at four annas per mensem was to run on the principal amount from that date until all the instalments had been paid off.

The defendant was examined by the Court and said:—

"I have made the settlement, which I have understood, (and which) I admit. A decree may be passed according to it. At first I received Rs. 200 (two hundred), thirteen years ago. No receipt is passed showing what amount is paid. I do not remember. I do not understand accounts, therefore, I have agreed to this settlement."

The Court passed the following order:—

"Defendant is not able to say how much is due to plaintiff. He has no precise knowledge as to the wasul paid. The transaction is very old. I cannot in these circumstances allow the compromise as I do not believe that defendant has entered into it after fully understanding his rights."

The learned Judge then went into the merits of the case and came to the conclusion that no consideration had been paid to the defendant for the promissory note in suit.

That decision on appeal was confirmed. The learned Judge said:

"I think that the lower Court was perfectly justified in this case in disallowing the compromise (Exhibit 18) as it was no compromise in fact at all; the defendant had disputed the amount of the claim in this case (Exhibit 11). When he was examined by the Court he distinctly stated that he had received no cash consideration at all under the pro-note in suit, whereas plaintiff's case was that he had paid a cash consideration of Rs. 450 at the time of the execution of the pro-note by the defendant in the presence of the writer Damoo. In spite of this position of things we find defendant entering into a compromise admitting the whole of the plaintiff's claim and agreeing to pay the whole amount with all costs, and I fail to see how this can be called a compromise at all which on the very face of it is conspicuous for total absence of any mutual concessions in the matter."

He agreed with the finding of fact that no consideration had been paid.

We have been referred to four decisions of this Court on the question whether the Court can go behind a compromise entered into between the parties when one of them is an agriculturist, and whether the Court is bound to pass a decree under what is now Order XXIII, rule 3, provided the provisions of the rule have been complied with. In Gangadhar Sakharam v. Mahadu Santaji (1) it was held that where a matter had been referred to arbitration, without the intervention of a Court of Justice, by parties, one of whom was an agriculturist, and an award had been made thereon, any person interested in the award might, without obtaining the conciliator's certificate, apply for the filing of the award under section 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, the provisions of which were not superseded by section 47 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Mr. Justice West said:—

"The Code of Civil Procedure and the Dekkhan Act being within the territorial range of the latter Statutes in pari materia must be construed together so as to give effect so far as possible to the provisions of each. Another general principle is that exceptional provisions are not to receive a development to all their logical consequences contrary to the general principle of the law. When these principles are applied, there is nothing to be found which prevents parties from resorting to friendly arbitration instead of to the Court, or to prevent the filing and, if need be, the enforcement of an award thus obtained." In Piraji v. Ganpati (2) a decree had been passed by the lower Court in terms of the compromise. On appeal to the High Court the decree was confirmed. But Mr. Justice Chandavarkar said:—

"What the Court was asked to do was not indeed to pass a decree on any admission of the defendant but to make one in terms of the compromise which, after trial commenced, had been deliberately entered into by the parties. A compromise means the settlement of a disputed claim."

In Kisandas Shivram Marwadi v. Nama Rama Vir (3) the parties proposed certain terms to the Court and asked for a decree but the terms were at variance with section 15 B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and the Subordinate Judge referred the question to the High Court whether he could pass a decree in such terms although the parties asked him to do so, and it was held that it was not competent to the Court to pass a decree in terms which were at variance with section 15 B.

In Shivayagappa v. Govindappa (4) a question arose with regard to the execution of a decree passed in accordance with the terms of a compromise, and as it appeared to the Bench before whom the question came for decision that the decisions in Piraji v. Ganpati (2) and Kisandas Shivram Marwadi v. Nama Rama Vir (3) were conflicting, the question was referred to a Full Bench, and the question which had been referred was construed by the Full Bench as referring to the special provisions of section 15 B, which were the only special provisions referred to in the statement of the case. The effect of the decision was that if there was a compromise made by parties who were sui juris it should be given effect to, and that the fact that the decree was not in accordance with the provisions of section 15 B did not make it unlawful.

It will be seen, therefore, that none of these decisions touch the question whether the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3, prevent the Court from going behind the transaction when the defendant admits the whole of the plaintiff's claim and asks the Court to pass a decree in accordance with that admission. I do not think myself it can be said that Order XXIII, rule 3, ousts the jurisdiction of the Court in this class of cases from inquiring into the nature of the admission so as to satisfy itself whether the admission is true and made by the debtor with a full knowledge of his legal rights as against the creditor. If, when the case had been called on, the defendant said "I admit the claim and am willing that a decree should be passed against me accordingly" it is perfectly obvious that under section 12 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act the Court would be bound to record in writing its conclusions as to whether the admission was true and made by the debtor with a full knowledge of his legal rights, and it seems to me to make no difference that before he came to Court the defendant has written down a paper to that effect and produces it in Court when the case is called on. I think myself, therefore, that provided it is perfectly clear that the whole of the plaintiff's claim is admitted, the Court can go behind the transaction even though an application is made to record an agreement under Order XXIII, rule 3. In this case the evidence shows that the defendant signed a promissory note without receiving any cash so as to admit his liability for a certain old transaction the nature of which he seems to have been entirely ignorant of. I consider, therefore, that the decree dismissing the suit was right and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SHAR, J.—I concur in the order proposed. I have felt some difficulty in coming to this conclusion because it seems to me that according to the decisions of this Court the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3, wherever they are applicable, must be given effect to even in cases which are governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The principle has been sufficiently recognised in Gangadhar Sakharam v. Mahazu Santaji (1), Pirani v. Ganpati (2) and Shisayagappa v. Govindappa (4). In spite of the observations in Kisandas Shivram Marwadi v. Nama Ram Vir (3), which conflict with that view, I think that the Court would be bound even in cases governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to give effect to the provisions of Order XXII, rule 3. Thus in any suit where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by a lawful agreement or compromise, the Court shall order such agreement or compromise to be recorded and pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit.

The question, however, that arises on the special facts of this case is whether the nature of the agreement between the parties is within the scope of rule 3 of Order XXIII. In substance the defendant in the present case, who is an agriculturist, has admitted the whole of the claim by the agreement in question. I say this in spite of the fact that there is a provision in the agreement as to the payment of the amount by way of instalments. I do not desire to lay down any general proposition that such an agreement would never fall within the scope of rule 3 in cases governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. But having regard to the facts of this case, and the view taken by the lower Courts that substantially the defendant admitted the whole of the claim, it seems to me that it was an admission of the claim within the meaning of section 12 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The application of that section is not necessarily excluded in such a case. If in spite of the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3, the application of section 12 is not excluded, it would be open to the Court under the provisions of that section to consider whether the debtor has made the admission with a full knowledge of his legal rights as against the creditor, and unless the Court is satisfied on that point, the Court would not be bound to accept the admission of the debtor, but would be at liberty to inquire into the case as required by that section.

In the present case on the evidence the Courts have found that the debtor admitted the claim without full knowledge of his legal rights, and that finding must be accepted in second appeal as a finding of fact. The whole question which has presented difficulty to my mind is whether in view of the adjustment of the claim between the parties the application of section 12 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not excluded in virtue of the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3. But on the special facts of this case, as I have said, it does not seem to me that the application of that section was necessarily excluded. If that section applies it is clear that the conclusion reached by the lower Courts is really a conclusion based on the circumstances and the evidence in the case which must be accepted.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 31st January 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Delhi, dated the 22nd July 1916, decreasing the claim.

Mr. Rup Ram, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Three minors, children of Muhammad Umar, were permitted by the District Judge of Delhi to appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge in forma pauperis. Subsequently, the successor of the Judge who gave this permission ordered the appellants to give security for costs and on their failure to do so dismissed the appeal (he should have said rejected) under Order XLI, rule 10 (2). The appellants filed a petition for revision in this Court on 30th April 1917, within thirty days of the District Judge's order, and were granted time for putting in an appeal, which is now before us together with the revision petition.

Counsel on both sides are agreed that no appeal lies from an order rejecting an appeal for failure to furnish security for costs and Lekha v. Bhauna (1) and Ferozi Begam v. Abdul Latif Khan (2) are clear authorities to this effect. We accordingly dismiss the appeal and proceed to take up on revision the question whether Order XLI, rule 10 is applicable to pauper appeals. Prima facie it is anomalous for a Court, having held that an appellant is too poor to afford the Court fee payable on his appeal, to expect him to be able to find security for the costs of the suit.

The earliest authority is a case of 1871 reported as Nusseercodeen Eiswce v. Ujul Biswce (3). It was laid down that the provisions of the Code then in force relating to the power of an Appellate Court to demand security for costs were inconsistent with and, therefore, did not apply to those relating to appeal in forma pauperis.

This judgment was dissented from in Seshayyengar v. Jainulvadin (4) afterwards followed in Erinivasa Sostrial v. Subramania Aiyar (5) where it was held that Appellate Courts have power to require security for costs from pauper appellants but should use it only on very special grounds.

To the contrary was a decision by the Calcutta High Court in a case very similar to the one before us, Hafizan v. Abdul Karim (6) that in making an order under section 380 of the old Code for a pauper appellant to furnish security for costs the Court below had acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity. Finally the Bombay High Court has held that Order XLI, rule 10 does not apply to pauper appeals in Khemraj v. Kisanlala Surajmal (7) citing in support of that view an English case Wille v. St. John (8) in which the Master of the Rolls had ruled that the grant of permission to appeal in forma pauperis rendered a previous order to give security for costs no longer operative.

We have no hesitation in following the two authorities last quoted and hold that the order under consideration was illegal. It is accordingly set aside. We make no order as to costs of either the appeal or the revision.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Sangor, dated the 18th April 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1921.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on a mortgage, dated the 21st November 1914, executed in favour of the plaintiffs by Mahant Bindrabandas, chela of Mahant Raghubarsaran, resident of Bindrabanbagh, Sangor. The consideration for the mortgage was Rs. 3,999 and the purpose of the loan was said to be for certain works and repairs to the temple in the Bindrabanbagh. The property mortgaged was an 8 annas patti of Mauza Uldan.

The facts of the case are given fully in the judgments of the two lower Courts. The main issue with which we are concerned in appeal is Issue No. 2 which is to the effect: "Whether the village Uldan (8 annas patti) belonged to the idol established in the Bindrabanbagh or to the deceased Bindrabandas, chela of Raghubarsaran?" The question embodied in the other issues was, whether the loan was justified by legal necessity if the village Uldan was the property of the idol. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the village mortgaged was the private property of the mortgagor and was not the debutter property of the temple. This finding was upset by the District Judge in appeal, and there is a concurrent finding of both the Courts that the loan was not for legal necessity.

The main question argued in appeal is, whether the village is the property of the temple or the private property of the mortgagor. The history of the village is given in the judgments of the two lower Courts. It became the property of Mahant Janki Sewak in 1844 A. D.; it had previously been held by members of other families. In 1855 A. D. Mahant Janki Sewak was succeeded by Mahant Mohandas who in his turn was succeeded in 1850 by Mahant Raghubarsaran. At the first Settlement in 1861 the proprietary rights in the village were conferred on Mahant Raghubarsaran who was succeeded in 1893 A. D. by the mortgagor, Mahant Bindrabandas; he died in August 1918 and was succeeded by the present defendant, Premdas.

Admittedly, the several Mahants above named have also kept the managers of the temple, and, besides the village in suit, there are other villages held by the successive Mahants; as the District Judge says: "Mahant Bindrabandas held the entire villages of Tilli and Belai in muafi right, the entire villages of Uldar, Ohandrapur and Salaya and shares in Bahera, Bijapur and Padwa in malguzari rights."

Admittedly, there is nothing in the first Settlement papers to show that the proprietary rights were conferred on Mahant Raghubarsaran as representing the temple. The question which was decided at the Settlement was whether the proprietary rights should be conferred on the line of Mahants who held the village since 1844 or on other claimants. Both the lower Courts are right in holding that the conferral of proprietary rights would not affect the nature of the terms on which the village was previously held by Raghubarsaran. The subsequent mutation proceedings are also in the name of the Mahant for the time being and do not show that the village was held on behalf of the temple.

Both the Settlement record and mutation proceedings are consistent with the case of either side. The District Judge says: "There is nothing to show why malguzari rights were conferred on the Mahant personally and not on the temple of which he was a Mahant and, in the absence of such evidence, one must turn to the conduct of the Mahants and see whether Ragubarsaran and his successors used the profits of the village for their own purposes or for the benefit of the temple of which they were the Mahants." There is, admittedly, no evidence on the part of the defendant to show that the village was originally acquired as debuttar property. The first Court rejected, as not being regularly kept in the course of business, the accounts of the temple produced to prove that the profits of the village used to be paid to the temple. The District Judge has, however, admitted these accounts in evidence, and very rightly so, and the learned Counsel for the appellants does not dispute their admissibility. The District Judge says, as regards these accounts: "They show beyond doubt that the Mahants of Bindraban temple have for the last 60 years looked on Mauza Uldan as belonging not to themselves but to the temple of which they have been the Mahants. Respondent himself as a witness has deposed that he looked on the village Uldan as the property of the temple when he made the loan on the mortgage sued upon."

The learned Counsel for the respondent also relies on the above admission of the plaintiffs, but this opinion previously held by the plaintiffs does not in any way preclude them from pleading and establishing their legal rights. It is urged for the appellants that the accounts, so far from showing that the whole income of Uldan has always been set apart for the purposes of the temple, do no more than show that some credits have been made from the village in some years to the temple. This contention is undoubtedly correct. The accounts were begun in Sambat 1916-17, corresponding to 1859-60 A. D. Then, there is a gap and the next account is for Sambat 1925 (1868 A. D.). The accounts for Sambat years 1954 to 1960 are not forthcoming and there is a gap between the accounts of Sambat 1933 (Exhibit D 25) to those of Sambat 1938 (Exhibit D 26). The accounts of the village itself have not been produced and there is certainly nothing to show that the whole profits of the village were credited to the temple. There is no repetition of the same figures from year to year and there is nothing to show the ratio of the amounts received by the temple to the profits of Uldan. There is a surprising variation in the amounts received in different years; for instance, in 1953 (Exhibit D 30) the only receipt is for Rs. 55. In Sambat 1954 (Exhibit D 31) the credit to the temple is Rs. 267, and in 1960 (Exhibit D 32) Rs. 29 only. The District Judge is, therefore, overstating the case when he says that the accounts establish that the profits of the village have for the last 60 years been credited to the temple.

In Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Ohunder Sen (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed: "But supposing it to be taken that the rents of this mahal were applied during the period that the witnesses speak of to the worship of the idol Radha Mohun, that fact is by no means sufficient to establish the onus which lies upon a party who sets up the case that property has been inalienably conferred upon an idol to sustain its worship." In Muddun Lal v. Sreemutty Komul Bibee (2), it is observed: "We do not say that the mere fact of the proceeds of any land being used for the support of an idol is proof that those lands formed an endowment for the purpose; but where there is apparently good evidence going back for more than half a century that the land was given for the support of an idol, proof that from that time the proceeds had been so expended would be strong corroboration." In the present case there is no other evidence of the endowment at all and the evidence does not show that the whole proceeds of the land were given for the support of the idol. The same principle was recognised by the Privy Council in Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi (3) where it was said: "The mere fact of the proceeds of any land being used for the support of an idol may not be proof that those lands formed an endowment for the purpose, but it is a fact that may well be taken into consideration when, as in this case, the intention of the founder has to be gathered from an ancient document expressed, to say the least, in ambiguous language." Here there is no ancient document. In Ram Pershad Doss v. Sreehuree Doss (4) it was observed: "It may be that a portion of the profits of the lands in the possession of the defendant had been for some time used for the worship of the idol; but that circumstance cannot impose on the respondent the liabilities attaching to the office of a shebait."

Having regard to the view of the law expressed in the above rulings, the evidence embodied in the accounts is legally insufficient to prove that the village of Uldan is debuttar property. In this view, it is unnecessary for me to discuss the question of legal necessity. For these reasons, I set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The date for payment will be altered to the 22nd of August 1922 and interest up to that date should be added to the decretal amount. The defendant must pay the plaintiffs' costs in all Courts and pay his own costs.

Appellate Court, judgment of, based on inaccuracies—High Court, power of, to set aside—Arbitration—Revision—High Court, when, will interfere.

The judgment of an Appellate Court which is based entirely upon inaccuracies or misunderstandings is vitiated thereby, and cannot be upheld by the High Court; and although the High Court is reluctant to interfere on revision in arbitration cases, it will nevertheless do so in the event of such gross and material irregularities.

Petition, under section 44 of Act III of 1914, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 22nd August 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 14th March 1919.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Petitioners.

Dr. Nand Lal and Lala Arjan Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the parties referred the dispute to the arbitration of a single arbitrator who gave an award in favour of the firm Kesar Mal-Shankar Das, for Rs. 3,350 and this firm filed the award in Court. The defendant-firm, represented by Badri Nath, made many objections to the award all of which have been decided in favour of the other party except that the lower Appellate Court has held that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct and that his award was bad, incomplete and based on hasty conclusions. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, refused to file the award and the firm Kesar Mal-Shankar Das has applied for revision on the ground that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is based merely on conjecture and not on any materials on the record.

The lower Appellate Court has stated that the defendant-firm claimed Rs. 8,143, but the arbitrator cut down this claim to Rs. 3,350 without any rhyme or reason. It also noticed that in another suit on the same subject matter a local Commissioner had determined a much higher figure. The learned Judge further stated that the arbitrator does not appear to have examined the witnesses of the parties nor their account-books and that he did not even rely on the account-books of the parties. Further, that he had no business to make a private enquiry and did not refer to documents. The only witness who made any statement on the question dealt with by the lower Court was the arbitrator himself. He shows,—

- (1) that he examined the account-books of the parties for four days;
- (2) that he did not examine the witnesses for the parties because none were produced;
- (3) he assigns good reasons for cutting down the defendant's claim, namely, that there were many over charges which the defendant himself admitted, and that a sum of money alleged to have been sent by the defendant had not been sent;

BIHARIDAS V. BAJRANGDAS.

(4) the arbitrator, it is true, did not rely on the account-books of the defendant which he considered did not represent the true facts, but he was perfectly entitled to do so;

(5) there is nothing whatever to show that the arbitrator made any private enquiry;

(6) the learned District Judge states that the arbitrator did not refer to documents in his award, but an arbitrator's award is not a judgment and this also was totally unnecessary.

From the above description of facts it appears that the District Judge based his finding on an inaccurate account of the arbitrator's statement made by some Counsel, or that he entirely misread or misunderstood the arbitrator's statement.

In the above circumstances, it is obvious that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, being entirely based on inaccuracies or misunderstandings, is vitiated thereby and cannot be upheld. Much as this Court is reluctant to interfere on revision in arbitration cases it is compelled to do so in circumstances of gross and material irregularities. I, therefore, accept this application for revision and set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and order the award to be filed and a decree be passed thereon. The plaintiff will obtain his costs in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 97—Preliminary and final decrees—Appeal from preliminary decree alone, when maintainable

Where there are preliminary and final decrees in the same suit, an appeal against the preliminary decree alone cannot be maintained, unless it is instituted before the passing of the final decree. [p. 262, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the First Sub-Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 25th June 1921, in Civil Suit No. 53 of 1921.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde and B. R. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—In this case a preliminary decree for partition was passed on the 11th of April 1921. The first defendant, who alone contested the suit, filed the present appeal against that decree on the 18th of July 1921, having in strict accordance with the incompressible custom of the Indian litigants, waited till the very last possible day, although, in the meantime, the partition had been made and a final decree had been passed on the 28th of June 1921. He has not appealed against that final decree and the learned Pleaders for the respondents raised the objection that no appeal will lie against a preliminary decree after a final decree has been passed. Put a great deal more precisely, the contention is, that an appeal against a preliminary decree cannot succeed, or its success would at the best be meaningless, if a final decree had been passed before it was filed and no appeal had been filed against it within the time allowed; it is conceded that if the final decree is passed after the appeal against the preliminary decree is filed no appeal would be required against the final decree, as the matter would already have passed wholly into the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court. The position taken is, in short, that, by reason of section 97 of the Civil Procedure Code, there must be an appeal against both decrees unless the appeal against the preliminary decree is filed before the final decree is passed.

The view of the Calcutta High Court, stated in Mackenzie v. Narsingh Sahai (1) is, that the success of an appeal against the preliminary decree like that now under consideration would be meaningless, for the final decree would still stand good as it could not be upset in any such indirect way as the reversal of the preliminary decree on which it is based. The judgment took no account of section 97 of the present Code of Civil

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 413; 36 C. 762; 10 C. L. J. 113,

CHAMAN LAL v. KAMARUDDIN MIAN.

Procedure as it dealt with the state of things existing before that Code came into force, when it was the practice of that High Court to allow a preliminary decree to be attacked in an appeal against the final decree. That, however, does not affect the main reasoning of the judgment leading to the conclusion that an appeal against the preliminary decree alone is not sufficient.

The High Courts of Allahabad and Madras have laid it down in Uman Kunwari v. Jarbandhan (2) and Ramien v. Veerappudian (3), that in a case like the present it is not necessary to file two appeals as the final decree could not possibly be regarded as still standing after the removal of the whole of the basis on which it stood, the preliminary decree. The reasoning itself seems unimpeachable, but it proceeds on the assumption that the preliminary decree is always the basis of the final decree. This also would seem a perfectly justifiable assumption, but the Calcutta case of Khrodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4) shows that it is not. There the plaintiff sued for partition of certain property which he alleged was joint; the more valuable part of it had been transferred by the first defendant to another defendant, who pleaded that it was the separate property of the first defendant; this was held proved, and the plaintiff was given a preliminary decree for partition of the less valuable part of the property only; he allowed a final decree to be passed dismissing the suit for default and then lodged an appeal against the preliminary decree, claiming that it should have ordered the partition of the whole property. In that case no alteration of the preliminary decree could possibly have affected the final decree dismissing the suit.

I hold, therefore, that where there are preliminary and final decrees in the same suit an appeal against the preliminary decree alone cannot be maintained unless it is instituted before the passing of the final decree. That, however, does not necessarily mean the dismissal of the present appeal. The learned Counsel for the appellant stated that, if his contention that he is not bound to appeal against the final decree should not prevail, he is prepared to file that appeal now, with an application for its admission under section 5 of the Limitation Act, and I cannot at present see how, in the circumstances of the present case that application could be refused. I, therefore, allow the appellant a period of thirty days, plus the time necessary to obtain copies of the final decree and the judgment on which it is based, within which to file an appeal against the final decree. If it is duly filed and admitted, this appeal will then be further considered along with it.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff was the mortgagee of a certain holding occupied by one Ramlal Chamar, a tenant, and in August 1911 the plaintiff sued on his mortgage-bond and obtained a decree against Ramlal Chamar and his two minor sons. Whilst that decree was in existence and before it was executed, a fractional landlord of the mortgaged property sued for rent, obtained a decree and brought the holding to sale, and in August 1914 in execution of the decree the defendant purchased the property. The decree under which the defendant purchased was that of a co-sharer landlord suing for his share of the rent and presumably would be treated as a money-decree. Subsequently on the 10th November 1915 the plaintiff, in pursuance of his mortgage decree, which was in existence before the defendant purchased, put up the property to sale again in execution and purchased it himself and got delivery of possession. When the execution proceedings were pending, the two sons of Ramlal Chamar, who had been made defendants in the plaintiff's mortgage suit, objected that notwithstanding the decree obtained against them, which I may mention was obtained on a compromise to which they were apparently parties, they were not at the time the decree was obtained of majority but were and had been throughout minors, and that, therefore, as against them the decree could not be executed; and it appears that an order was made striking out their names in the execution proceedings. However this may be, it also appears that their names were not in fact struck out and in due course the property was put up to sale and purchased by the plaintiff in execution of his mortgage-decree. I have no doubt that what was sold in execution of the mortgage-decree was the whole holding and not merely the interest of Ramlal Chamar. That was one of the issues in the case and the learned Munsif, who had to decide that issue, came to the conclusion of fact upon it and he said, "considering all the circumstances and the fact that the purchase by the plaintiff of the disputed land was for Rs. 379 and odd, whereas the purchase by the defendant of the disputed land and other land was for Rs. 45 only, I hold that the entire property in suit is passed by the sale to the plaintiff." The learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the findings of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal which was preferred to him. It seems to me, therefore, that it cannot now be questioned that rightly or wrongly what passed at the sale in execution of the mortgage-decree was the whole property in suit in that case.

The question which now arises is whether the sale to the defendant in execution of his money-decree or the later sale to the plaintiff in execution of his mortgage-decree, the mortgage-decree being in existence at the time of the defendant's purchase, is to prevail. Both the Trial Court and the first Appellate Court found in favour of the plaintiff, and broadly speaking the ground upon which their decisions were based was that where a sale had been made in execution of a mortgage-decree, even if the sons of Ramlal Chamar were not bound necessarily by the mortgage-decree, the sale was not void but voidable. In the present case, assuming that the defendant had purchased the whole property in execution of his decree, what he really purchased was the property subject to the mortgage charge and, therefore, the mortgage charge must take priority over his interest. It may be that having purchased the property he stepped into the shoes both of Ramlal Chamar and his sons, but it seems to me that even the sons of Ramlal Chamar could not have this mortgage and the decree resulting therefrom and the sale resulting from the decree set aside until they had shown that the sale was the result of a mortgage which was not either justified by legal necessity or was invalid for some other reason.

The result, therefore, is that, in my opinion, the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge affirming that of the Munsif was right and the decision of the learned Judge who took a different view as to the rights of the parties cannot be supported. In my opinion this appeal should be allowed, the decree of the learned Judge set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored.

Pre-emption—Agricultural land—Punjab Pre-emption Acts (II of 1905) and (I of 1913)—Right to pre-empt—Relationship, question of—Evidence—Tradition—Oral tradition, value of.

On a sale of agricultural land in the Punjab, the right to pre-empt is open to every one of the vendor's heirs, the preferential right among them being determined according to the order of succession. [p. 265, col. 1.]

When the question of relationship arises between people among whom accessible records of births and deaths are not maintained, nor are such events preserved in written family memorials, the question must depend for its decision on oral tradition, and though this requires close scrutiny, the tradition ought not to be regarded as weak and unsatisfactory merely because it may in one or two respects fail to satisfy the strict conditions that would be necessary for proving a pedigree where records and documents could be used. [p. 266, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment of the Chief Court, Punjab, dated April 25, 1918, reported as 49 Ind. Cas. 275, reversing that of the District Judge, Dera Ghezi Khan.

FACTS.—The suit is one for pre-emption of agricultural lands in the Punjab. The parties belong to the agricultural tribe of Bagti Bilochis. The facts are fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The only question in the case was, whether the appellant's relationship to the vendor, Khair Muhammad Khan, was established. The District Judge held it proved and decreed the appellant's suit. The Chief Court came to the conclusion that the evidence, not being supported by documents, was not sufficient to establish the relationship and dismissed the appellant's suit.

Hence the present appeal.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Kishen Narain, for the Appellant.—Every heir of the vendor Khair Muhammad Khan is entitled to pre-empt, though the nearer heir may have a preferential right: Jang Bahadar Khan v. Karam Khan (1). In this case, there is no contest as between the appellant and others, who might be nearer in point of relationship to the vendor, no records of births and deaths are available in the district to which the parties belong. We have established the relationship by the testimony of several witnesses. The District Judge who heard the witnesses held that it was sufficient to establish the relationship. The Chief Court was wrong in holding otherwise. (Evidence of the appellant and his witnesses read out).

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The question raised upon this appeal is, whether the appellant has proved his right to exercise the privilege of pre-emption conferred by section 12 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1905. The material part of that section is in these terms:—

"12. Subject to the provisions of section 11, the right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land and village immovable property shall vest—

(a) In the case of the sale of such land or property by a sole owner or occupancy tenant, or, when such land or property is held jointly, by the co-sharers, in the persons who but for such sale would be entitled to inherit the property in the event of his or their decease, in order of succession;"

It is important to notice that the section

does not contemplate merely inheritance by one person or even by a group of people who at the critical moment would be together equally entitled to inherit the property sold, if the vendor were dead but it assumes that there will be different priorities as between the different claimants, and that such priorities shall be determined in due order of succession. The meaning of the rather obscurely worded section 12 (a) is made clear by section 25 of the Act, which is as follows:—

"25. When more suits than one arising out of the same sale are pending, the plaintiff in each suit shall be joined as defendant in each of the other suits, and in deciding the suits the Court shall in each decree state the order in which each claimant is entitled to exercise his right."

There may be several claimants for pre-emption in respect of the same sale, those with inferior rights to pre-empt trusting that those whose rights are superior to theirs may be unwilling or unable to pay the pre-emption price decreed.

To be in a position to enforce by suit a claim to pre-empt under the Act the claimant must, under section 17 of the Act, have given a notice within a limited time of his intention to enforce his right of pre-emption. It is obvious that a claimant to be successful need not have been at the date of the sale or at any time the heir presumptive of the vendor. The heir presumptive may not have the means to purchase, or for any reason may not be desirous to purchase, and may have omitted to give within the time limited a notice of his intention to pre-empt.

In Jang Bahadar Khan v. Karam Khan (1), which was a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption on a sale of agricultural land, the vendor had sons and brothers, who had not claimed to pre-empt, and who were admittedly nearer in succession to the vendor than the plaintiff was, the Chief Court of the Punjab (Battigan and Lal Oland, JJ.) held "that clause (a), section 12 (of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1905) is applicable to the case, though the nearer heirs have not sued for pre-emption." The Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1905, was repealed by the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, which received the assent of the Governor-General on the 1st March 1913, and in section 15 (a) of the latter Act, section 12 (a) of the former Act is re-enacted in clearer language and in conformity with the decision of the Chief Court above referred to.

It is now necessary to consider what were the facts in the suit in which this appeal has arisen and upon which it depends. The transaction which has been rightly held by each of the Courts below to have been a sale of agricultural land to which the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1905, applied, took place on the 19th January 1912 and this suit was brought on the 13th January 1913. The suit was brought within the period allowed for bringing a suit for pre-emption. It is probable that the plaintiff had delayed to bring his suit in order to see whether any person with a preferential right would bring a suit for pre-emption. The vendors of the land in question were Khair Muhammad Khan, who is a respondent to this appeal, and his nephew, Haidar Khan, who died before suit and is represented in the suit by his minor son, Manj Ali Khan, under the guardianship of the respondent, Khair Muhammad Khan. At the date of the sale the respondent Manj Ali Khan was about seven years of age. The vendors were members of an agricultural tribal family and were Bagti Bilochis. The plaintiff alleged that he was a member of that family. The vendee was not a member of that tribal family. The plaintiff, who is the appellant here, duly made his claim to pre-empt. The only other claimant to pre-empt was Musammât Izzat Khatun, who was a daughter of Piran Khan, deceased, who had been a brother of Khair Muhammad Khan and an uncle of Haidar Khan. She had made her claim to pre-empt, and she brought her suit to enforce that claim, and was joined as a defendant in this plaintiff's suit. By agreement it was arranged that the evidence recorded in either suit should be treated as evidence in the other. Evidence was recorded which strongly went to prove in the tribal family of which Musammât Izzat Khatun was a member that there was a custom by which females were excluded from inheriting so long as there was a male member living. Musammât Izzat Khatun abandoned her suit, as the Trial Judge believed, because she knew that she could not prove that she as a female was an heir entitled to inherit, and her suit was dismissed.

When Musammot Izzat Khatun's suit was dismissed, Sabz Ali, the plaintiff, became the only person claiming the right to pre-empt. His case was and is that he and the vendors were descended in the male line from one Mirza Khan, and consequently that he was a person in whom was vested by section 12 (a) of the Act a right of pre-emption in the property which had been sold on the 19th January 1912. There is no contest as between Sabz Ali Khan and others who might be nearer in point of relationship. The sole question is, whether he has proved his position of male relationship to the vendors. The learned District Judge before whom the case was tried thought that he had; but the Chief Court thought otherwise, and from their decree the present appeal proceeds.

The point thus raised is difficult for determination, because it must be remembered that the persons in relation to whom this question arises are not people among whom there are accessible records of births and death, nor with whom these events are preserved in written family memorials. It is, therefore, necessary to depend upon oral tradition, and this requires close scrutiny, but their Lordships see no reason why, in such circumstances, this tradition should be regarded as weak and unsatisfactory merely because it may in one or two respects fail to satisfy the strict conditions that would be necessary for proving a pedigree where records and documents could be used. A pedigree was in fact prepared, and it purported to show that the appellant, Sabz Ali Khan, was a descendant equally with the vendors from Mirza Khan. As to it Sabz Ali, the plaintiff, who was called as a witness for the defendants, stated: "The pedigree-table which has been filed along with the petition of plaint has been prepared by me. It was dictated to me by the (my) father. He had dictated it from his memory. We, Biloches, commit to memory the names of our ancestors . . . names of ancestors are recited on the occasions of marriages. Those names are made mention of at the time of betrothal." The first witness was one of the vendors, who said in general words that Sabz Ali Khan was a yakaddi, which means that they were both descended from one ancestor, and he specified the two sons of Mirza Khan through whom the descent took place. It is true that he interposed a generation in his own branch of the family, which found no place in the pedigree prepared by the plaintiff; but beyond that his statement of his descent agreed with the pedigree, but he did not prove the exact descent and relationship of Sabz Ali Khan. The next witness, Mehran Khan, who is also a relation of the vendor, again declared that the appellant was their agnatic relation, and he knew the name of Sabz Ali Khan's grandfather, but he appeared to know no more. Jia Khan, who was also descended from the same stock, again referred in general terms to the relationship, and gave some more specific evidence. He spoke as to two sons of Mirza Khan, and traced down the descent to the vendor, Khair Muhammad, but he also introduced a further generation beyond that shown in the pedigree. He asserted in general terms that Mirza Khan's son, Mehran Ali, was the ancestor of Sabz Ali Khan and himself. Muhammad Bakhsh gave definite evidence to the same effect, but he traced Sabz Ali Khan back to Mirza Khan in accordance with the pedigree put forward. Pir Bakhsh, who was a relation, gave detailed evidence to the same effect, and traced the appellant's descent in exact agreement with the pedigree; but he again introduced a further generation in the vendor's descent, and it is probable that the pedigree needs to be amended in this respect. The learned Judges of the Chief Court disregarded the evidence of this witness on the ground that he had stayed with an interested party, and this is doubtless a matter for consideration, but they also regarded his pedigree as incorrect, and this is only accurate so far as the omission of the one step is concerned.

Two Sardars, Sardar Bahadur Mahrab Khan and Khan Bahadur Sardar Gauhar Khan, whose authority and credibility no one has ventured to question, both said that Sabz Ali Khan belonged to their family, although they were not personally acquainted with him, and his degree of relationship was remote. This evidence satisfied the District Judge, but in the Chief Court of the Punjab the evidence was considered insufficient, because a part of it does not agree in detail, as has already been pointed out, with the pedigree-table propounded by the plaintiff.

With regard to some of the witnesses, the learned Judges of the Chief Court say that the knowledge of detail is unreliable, and they comment upon the fact that the relationship is supported by no documentary evidence at all, the relationship between the defendants and the plaintiff being, in their opinion, too visionary to support the claim. Their Lordships are much impressed with the importance of showing that claims of this character which disturb a bona fide purchaser in the quiet possession of his property should not be based on untrustworthy evidence; but it must be remembered that the Legislature has conferred these rights, and that if they are to be enjoyed by people where formal records cannot be expected to exist, reliance can only be placed upon memory and tradition, and in this case they think the evidence satisfies the necessary test. Their Lordships, therefore, think that the plaintiff has established his relationship, and that, accordingly, this appeal ought to be allowed, the decree of the Chief Court set aside with costs, and the decree of the District Court restored, with this variation, that the date when payment into Court of the sum decreed should be made shall be extended to the 1st July 1922 or to such later date as the District Judge of Dera Ghazi Khan may fix. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878), s. 30 cl. (a).— “Wholesale cash price,” meaning of—Cl. (b) of section, applicability of—“Real value,” test for determining.

The expression “wholesale cash price” in clause (a) of section 30 of the Sea Customs Act, means the price realized on the wholesale disposal of goods at the place and time of importation, and not the price paid by the importer. [p. 269, col. 1.]

The object of clause (b) of the section is to provide a test for calculating the real value of goods imported where the wholesale cash price is not ascertainable, where such price can be easily ascertained, the test for determining the real value is provided in clause (a) of the section. [p. 269, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Kajji.

Messrs. Desai, Colman and Campbell, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiffs against the Secretary of State praying (1) for a declaration that the method of valuation adopted by the Collector of Customs at Bombay in respect of the plaintiffs’ Mobil oils imported into India was perverse, wrongful, invalid, illegal and ultra vires; (2) that it might be declared that the sum of Rs. 3,391.2.0 had been perversely, wrongfully and illegally exacted from the plaintiffs by way of customs duty in respect of their said oils and contrary to the provisions of the Sea Customs Act; (3) that it might be declared that in the circumstances of this case there was no wholesale cash price ascertainable for which the plaintiffs’ Mobil oils were sold or were capable of being sold at the time and place of importation thereof within the meaning and principle of section 30 (a) of the said Sea Customs Act; (4) that it might be declared that in any event in the circumstances of the case the invoice price returned by the plaintiff in the bills of entry in respect of the plaintiffs' sail-oil was the correct basis on which to assess the customs duty on the plaintiffs' oils under the Sea Customs Act.

The suit was dismissed by Mr. Justice Kajiji.

The question in appeal is, what is the proper construction of section 3) of the Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878).

Under section 29 of the Act:—

"On the importation into, or exportation from, any custom-port of any goods; whether liable to duty or not, the owner of such goods shall, in his bill of entry or shipping bill, as the case may be, state the real value, quantity and description of such goods to the best of his knowledge and belief, and shall subscribe a declaration of the truth of such statement at the foot of such bill.

In case of doubt, the Customs Collector may require any such owner or any other person in possession of any invoice, broker's note, policy of insurance or other document, whereby the real value, quantity or description of any such goods can be ascertained, to produce the same, and to furnish any information relating to such value, quantity or description which it is in his power to furnish. And thereupon such person shall produce such document and furnish such information..."

Then under section 30:—

"For the purposes of this Act the real value shall be deemed to be—

(a) the wholesale cash price, less trade discount, for which goods of the like kind and quality are sold, or are capable of being sold, at the time and place of importation or exportation, as the case may be, without any abatement or deduction whatever, except (in the case of goods imported) of the amount of the duties payable on the importation thereof; or

(b) where such price is not ascertainable, the cost at which goods of the like kind and quality could be delivered at such place, without any abatement or deduction except as aforesaid."

No doubt, from the prayers of the plaint, it would seem that the first argument of the plaintiffs was that there was no wholesale cash price which could be ascertained under section 30 (a) of the Act; but from the evidence in the case it is perfectly clear that it would be possible to ascertain the wholesale cash price at which Mobil oil could be sold in Bombay, the place of importation, at or about the time of importation. And since the wholesale cash price could be ascertained, it seems perfectly clear that the wholesale cash price was then the real value of the goods.

But there is the second argument that the term "wholesale cash price" has another meaning, not the popular meaning; but this meaning, as far as I can gather from the arguments advanced, is the same as "the cost of the goods to the importer," on the basis that the goods should be taken as being sold to the importer at the price which it cost him to lay them down in Bombay. If that is the case, as pointed out by the learned Judge, there would be no necessity for sub clause (a) of section 30 of the Act, as in every case the importer would be entitled to have it decided that the real value of the goods imported was the cost of the importation to him.

It has been pointed out by the learned Advocate-General that it is not always possible to ascertain the wholesale cash price of goods imported, and it is, therefore, necessary in such a case that some provision should be made for ascertaining the real value; and so sub clause (b) was added in order that the real value might be ascertained where there is no wholesale cash price. In this case, as I have already pointed out, there is no difficulty whatever in ascertaining the wholesale cash price of Mobil oil sold in Bombay; and, therefore, that is the only test to be adopted for ascertaining the real value of the goods. That is the plain meaning of the section. It is difficult to my mind to see how it can have any other possible meaning, or how the words "wholesale cash price" can possibly be said, as argued by the appellants, to be the equivalent of "the cost to the importer."

The judgment of the Court below was right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ALLAH BAKHSH V. LAL KHAN.

SH. H. J.—I concur. I desire to deal briefly with the two arguments which have been urged on behalf of the appellants, viz., that under clause (a) of section 30 of the Sea Customs Act the wholesale cash price is not the price which the importer realises on a wholesale disposal of the goods by him but the price which is actually paid by him for importing the goods in Bombay. It is further urged that under clause (b), where such price is not ascertainable, the real value is the cost at which the goods of the like kind and quality could be delivered at such place, without abatement or deduction except as aforesaid, for the purposes of taxation; and that no different standard could have been intended to be adopted for the purpose of taxing the goods under clause (a). It is also urged that as a provision for taxing the subject, it must be strictly construed.

As regards this last general consideration, there can be no question. No doubt section 30 must be construed strictly, and if the words are ambiguous or admit of any doubt the construction in favour of the subject may be adopted. But having regards to the terms of section 30, both the contentions urged on their behalf must be disallowed.

As regards the contention that the wholesale cash price within the meaning of clause (a) must be the price paid by the importer and not the price realised on the wholesale disposal of the goods at the place and time of importation, I think the expression used clearly indicates that it must mean the wholesale cash price for which the goods of like kind and quality are sold, or are capable of being sold, at the time and place of importation. Those words clearly indicate that it must be the price which the importers here would be able to realise on a wholesale disposal of the goods by them to any person in Bombay. The expression could not be construed as meaning the price which they may have paid for the purpose of importing goods to Bombay.

As regards clause (b), in terms it applies where the wholesale cash price is not ascertainable. Here the wholesale cash price being ascertainable, the clause cannot apply. There is no reason to suppose that the standard adopted under clause (b) for taxation would be necessarily adopted as a standard under clause (a). It may well be, as it appears to be the case on the language of the section, that the Legislature has adopted one test for cases covered by clause (a) and is satisfied with the next best test in other cases, to which the first test cannot be applied. The argument is based on the assumption that the test in both cases must be the same, for which the language used does not afford any warrant.

Lastly, it is urged that the Legislature could not have intended to tax the profits, which the importer would make at the time and place of importation; and that the construction adopted by the lower Court involves that result. Here again the answer is that we can only decide on the language used by the Legislature and not upon such a priori considerations as the argument suggests.

I think, therefore, that the decision of the Trial Court is perfectly right.

RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Denial of landlord's title—Surrender of tenancy essential—Interlocutory order—Interference exceptional—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 25, order under, if interlocutory—Interference by High Court, if competent.

Once the relationship of landlord and tenant has been established, the tenant must surrender possession before he can set up a claim to be the real owner. [p. 270, col. 2.]

Makhan Singh v. Baisakhi Ram Shah, 50 Ind. Cas. 591; 123 P. R. 1919, followed.

It is only in very exceptional cases that the High Court should exercise its revisional powers of interference with interlocutory orders. An order under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code, is not, strictly speaking, an interlocutory order but it should be interfered with only in exceptional cases, as it is not a final order. Where, however, the order is unnecessary, it should be interfered with. [p. 270, col. 2.]

ALLAH BAKHSH v. LAL KHAN.

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 12th November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 21st July 1919.

Dr. Nand Lal and Lala Ganga Ram, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Allah Bakhsh instituted a suit against Lal Khan, alleging that Lal Khan was his tenant and had executed a rent deed in his favour on the 19th July 1916 and praying for his ejectment from the leased property. Lal Khan raised various objections, pleading that he was not a tenant, that he was a minor at the time when he executed the deed, (the execution of which he admitted), and also averred that the house occupied by him belonged to his mother who had permitted him to occupy it and that he was now the owner of the said premises as his mother had died leaving a Will in his favour. The learned Munsif who tried the case held that Lal Khan was a major when he executed the deed of rent and that he was a tenant of the plaintiff, and accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim for ejectment together with a sum of Rs. 22 as arrears of rent. Lal Khan then appealed to the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lala Ganga Ram Wadhwa, who, in a very brief order, came to the conclusion that the Court of first instance ought to have framed an issue with regard to the plea raised by Lal Khan as to his being the heir of his mother and his mother being the owner of the premises. He accordingly drew up the following issues:—

"Whether defendant was living in the house on behalf of or with the permission of Musanmat Umri and was not, therefore, liable to ejectment by plaintiff?" and remanded the case under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code. Against this order, Allah Bakhsh has preferred this petition for revision which was admitted to a hearing by Bavan-Petman, J., on the 8th January 1920. I have to day heard Mr. Nand Lal on behalf of the petitioner while Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi has addressed me on behalf of Lal Khan.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi contended that the order was really an interlocutory one which should not be interfered with in revision. In my opinion it is only in very exceptional cases indeed that this Court should exercise its revisional powers of interfering with an order of interlocutory nature, and although I am not prepared to hold that an order passed under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code, is, strictly speaking, an interlocutory order, I consider that this Court should only interfere in an order passed under that rule in exceptional cases, my reason being that an order under this rule is not a final one.

In the present instance, however, I am of opinion that the order complained of is so obviously unnecessary that it should be interfered with. The plaintiff came into Court alleging that the defendant was his tenant and as such liable to eviction and to pay arrears of rent. It is true that in the statement made by him prior to the settlement of issues, he admitted that he had made a gift of this house to his wife by way of dower, but at the same time he alleged that his wife had executed a Will in his favour. Lal Khan, defendant, is the son of that wife by a former husband. The lady being dead, in the event of no Will being proved, both plaintiff and defendant would take a share of the property left by her. Further, it has been definitely held that the defendant is the tenant of the plaintiff and that he has executed a rent-deed evidencing the tenancy. In Makhan Singh v. Baisakhi Ram Shah (1) it was held that a tenant in possession cannot, even after the expiration of his lease, deny his landlord's title without actually and openly surrendering possession to him. The issue framed, therefore, does not really arise in this case. Once the relationship of landlord and tenant has been established, the tenant must surrender possession before he can set up a claim to be the real owner.

I, therefore, accept this petition for revision and, setting aside the order of the 12th November 1919, direct that the appeal be heard on the merits.

Costs in this Court will follow the event.

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Decree in previous ejectment suit in favour of tenant in spite of adverse finding as to nature of tenancy—Adverse finding, if res judicata.

In a suit for ejectment by a landlord the tenant pleaded want of notice to quit and that he was a permanent tenant: the suit was dismissed on the ground of absence of notice but the Court recorded a finding that the defendant had failed to prove that he had a permanent tenancy. The decree being in favour of the defendant, he could not appeal from the adverse finding:

Held, that under the circumstances the decree could not operate as res judicata on the question whether the defendant had a permanent tenancy or not [p. 271, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 1st of September 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court at that place, dated the 31st of July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Appellant.—A previous suit for ejectment was dismissed on the ground of non-service of notice. It was also decided that I was not a permanent tenant. The decision on the question of my status cannot operate as res judicata. Refers to Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (1).

[PEARSON, J.—Do you contend that the question of permanency or non-permanency was unnecessary for the purpose of that decision?]

It was unnecessary.

[PEARSON, J.—It could not be unnecessary because if you were a permanent tenant, the question of notice would not arise.]

The decree in the previous suit in spite of the adverse finding against me on the question of my status, was in my favour. So that I could not have appealed against that decree and rectify the adverse finding. See Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (2), Nundo Lall Bhattacharjee v. Bidhoo Mookhy Debee (3) and Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (1).

Babu Chundra Sekhar Sen, for the Respondent.—It cannot be argued that the decision in the previous suit on the question of the status of the defendant was unnecessary. If the findings as to the permanency or otherwise of the defendant's tenancy was essential for the purpose of that decision, it ought to operate as res judicata. See Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia (4) and Peary Mohun Mukerjee v. Ambica Churn Bandopadhyaya (5). Refers also to Fazil v. Hari Kishore Chakravarti (6).

Babu Narendra Kumar Das replied.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the Courts below were wrong in holding that the decision in the previous suit operated as res judicata upon the question whether the defendant had a permanent tenancy or not.

In the previous suit for ejectment the defendant pleaded that he was a permanent tenant and that the suit must fail as no notice to quit was served upon him.

The Court in that suit held that the suit must fail for want of notice to quit. It also came to the finding that the defendant had failed to prove that he had a permanent tenancy. The decree was one of dismissal and was in favour of the defendant in spite of the adverse finding against him with regard to the question of his status. The defendant, therefore, could not appeal against that finding.

In these circumstances, the decree could not operate as res judicata on the question whether the defendant had a permanent tenancy or not [see the cases of Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (2), Nundo Lall Bhattacharjee v. Bidhoo Mookhy Debee (3), Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (1) and Parbaty Debya v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (7).]

This is not a case where the decision is based on two grounds either of which is sufficient to support the decree, in which case the question would arise whether the decision upon each of the grounds is conclusive between the parties [see Ferry Mohun Mukerjee v. Ambica Churn Bandopadhyaya (5)].

It appears that the Court of first instance, before the trial came on, recorded an order that the judgment and decree in the suit were binding upon the parties and that it would consider only the question of notice and compensation. That being so, the question as to the nature of the defendant's tenancy must be decided on the merits.

The question of service of notice and compensation has been gone into. All other questions in the suit including the question as to the sufficiency of the notice will be decided by the Court. It will be open to both parties to adduce further evidence in the case. The case will accordingly be sent back to the Court of first instance to be dealt with in accordance with the observations made above.

In 1880 a Will was made in favour of a daughter. In 1881 it was contested by the testator's brother and upheld by the Trial Court as valid with the further finding that the daughter would not be competent to alienate the property. On appeal by the daughter the lower Appellate Court held that she had full powers of alienation. No appeal was preferred against this decision. The daughter gave away the property and on her death her father's collaterals sued for its possession. The Will in her favour was not forthcoming.

Held, that the decision in the previous suit, although it did not operate as res judicata, was an important piece of evidence, that in the circumstances the validity of the Will could not be questioned and that the daughter took an absolute estate. [p. 272, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 25th January 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Jhelum, dated the 22nd November 1915.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Elsem, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land and house in suit belonged to Wali, who made a Will bequeathing them to his daughter Bhagbhari. The latter in 1880 made a Will leaving the property to the defendants, her sister's son and son-in-law. Bhagbhari has died, and the plaintiffs, who are collaterals of Wali, sue for possession of the property, contending that it reverts to them and that Bhagbhari had no power to make a Will in favour of the defendants.

Wali's son Ghazan was murdered by the first plaintiff Nur Khan and by Ghulam Muhammad, father of the other two plaintiffs, and Nur Khan and Ghulam Muhammad were convicted of the murder and sentenced to transportation for life in 1872. The defendants contend that by reason of that murder the plaintiffs have no right of succession to Wali's property, and they also contend that Bhagbhari was absolute owner of the property under her father's Will and was competent to alienate it.

The Courts below have concurred in overruling these contentions and in giving the plaintiffs a decree. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

The Will executed by Wali is not forthcoming. Its validity was contested in a suit brought in the Tahsildar's Court by Wali's brother Fatta, and the Will may have been filed with the record of that suit. The Tahsildar dismissed the suit on the 2nd August 1881, holding that the Will was valid, but he also gave a finding that Bhagbhari would not be competent to alienate the property, and Bhagbhari in consequence appealed to the Judicial Assistant, Mr. DeCoursey. The learned District Judge thinks that the Appellate Court in that case decided that the question of Bhagbhari's power to alienate the property should be left open, but his view on this point is clearly not correct, as Mr. DeCoursey's judgment of the 11th November 1881 shows that he expressly decided that Bhagbhari was at liberty to alienate the property in any way she pleased, and that he modified the order of the Tahsildar accordingly.

It is contended for the respondents that Mr. DeCourcy's finding in regard to Bhagbhari's power of alienation was an unnecessary finding and should be ignored, but we cannot agree with this contention. The question whether Bhagbhari was competent to alienate the property may not have been in issue in the trial in 1881, but when the Tahsildar had given a finding on the point against Bhagbhari and Bhagbhari appealed it was necessary for the Appellate Court to determine whether the finding should stand. That Court might have been content to expunge the finding and leave the matter of Bhagbhari's power of alienation open, but instead of doing so it decided the point and held that Bhagbhari had full powers of alienation. That judgment, though it does not operate under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code as a bar to the trial of the issue, is certainly an important piece of evidence in the appellants' favour. It seems probable that Mr. DeCourcy had Wali's Will before him when he gave the judgment, and that he came to his decision as to Bhagbhari's power of alienation after a consideration of the terms of the Will and it is an important fact that Fatta, the plaintiff in the case, appears to have accepted the decision and did not appeal to this Court.

In the circumstances, it is reasonable to hold that under Wali's Will, the validity of which is not now questioned, Bhagbhari took an absolute estate. We hold that she was competent to bequeath the property to the defendants, and consequently the plaintiff's suit fails. It becomes unnecessary to determine the further question whether the fact of Wali's son having been murdered by one of the plaintiffs and by the father of the other two would deprive the plaintiffs of their right of succession.

We accept the appeal, reverse the decrees of the Courts below, and dismiss the suit. The respondents will pay the appellants' costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, application of—Mortgage suit—Preliminary instalment decree by consent of parties—Decree ordering foreclosure on default—Final decree, whether to be obtained before proceeding to execution—Time for payment, enlargement of.

When a preliminary decree for payment by instalments, whether extending over more than six months or not, is passed by consent in a mortgage suit ordering foreclosure on default, the plaintiff is not only entitled but is bound to apply for a final decree before proceeding to execution and a Court has the same powers in regard to enlarging a time for payment allowed by such a decree as it has with any other mortgage-decree. [p. 275, col. 2.]

The mere fact that a preliminary decree in a mortgage-suit makes the sum due payable by instalments and not in a lump sum, to be paid on a specified day, does not take it out of the provisions of O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code, [p. 275, col. 2.]

Revision against the judgment and decree of the Senior Munsif, Nagpur, dated the 5th April 1921, in Civil Suit No. 159 of 1917.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicants,

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Non-Applicants,

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the power of the Court to grant an enlargement of the time allowed by the decree in a mortgage suit ordering foreclosure in default of payment by instalments on specified dates. The decree was passed on the 10th of January 1919 and its terms are in accordance with an agreement at which the parties arrived. It is drawn up on the printed form provided for ordinary decrees and not on No. 3 of the forms prescribed in Appendix I of the First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, and sets out, "in terms of the compromise made by the parties," that the defendants owe the plaintiffs Rs. 900 on the mortgage, which they are to pay in six annual instalments of Rs. 150 each, the first being payable on the 19th of December 1919, and "that in case of any two defaults the whole balance then due will be recoverable at once and that in case the amount of decree or any part thereof is not paid by the said defendants as agreed the mortgaged property as described in the reverse shall be foreclosed for that unpaid amount and at once put in possession of plaintiffs." It may be noted that this is scarcely consistent. The first part of the passage quoted clearly contemplates foreclosure only on the occurrence of two defaults but the second part just as clearly allows it on the occurrence of one. The last eight of the words quoted from the decree are added in the handwriting of the Munsif who passed it, and this indicates that in the agreement between the parties there was a clause, embodied in the decree, that it should become final automatically without the intervention of the Court.

(2) The defendants made no payments at all, and on the 7th of May 1922 the plaintiffs applied for a final decree. What they did apply for, according to the terms of their written petition, is another preliminary decree for the payment of Rs. 900 in a lump sum and foreclosure in default of such payment. The last paragraph runs as follows: "The plaintiffs, therefore, pray that a final decree for Rs. 100 may be passed against the first, third, and fourth defendants according to the terms of the compromise decree and that in default of payment of that amount the mortgaged property may be foreclosed and possession given to the plaintiffs." We need not, however, trouble about the inartistic wording of the petition, which was clearly meant to be an application for a final decree for foreclosure on account of the default that had already occurred. Two days after this application was made the defendants put in a written petition setting out the reasons for their two defaults, stating they had tendered Rs. 300 to the plaintiffs who had refused it and that they were still prepared to pay that amount, and asking for an enlargement of time, under any conditions as to interest that might be proper, for the payment of the balance. I may say at once that the whole amount of Rs. 900 has now been deposited in Court and that the parties have agreed that if the Court has the power to grant an enlargement of time in this case it shall be granted, and in that event the amount of interest payable to the plaintiffs is Rs. 85 8-0.

(3) The plaintiffs refused the tender of Rs. 300 and opposed the application for an extension of time on the ground that the proviso (which word is mistakenly recorded by the learned Munsif as "provisions"; of rule 3 of Order XXXIV cannot be applied to the present decree, for the three reasons that it is a compromise decree, that it fixes no date for payment, and that "the parties have made their own stipulation regarding payment and consequences of default and (the) Court cannot exercise its discretion in enlarging time." The first and the last of these pleas seem to have no substance. Some decrees passed by consent in mortgage suits may be put outside the contemplation of Order XXXIV, by matters which can only appear in decrees so passed, but the mere fact of their being consent decrees has nothing to do with this result. The third reason amounts to a plea that the parties to a preliminary decree on a mortgage, passed and framed strictly in accordance with the provisions of Order XXXIV, can by agreement deprive the Court of its statutory discretion to enlarge the time allowed by that decree for payment. Such an agreement by the defendant might certainly influence the Court in the direction of refusing an extension of time, but it cannot stop the defendant from asking for it or prevent the Court from granting it. The agreement that foreclosure should immediately follow default, even regarded as the parties' "own stipulation regarding payment and consequences of default" incidentally included in a decree but not really forming part of it, would still be a stipulation by way of a penalty, and it would be within the discretion of the Court under section 74 of the Contract Act not to enforce it completely.

(4) The plea that the decree was not made in strict accordance with rule 2 of Order XXXIV, in that it does not fix a date for payment, and, therefore, cannot be governed by rule 3 of the same Order is based upon the rulings of the Calcutta High Court in Bechu Singh v. Eichharam Sahu (1) and Biswa Nath Prosad Mahata v. Bhagwandin Pandey (2). In both cases the judgment was delivered by Mr. Justice Mookerjee, Carnduff, J., sitting with him in the first case and Casperz, J., in the second, and it was held that a decree similar to that with which we are concerned here "was not made in strict accordance with section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act," which was in force at the time, and, therefore, the Court could not pass an order absolute in the case under section 89, but the Court had the inherent power mentioned in section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, apart from the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, to pass an order absolute on such a decree, and if the plaintiff applied for one he ought to get it. It was not held that the plaintiff was bound to apply for such an order or could not execute his decree without it, treating it as having become final automatically, and in the second case it appears to have been held that the defendant could waive his right to an order absolute before execution could be taken out.

(5) The position taken up by the plaintiffs in reliance on these rulings is this. They were not bound to apply for a final decree, because the decree they hold is not strictly in accordance with Order XXXIV and is, therefore, not governed by it; they could have treated it as becoming final automatically, like any other decree other than a decree on a mortgage of which the condition has been broken, and have proceeded to execute it; they were, however, entitled, not under Order XXXIV but under the principle enunciated in section 151, to get a final decree if they chose to apply for it pro majore cautela, but the defendants are not entitled under the same or any other principle to an extension of time. The position is hardly logical or consistent. If it is "necessary for the ends of justice" that the first part of rule 3 of Order XXXIV should be applied, though the rule does not govern the case, how can it be denied in the same breath that the latter part of the same rule ought to be applied for the same reason? The plaintiff cannot "have it both ways." Further, if the plaintiffs could, if they chose, execute their decree as it stands, how can it be necessary for the ends of justice or for any ends to go through the empty formality of giving them a final decree? If their present decree is outside the terms of Order XXXIV, section 151 can be called in aid to bring it within those terms either for all purposes or for none.

(6) I find myself, however, with the greatest respect, unable to accept the view stated in the judgment quoted, that such a decree as the one under consideration here is not strictly in accordance with the sections of the Transfer of Property Act or the corresponding rules of Order XXXIV which prescribe the form of the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit. The reason stated for holding that it is not is, that it lacks two of the essential characteristics of a decree so prescribed. The first is, that the entire sum due is made payable on a day specified and a decree for instalments is not contemplated by the Transfer of Property Act (or Order XXXIV), and the second that it makes the entire amount payable in a lump, the mortgagee being entitled to refuse part payment. But under both the Transfer of Property Act and Order XXXIV the amount has to be paid on or before a specified day, not on it, and every instalment decree fixes a day, that of the last instalment, on or before which the entire sum due must be paid, and an order that parts of the entire sum shall be paid on or before earlier dates only benefits the mortgagee and certainly does not interfere with his right to refuse acceptance of anything less than the entire sum on the last day fixed.

(7) It was admitted in argument here that these objections could not be raised against a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit which ordered payment of the whole amount due in six equal monthly instalments, the first exactly one month after the date of the decree, and further ordered that the whole amount should become payable at once on default in respect of any two instalments. The essential difference between an ordinary mortgage decree and one passed by consent of parties which orders payment by instalments is, therefore, not the instalments, and the only point in which most, if not all, of the decrees of the sort we are considering do not conform to the description of a preliminary decree given in Order XXXIV is that the period allowed for payment is more than six months; it seems to me, however, beyond question that the words "except with the consent of the plaintiff" can always be understood as following those which limit the period to be allowed by the Court to six months. I hold that, when a preliminary decree for payment by instalments, whether extending over more than six months or not is passed by consent in a mortgage suit, the plaintiff is not only entitled but is bound to apply for a final decree before proceeding to execution, and that the Court has the same powers in regard to enlarging the time for payment allowed by such a decree as it has with any other mortgage decree. The application for revision is rejected and the applicants must pay all the costs incurred by the other party in both Courts. The Pleader's fee will be Rs. 32.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 11th February 1920, varying that of the Munsif Second Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st December 1919.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellant.

Sayed Mohin Shah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 17th of April 1918 one Bulanda sold 1 kanal 10 marlas of land to Biru for Rs. 600. Bulanda's reversioners brought the usual suit for a declaration that this sale being without consideration and necessity would not affect their reversionary rights. The Trial Court found that the property was ancestral but that consideration had passed and necessity had been proved. The plaintiffs' suit was accordingly dismissed. They appealed to the learned District Judge who found that consideration had passed and that necessity had been established for Rs. 472-12-0 out of Rs. 600, the purchase money. Rs. 11-4-0 of the balance represented the costs of conveyance and registration charges and the remaining balance was Rs. 116 regarding which it was found that necessity had not been proved. The learned District Judge, therefore, accepted the appeal and granted the appellants a declaration as prayed but added that if they succeeded by inheritance to Bulanda they would take possession only on payment to the vendee, i. e., Biru, of the sum of Rs. 484. Against this decree Biru has preferred this second appeal to this Court through Sheikh Niaz Muhammad and I have heard Mr. Mohsin Shah for the respondents.

I am, of course, bound by the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. According to these, necessity has been established for Rs. 472-12-0. The sale, therefore, of this land has been found to be justified. In addition to the Rs. 472-12-0, Rs. 11-4-0 are also a legitimate charge. With regard to the balance this sum of Rs. 116 is made up of three items of

1. Rs. 50 said to have been due on a bond to Nur Din;

2. Rs. 35 said to have been due on a bond to Biru, appellant, and

3. Rs. 31 taken before the Sub Registrar for household expenses.

As said above, I am bound by the finding that for these three items necessity had not been established. It is not, however, necessary in every case, where a purchaser of land has been unable to prove necessity for the whole of the price paid, that a sale should be converted into a mortgage at the instance of the vendor's reversioners. In the present case the reversioners do not allege that the vendor, Bulanda, was addicted to vices living or was in any way extravagant. His entire holding consisted of 13 kanals of land. Some of this land was mortgaged to the extent of about Rs. 450. By a sale of 1 kanal 10 marlas of his holding he had freed himself from debt. The sale, therefore, is, prima facie, advantageous to him and might, I think, be regarded as an act of good management. In any case, when the amount of the consideration, for a sale of this kind, which is found to be without necessity represents only a small portion of the entire consideration, it seems to me that it is not necessary to convert such a sale into a mortgage. Rs. 116 is, roughly, one-sixth of the entire price paid. Of this Rs. 116, Rs. 63 were taken for household expenses. If, when Bulanda was selling this small plot of land he was able to secure a small sum in cash, it cannot, I think, be said that he was committing any wrongful act by so doing. In this view I am supported by Wadhawa Mal v. Wadhawa (1). In the case reported as Ali Gauhar v. Mahanda (2), Rs. 210 out of Rs. 1,200 were found to have been without necessity yet the sale was allowed to stand. Similar cases are those reported as Ram Karan v. Hukman (3) and Badri Mal v. Gopal (4).

Mr. Mohsin Shah referred to Kesar v. Sundar Singh (5), in which, although Rs. 156 out of Rs. 950 had been found to be without necessity the sale was not upheld. That case was considered in Ali Gauhar v. Mahanda (2) and is not on all fours with the present one. There a considerable fraction of the whole consideration was found to have been previously inserted to keep off pre-emptors and formed no part of the price actually paid; and the sum of Rs. 156 referred to above was held never to have passed at all. As only one-sixth of the price has not been proved to be for necessity, I think in the present case the sale should have been allowed to stand. Tara Chand v. Kanshi Ram (6) is also a case in point and assists the appellant.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the decrees of the lower Appellate Court, dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Rule against an order of the Munsif, Siliguri.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Petitioner.—It is surprising that the learned Judge has declined to award costs incurred as travelling expenses for my client's witnesses. Though the witnesses were summoned by my client to depose in support of his case, the other side must pay all expenses as my client has won the case. All costs are payable to my client by the other side. The learned Judge cannot make a distinction in the matter of travelling expenses incurred by the witnesses whom my client summoned, the Judge could not have disallowed the travelling expenses. It is needless for me to quote chapter and verse to support my contention as the injustice is quite palpable to your Lordship. Your Lordship can, if necessary, look into High Court records.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this Rule it appears from the materials before me that the Judge has clearly acted under a misapprehension in disallowing the travelling expenses of the witnesses. He states that it is the

But, clearly, if he is successful, he is entitled as against the unsuccessful party against whom costs are awarded to recover all proper expenses, including travelling expenses, incurred by summons of the witnesses and paid in the first instance by the successful party.

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of an order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 28th October 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jagraon, dated the 11th June 1919.

Mr. Badri Nath Kapur, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-respondents instituted a suit for possession by partition of a half share in a house which they said belonged to them and Ganda Ram defendant, Ganda Ram being the owner of the other half. In the earlier stages of the proceedings Ganda Ram offered to let the plaintiffs-respondents take his half share in the house on payment of Rs. 575. To this the plaintiffs-respondents agreed, but, for some reason or other, this arrangement was not carried through at the time and on the 4th April 1919 a preliminary decree was passed directing partition of the house and declaring that the plaintiffs-respondents were entitled to one moiety. A Local Commissioner was appointed to carry out the partition who reported that the value of the entire house was Rs. 1,208 and that the house was of such a nature as to render it practically impossible to partition it. On the 11th June 1919 the learned Munsif passed an order to the effect that the plaintiffs could choose whether they would take the lower storey of the house for themselves and pay Rs. 200 to Ganda Ram, or would allow Ganda Ram to take the lower story and be paid Rs. 200 by him. Against this order the plaintiffs-respondents referred an appeal to the District Judge who accepted the appeal and directed that instead of the house being partitioned it should be decided which party should retain the house on payment of the value of the other's half share, the decision being arrived at, if necessary, by drawing lots. The stamp on the appeal to the District Judge was refunded and the case remanded to the learned Munsif. Against this decision Ganda Ram preferred an appeal to this Court on the 17th of January 1920. While this appeal was pending here the learned Munsif on the 6th of March 1920 proceeded to pass a final decree.

Mr. Sethi for the plaintiffs-respondents raised two objections; first, he contended that inasmuch as the order of the learned Munsif dated the 11th June 1919 was an interlocutory one, no appeal lay to the District Judge and that, therefore, no second appeal lay to this Court, and reference was made to Order XLIII, rule 1 (a), Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Kapur for the appellant was constrained to admit the correctness of this contention and urged that this appeal should be treated as a revision. Having regard to Jogodishury Detea v. Kailash Chandra Lahiry (1) it seems to me that the order of the 11th of June 1919 was an interlocutory one and that no appeal lay to the District Judge. In these circumstances, no second appeal is competent and I hold accordingly.

Next, Mr. Sethi contended that I should not interfere on the revision side. He pointed out that the defendant himself had offered to allow the plaintiffs to take the whole house on payment of Rs. 575 and that the final decree, which has been passed, gives plaintiffs the possession of the whole house on payment of Rs. 644. He also contended that inasmuch as there was now in existence a final decree which had not been appealed against and which was, therefore, absolutely final, it would only be equitable to interfere with the decision if there had been a miscarriage of justice. My attention was drawn to Mackenzie v. Narsing Sahai (2), Kuria Mal v. Esham-bhar Das (3) and Khirdamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4). In the first two cases in suits for partition the preliminary decree and the final decree had been passed and one of the parties preferred an appeal attacking the preliminary decree only, and it was held that such an appeal was futile. In Khirdamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that after a final decree had been made, whether or not an appeal had been preferred against the preliminary decree, it was the duty of the party aggrieved by the final decree to prefer an appeal against the final decree and an appeal, therefore, against the preliminary decree, after the passing but before the signing of the final decree and without challenging by appeal the final decree, was useless and could not be entertained. These authorities appear to be in point and I do not feel pressed by Ghulam Jilani v. Ghulam Haidar Khan (5) which to my mind does not apply to the point before me.

As an appeal I must dismiss the appeal filed by Ganda Ram defendant and treating it as a revision, it has to be seen whether there are any grounds for interference. It may be conceded at once that inasmuch as the District Judge entertained an appeal from an interlocutory order, he exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law and, therefore, his order is bad. It was, however, held in Hansa v. Ran Singh (6) by a Full Bench of the Chief Court that this Court was not bound to interfere on the revision side even when there is a defect of jurisdiction unless failure of justice has directly resulted from such a defect. Having regard to the fact that the final decree now passed in the suit practically gives effect to what Ganda Ram was prepared to accept in the earlier stages of the proceedings and gives him a somewhat larger sum than what he originally agreed to take, I find it difficult to hold that there has been a failure of justice and in the circumstances, therefore, I must dismiss this revision, leaving, however, parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878), ss. 6, 7—Excise Department, appointment of subordinate officers to—Appointment whether at will and pleasure of Government—Dismissal, power of, restricted.

The appointment of a subordinate officer to the Bombay Excise Department is made under section 6 of the Bombay Abkari Act by the Commissioner of Excise under delegated powers from the Government, and section 7 of the Act places a restriction on the power of the Commissioner to dismiss such an officer. Consequently an officer appointed by the Commissioner does not hold office at the will and pleasure of the Government, and before he can be dismissed the provisions of section 7 must be strictly complied with [p. 281, col. 1]

Original suit.

Mr. Taraporewalla (with him Mr. Setalvad, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Desai (with him Mr. Bahadurji, Acting Advocate-General), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff has filed this suit to recover Rs. 50,000 as damages for his wrongful dismissal from service.

It appears that the plaintiff was employed as an Acting Inspector in the Excise Department on a salary of Rs 125 a month and by an order dated the 13th September 1917 he was dismissed from service by Mr. Arthur, Commissioner of Customs, Salt, Opium and Abkari, Bombay.

Two preliminary issues have been raised in the suit: (1) whether the plaintiff held his appointment at the will and pleasure of the Crown, and (2) if so, whether the plaint discloses any cause of action?

From the cases cited at page 213 in the case of Jehangir v. Secretary of State (1) Mr. Justice Tyabji stated that in all those cases it was laid down that you cannot limit the power of the Crown to dismiss its officers at pleasure. It is conceded by Mr. Taraporewalla for the plaintiff that if the term of employment of the plaintiff was at will and pleasure of the Crown then the Crown is entitled to dismiss the plaintiff without assigning any reason at all. But Mr. Justice Tyabji has qualified the above proposition to this extent that the power of the Crown to dismiss its public officers is necessarily limited by any statutory provision that may have been enacted for the benefit of such public servants, and it may not have application to such of the servants of Government as are not charged with functions etc. Mr. Taraporewalla has argued that the plaintiff was employed under section 6 of Act V of 1878 and section 6 enacts that:—

"To aid the Collectors in carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Commissioners may, subject to such orders as may from time to time be passed by Government in this behalf, appoint such subordinate officers with such designations, and assign to them respectively such powers and duties under this Act, as they deem fit."

Mr. Taraporewalla has urged that the appointments of subordinate officers in the Excise Department are regulated by section 6 of the Act and that power has been delegated by the Government to the Commissioner and the Commissioner is the only person who can make the appointments subject to the order limiting the number of subordinate officers who have to be appointed for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of Act V of 1878. The appointment is not made by Government direct. From the record that has been shown to me I find that these appointments in the Excise Department are made under the signature of the Commissioner and I have no doubt in my mind that these appointments of officers in the Excise Department and of the plaintiff was made under section 6 of Act V of 1878. Then section 7 provides in what cases, under what circumstances, and after what enquiry, can any such officer be dismissed. Section 7 provides:—

"...The Commissioners may at any time after inquiry recorded in writing fine, dismiss, suspend or reduce any subordinate officer appointed, or any officer on whom any additional powers or duties have been conferred or imposed by them under the provisions of the last preceding section, for any breach of departmental rules or discipline, or for carelessness, unfitness, neglect of duty or other misconduct."

(1) 27 B. 189 at p. 213; 5 Bom. L. R. 80,

HAR CHAND SINGH V. NARAIN SINGH.

Mr. Taraporewalla has urged that having regard to the provision of section 7 of Act V of 1878, the Government's powers of dismissal or one of its officers in the Excise Department have been fettered and restricted by Statute and if that is so the rule laid down in the case of Gould v. Stuart (2) must apply.

The Advocate-General on behalf of the Government has urged that section 7 only restricts the power of the Commissioner and does not restrict the power of the Government. But where Government has delegated the power of appointment to other officers and if that power is restricted as to dismissal then it has to be considered whether the Legislature has restricted the power of dismissal or not. In my opinion section 7 does restrict the power of the Commissioner for dismissal and, therefore, the employment of the plaintiff ceases to be at the pleasure and will of Government and the provisions of section 7 of the Act must be strictly complied with before such officer can be dismissed. The case of Gould v. Stuart (2) is a case in point.

Mr. Bahadurji says that the dismissal has to be confirmed by the Government. That, however, does not affect the merits of this case. The first order has to be passed by the Commissioner and it may be that a formal sanction or confirmation has to be obtained it is a mere formality that has to be gone into.

In my opinion, the Legislature by Statute has restricted the power of dismissal under section 7 of Act V of 1878 and that provision under section 7 of the Act is made for the protection of officers employed in the Excise Department.

Therefore, the preliminary issues, (1), (2) will be answered in the negative, (2) in the affirmative and (3) is not necessary. Costs costs in the cause.

Where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for possession on the basis of the mortgage, a subsequent suit for possession by him or his legal representatives is not maintainable unless it is shown that possession was taken under the decree and that there was a subsequent dispossession. The reason is that two suits on the same cause of action will not lie. [p. 287, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of a District Judge, Karnal, dated the 13th March 1916 affirming that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, dated the 30th January 1915.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dosi Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought this suit for possession of the land mortgaged alleging that it had been mortgaged to the husband of one Musammat Nandi on the 7th July 1888, that Musammat Nandi had obtained a decree for possession on the 31st January 1900, that execution had been allowed by order of the 21st November 1903 and that Musammat Nandi had consequently sold her rights to one Kapur Chand who in turn sold them to the present plaintiffs.

When, however, the plaintiffs claimed mutation on the 16th April 1918 the representatives of the mortgagors objected alleging that they had paid off the mortgage as long ago as 1901.

The First Court framed an issue as to whether the suit was time-barred but gave no finding upon it.

It found that the payment of Rs. 975 principal and interest on the mortgage was not proved and also that Kapur Chand had taken possession of the land and it gave a decree for possession of the land in suit.

ANNAJI V. FAKIRA.

This decree was confirmed in the lower Appellate Court on the ground that there was no proof of the payment of the mortgage-money.

In appeal it is claimed that the suit is barred because Nandi had obtained a decree for possession which was never executed and that, therefore, a second suit was not maintainable.

It is also urged and it is true that the lower Courts have overlooked that the payment of Rs. 975 of the mortgage-money has been admitted by Musammal Nandi and was accepted as a fact in Mr. Martineau's judgment of the 21st November 1903. The real point is that Musammal Nandi having once obtained a decree for possession on the basis of the mortgage no further suit could be maintained unless it could be shown that possession had been taken under her decree and the judgment-creditor had been subsequently dispossessed.

No doubt it has been alleged that Kapur Chand obtained possession but it has not been alleged that he was since dispossessed and unless he was, a suit for possession on the same cause of action does not lie.

Indeed, as no suggestion can be made even now as to how he came to be dispossessed the allegation that he got possession can hardly be correct.

We think the respondents were unwise not to accept the offer made to them before us that any amount found due on the footing of the mortgage would be paid provided that the payment of the sum of Rs. 975 was admitted.

The whole trouble is really due to the fact that in the first instance the amount of the debt was not obtained.

The suit is not maintainable; we must accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 5 (2), 8 (4), O. IX, r. 13, O. XVII, r. 3—Application for final decree—Notice to defendant whether necessary—Discretion of Court—Enlargement of time.

Under the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, the proceedings in a mortgage suit between the preliminary and the final decree are a part of the trial of the suit itself, which does not end till the final decree is passed. [p. 284, col. 1.]

When plaintiff in a mortgage suit makes an application under Order XXXIV, rule 5 (2) or 8 (4), Civil Procedure Code, for a final decree, it is not legally necessary that notice of the application should be served on the defendant or even issued to him before the final decree is passed, and although it is just and proper to give notice to the defendant, yet the passing of a final decree without notice to the defendant is not an illegality or even an irregularity which would affect the decree in any way, nor is the Court bound by Order IX, rule 13, to set aside such a decree though it may do so if it considers that the absence of notice constitutes "sufficient cause" for the absence of the defendant within the meaning of that rule in that particular case. [p. 284, col. 2 p. 285, col. 1.]

Under rule 3, Order XVII, of the Civil Procedure Code it is discretionary with the Court to pass a final decree in a mortgage suit when the defendant fails to comply with the terms of the preliminary decree, but by Order XXXIV, rules 3 (2) and 5 (2), this discretion is taken away when the plaintiff applies for a final decree which the Court is bound to pass unless the defendant appears and shows good cause for an enlargement of time. 19-4-1917—Certain defendants unserved.

21-6-1917—Defendant Bhagwan present. All others duly served, including Balaji, guardian for the suit of minors Annaji and Shankar, who had refused to accept notice.

2-8-1917—Assignment proved. Bhagwan present. Remaining defendants absent.

20-8-1917—Assignees of preliminary decree applied for final decree. Notices ordered on all defendants.

13-9-1917, 18-10-1917, 22-11-1917—Hearing adjourned on account of failure to serve various defendants.

3-1-1918—All defendants served. Balaji absent. Mr. Pande Pleader for Bhayaji, Annaji and Shankar. Following order passed. "Mr. Pande.....asks for extension on the ground that his application for sanction to sell sir was dismissed by the Financial Commissioner. The order of Financial Commissioner was passed in May 1917. The application for review was dismissed in September 1917. Since then the judgment-debtors took no steps to satisfy the decree. By taking time they want to enjoy the crops sown in the fields. The judgment-debtors are not entitled to an adjournment. As, however, they paid Rs. 1,000, and as the sum carries interest I give them one opportunity. Case for 28-2-1918."

28-2-1918—All defendants by Mr. Kelkar. Application for extension on the allegation that a purchaser for the village had been found. Following order passed, "I grant time subject to payment of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem from 27-10-1915 till satisfaction. This amount shall be till 2-5-1918."

10-8-1920—Case remanded by Court of Judicial Commissioner for further consideration of an order in execution as to partition of a two ninths share in the property that was declared not subject to the mortgage. (Balaji and Bhayaji having obtained this order of remand did nothing further. Possession of the remainder had been taken before the order in execution, which was passed on 14-5-1919).

15-3-1920—Application by Annaji and Shankar (present appellants) for setting aside the ex parte final decree of 2-5-1918 on the grounds that they had not been duly served with notice of the application for a final decree.

26-4-1920—Applicants absent. Decree-holders present. Records of original case not received. Adjourned to 10-5-1920 (instead of dismissal in default).

10-5-1920, 28-6-1920, 19-7-1920—Adjourned because of failures to serve non-applicant judgment-debtors (all joint with applicants).

16-8-1920—"Parties absent. Dismissed for default."

19-8-1920—Application made for restoration of application to set aside ex parte decree dismissed on 16-8-1920 to file.

22-8-1920—Application restored on proof by affidavit of good cause for absence.

10-1-1921—(after four hearings for pleadings and evidence) applicants made an offer of payment on terms. Decree-holders' Pleader asked for time to consult them.

21-2-1921, 25-4-1921—Abortive hearings on account of failure of witnesses to appear, (decree holders having apparently refused terms suggested).

30-6-1921—Evidence completed and case close for orders.

15-9-1921—Order passed refusing to set aside ex parte final decree.

13-12-1921—This appeal filed (89 days later, of which 8 were copying time).

22-2-1922—Counsel for applicants heard, but not ready with any proposal or suggestion of payment.

All this makes it perfectly clear that if for any of the technical reasons put forward the lower Court had been bound to set aside the ex parte decree, it would have been bound to pass another one, not ex parte, immediately. No reason that could possibly be urged, not even a tender of the whole amount due, would justify the Court in extending the time up to that date unless the decree-holders agreed. That the appellants had no intention of making any such tender is apparent from the way in which they have managed to evade a final decree for seven years, having paid no more than Rs. 1,000 in all that time, and still more from the fact that they came to this Court in appeal without any idea of making even a proposal for payment, reasonable or unreasonable, or of the grounds on which they would ask for a retrospective enlargement of time if their appeal should succeed; indeed, it seems clear that they have never realised that there is any necessity to give grounds for a retrospective extension of the time allowed for payment. But, technically, they cannot succeed even to the extent of getting the ex parte decree reopened, only to be closed again immediately.

Notice of the application to pass a final decree was duly served on Shankar's properly appointed guardian for the suit Balaji and, whatever he might be able to do in a suit to set aside the decree on the ground of gross negligence or fraud in Balaji, he certainly cannot get the ex parte decree set aside on the sole ground that he was not served with notice of the application for the decree in proceedings under Order IX of the Procedure Code. Still less can he do so nearly two years after the decree was passed and ten months after everybody concerned who did not know all about it before had received full notice of it by the decree-holders being put in possession of the property. As for Annaji, I am by no means sure that fresh notice of a suit has to be given to a minor defendant on his attaining majority, but even if that is assumed, it is established by the entry in the Order sheet that Annaji knew of this decree on the 2nd of May 1918, the day on which it was passed, when, according to his own case, he was not three months short of 19 years old, and he also cannot have failed to know about it when his property was handed over to the decree-holders in April or May 1919 when he was nearly twenty. His application to set aside the ex parte decree, made in March 1920 is then hopelessly barred by time.

But I am very clearly of opinion that when the plaintiff in a mortgage suit makes an application under rule 5 (2) or rule 8 (4) of Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code for a final decree it is not legally necessary that notice of that application should be served on the defendant or even issued to him before a final decree is passed. It is certainly only just and proper to give notice to the defendant in practically every case, on the sound principle of always hearing the other side; but the passing of a final decree without service of notice on the defendant of the application for it or even issue of such notice to him is not an illegality or even an irregularity that would affect the decree in any way, nor would the Court be bound by rule 13 of Order IX to set aside such a decree, though it might do so if it considered that the absence of notice constituted "sufficient cause" for the absence of the defendant.

within the meaning of that rule in that particular case.

Confusion of thought appears to exist on this point, arising out of the old conflict of views as to the nature of the proceedings in a mortgage suit between the preliminary and final decrees. There is, however, no room for doubt or confusion since the passing of the present Procedure Code in 1908; the proceedings are a part of the trial of the suit itself, which does not end till the final decree is passed. In many subordinate Courts, however, the view taken seems to be that these proceedings are certainly a continuation of the suit, because it is not laid down in many rulings, but only technically and for certain purposes; there are frequent instances of their being treated as execution proceedings and the provisions of Order XXI, particularly those in rule 2, being applied to them. They are as real and essential a part of the suit itself as those between the preliminary and final decrees in a suit for accounts or partition.

Now, the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit, whether for foreclosure or sale, must under rule 2 or rule 4 of Order XXXIV direct the payment of a certain sum of money into Court by a date to be fixed; there is no mention of payment out of Court to the plaintiff. The preliminary decree, therefore, grants time to the defendant for the performance of an act necessary to the further progress of the suit. If he fails to perform that act within the time allowed the Court may under rule 3 of Order XVII proceed to decide the suit forthwith on the materials before it, that is to say, to pass a final decree. And by rules 3 (2) and 5 (2) of Order XXXIV the discretion left to the Court by rule 3 of Order XVII is taken away when the plaintiff applies for a final decree, unless the defendant appears and shows good cause for an enlargement of time. It is strictly for the defendant to appear and do this on or before the date fixed, and the plaintiff is certainly not legally bound to give him an opportunity to do it after that date.

The only ruling I have been able to find dealing directly with this point is that of the Calcutta High Court in Bechu

Singh v. Bisharam Sahu (1). The matter was not directly in issue there and the judgment dealt with the state of things existing before the passing of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. But the view taken by the High Court of Calcutta of an order absolute under the Transfer of Property Act was that it was a decree, and the remarks of Mookerjee, J., apply, therefore, to Order XXXIV. The learned Judge said: "That previous notice to the judgment-debtor is just in the case of enforcement of a conditional or contingent decree is obvious from the circumstance that such a procedure has been followed in other systems of law. For instance, as explained by this Court in the case of Jogendra Chandra Roy v. Eym Das (2), in England a writ of scire facias was necessary when the execution-creditor sought to enforce a conditional or contingent judgment upon the allegation that the condition has not been performed or the contingency has happened. The same principle was adopted by this Court in the case of Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahlo (3), when it was ruled by a Full Bench that an order absolute under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act ought not to be made ex parte, although that section does not expressly provide for the issue of notice to the mortgagor, and that if such an order has been made without notice to the judgment-debtors mortgagors, the Court has inherent power to set aside the order made ex parte." It is not here stated but rather assumed or conceded, that there is no legal necessity for the issue of a notice.

My own impression is that it has always been similarly assumed, almost as axiomatic, that under the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the issue of notice is not legally but only practically necessary, and that this is casually mentioned in many published judgments but naturally never discussed. There is, however, a fairly general belief, illustrated in this case, that if a defendant has not been served with notice of the application for a final decree it can be said that the summons in the suit of which rule 13 of Order IX speaks was not duly served on him and the Court is, therefore, bound to set aside the final decree if it was passed in his absence.

The latest published ruling of this Court on the subject is Seth Bhagwandas v. Shridhar (4) decided in February 1907. In Chaitram v. Daolat Gond (5) Stevens, J. C., held in 1895 that no notice was required, and gave three very sound reasons for that view. In 1903 in Amolakchand v. Jawahir Mahomed (6) Irmay, J. C., expressed a doubt as to the correctness of this view but did not go into the question, which did not really arise in the case before him. In 1907 Stanyon, A. J. C., referred to both these cases in Seth Bhagwandas v. Shridhar (4) and dissented from the first of them, holding that the Court was bound to issue notice before passing what is now called a final decree but in those days was known as a final order. The basis of the decision is that the proceedings on the application for that final order are not a continuation of the suit, though they are not execution proceedings, which was the only alternative previously suggested, but anomalous proceedings sui generis. That view may or may not have been correct then; it is certainly not correct now.

Even, therefore, if no notice of the application for a final decree had even been issued to the two appellants, and they had applied within the time allowed to have the ex parte decree set aside, neither of them would be entitled to get this relief as of right. That they are not entitled to any enlargement of time in equity or even as an indulgence is abundantly clear from the history of the case set out at the beginning of this judgment, which shows that for nearly six years they managed on no grounds whatever to retain possession of the property and enjoy the income. It is also clear that they have in fact had full knowledge of every detail of the proceedings from beginning to end. The appeal is accordingly dismissed and the appellants must pay all the costs of the opposite party in both Courts. These costs will be payable personally by the appellants and will not be added to the price of redemption.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners in this case, who are parda noshin ladies, invite us to vacate the order of the Munsif dated the 11th February 1921 confirming the sale of the petitioners' property and virtually refusing an application made by them under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code.

It appears that the property was sold on the 18th December 1920 and purchased by the opposite party for Rs. 730 who deposited the earnest money on that day. On the 4th January 1921 the opposite party deposited the balance of the purchase money and the 22nd of January, was fixed for confirmation of the sale. On the 17th January the judgment-debtors, petitioners before us, deposited the claim and costs with compensation and prayed that the sale might be set aside. On the 22nd January, the date fixed for the confirmation of the sale, the Court passed the following order "Judgment-debtors Nos. 1 to 5 have deposited the claim costs with compensation money within time. Issue notice on the auction-purchaser. Judgment-debtors Nos. 1 to 5 do file process-fee and duly filled in processes within 3 days. Put up on 9th February next." On the 9th February it was found that processes and process-fee had not been filed and deposited in Court. The case was accordingly adjourned to the 11th February for orders. On that date the Court passed the following order: "Judgment debtors' Pleader Babu Ram Pada Mukherjee and clerk Babu Kashinath Oatterjee were asked to take steps for the service of notice on the auction-purchaser. But they did not take any steps. So the money deposited by the judgment-debtors cannot be accepted by the Court. Let the sale be, therefore, confirmed."

It is contended by the petitioners that this order is wrong and the Court should not have confirmed the sale in the circumstances detailed above. Order XXI, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code, no doubt, lays down that no order shall be made under rule 89 unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby, and no doubt the auction-purchaser, who is one of such persons, is entitled to notice of the application under that rule. Rule 92, however, does not make it obligatory on the applicant to pay the process-fee or to serve notice according to the mode of service prescribed in the Civil Procedure Code, in every case. It is clear from an examination of the record that the auction-purchaser appeared through a Pleader on the 18th December 1920, the day on which the sale was held. He further appeared in Court on the 4th January 1921, when he deposited the balance of the purchase-money. He must, therefore, be considered as a party on the record who had entered appearance in Court and accordingly notice of the application could have been given to his Pleader on the record. We have not been referred to any authority which makes it incumbent on the judgment-debtor in such circumstances to pay any process-fee for a formal service of notice of the application on the auction-purchaser. We are satisfied that the order passed by the learned Munsif which was affirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge of Asansol is wrong and ought to be set aside.

It is argued by the opposite party that this Court is precluded by virtue of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, from interfering with an order like the present one though passed wrongly. It is needless to say that in innumerable instances this Court has interfered with wrong exercise by the Courts below of powers vested in them under sections dealing with confirmation or setting aside of auction sales. If it is necessary to say anything on the question of jurisdiction we may add that the learned Munsif had no jurisdiction to confirm the sale when the judgment debtors had complied with all the provisions of law and deposited the necessary amount within the time prescribed for that purpose.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 12th February 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Lahore, dated the 16th October 1919.

Lala Durga Das, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Sheikh Abdul Hamid, owns certain property adjoining the property owned by the defendant, Tha-kar Dass. Thakar Das commenced to erect certain buildings which threatened to obliterate the window in a room in the second storey of the house belonging to the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted a suit asking for a declaration to the effect that he was entitled to the uninterrupted use of light and air through this window and praying for a mandatory injunction to issue to the defendants prohibiting him from interfering with this window and blocking it in any way. The defendant pleaded that no easement had been acquired qua this window, that the window was in a parapet and not in a room, and that the room which now exists was a recent construction. The Trial Court came to a finding that the window had existed for more than 20 years prior to suit and that the window opened into a room and had so opened for over 20 years; a decree was, therefore, granted to the plaintiff as prayed.

Thakar Das, therefore, preferred an appeal to the District Judge which was dismissed, he has now come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Durga Das and on behalf of the plaintiff respondent I have heard Mr. Tek Chand. It was argued by Mr. Durga Das that the plaintiff did not live in this house which was let out on small rents to people of the coolie class. It appears there is no evidence to show that the tenants are of this class.

He further contended that the room in question was the only room in the second storey and that it was 12 feet by 14 feet in dimensions having a door leading into it in the western wall while the window in question was in the northern wall. There is no window or door of any kind whatsoever in the southern or eastern wall. Mr. Durga Das took up a great deal of time in endeavouring to show that the learned District Judge had not come to a finding as to the existence of the room as a room for a period of 20 years. Mr. Tek Chand took up an equal length of time in showing that a finding had been arrived at on this point. It is true that the expressions used by the learned District Judge are not particularly happy, but after a careful consideration of his judgment it seems to me that the only conclusion to arrive at is that he has found that the room existed as a room for over 20 years. He says: "There is every indication of there having always been a room into which the window gave light and air and even if the room had been recently built, it does not, in my opinion, affect merits of the case." It appears that admittedly the room has recently been re-roofed. If as found the room has existed for over 20 years, the mere fact that it has been re-roofed recently would not deprive the plaintiff of an easement which had been acquired.

Again, Mr. Durga Das contended that the learned District Judge had entirely lost sight of the provisions of section 26 of the Limitation Act and had not found that the period of 20 years during which the plaintiff had been receiving light and air through this window ended within few years of the suit. What has been found, however, is that the plaintiff's room with the window in it has been in existence for a period of over 20 years. The provisions of section 26 of the Limitation Act have in no way been contravened or lost sight of by the learned District Judge.

Next, it was argued, that inasmuch as the plaintiff could easily open a window in the southern, western, or eastern wall, it was inequitable to prevent the defendant from building his house so as to block these ancient lights and my attention was drawn to Vir Bhan v. Ramjidas (1), Arjan Das v. Ganesh Das (2), Delhi & London Bank Ltd. v. Hem Lall Dutt (3) and Sethuram Madigai Row v. Gopal Row Peishwa (4). In Vir Bhan v. Ramjidas (1) it was held that in a suit of this nature the rule of decision was whether, in consequence of the obstruction, the plaintiff had less light and air than before to such an appreciable degree as to injure his property in point of value, comfort, convenience, or usefulness, according to its character as a residence or a place of business or warehouse, and that an injunction was the proper remedy where substantial and wrongful injury had been done to the plaintiff's rights. Mr. Tek

Chand contended that this ruling really assisted him while Mr. Durga Das urged that it was in his favour inasmuch as the plaintiff had not proved that the blocking of this window would result in any loss in value or in comfort, convenience or usefulness. In that case, however, an injunction was granted although there had not been a complete blocking of the ancient lights. Arjan Das v. Ganesh Das (2), is also a decision of the Chief Court (Agnew, J.) in which the usual principles to be found in all text books on the subject are referred to. That case, however, did not deal with the entire blocking of ancient light but with a problematical reduction in the light which might arise out of the building of a certain balcony. This case does not appear to me to afford assistance in the present one. In Delhi & London Bank Ltd. v. Hem Lall Dutt (3), there had been a diminution of light and it was held that that diminution was not such as to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes for which it was used. In Sethuram Madigai Row v. Gopal Row Peishwa (4) there was no question of easement at all. Certain common property had been appropriated by one of the co-owners and it was held that where upon a balance of convenience damages would be an adequate remedy, relief by way of mandatory injunction should not be granted. It has to be borne in mind that in the present case both the Courts below have inspected the property and both have come to the conclusion that the room would become practically uninhabitable if this window was entirely blocked. Here we have not a case of a diminution of light and air but a total obstruction. The building proposed to be erected by the defendant will completely block this window. No doubt it is possible for the plaintiff to open another window on the opposite wall or one of the other walls. It might be a neighbourly act on his part to meet the defendant in this way. But at the same time he is not legally bound to do so and is entitled to enjoy the light and air that he has been enjoying through this window for over 20 years. In Krupa Ram v. Gurbalsi (5) in a somewhat similar set of circumstances the plaintiff's right to light and air had been completely taken away and it was held that a mandatory injunction should issue.

SARAT KAMINI DASI v. CHAITANYA CHANDRA PROHORAJ.

As to the question of actual injury to the horse it seems to me that any act by the defendant which controls or obstructs the light and air to which the plaintiff is entitled is prima facie an injury of a serious character. In this view I am fortified by the decision in Nandkishore Balgovan v. Bhagubhai Pranvalabhdas (6), relied on by Mr. Tek Chand. The proposed erection of this building by the defendant is, therefore, a very serious menace to the plaintiff's property, and prima facie it seems to me that the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction. It was suggested by Mr. Durga Das, that compensation would meet the situation, but in this view I am unable to agree. In this connection Ramanujulu Naidu v. Apparan i Ammal (7) is instructive. Their Lordships of the Madras High Court held that an injunction was the rule and damages the exception in cases of this nature. They also held that there was no authority for the proposition, that if it was possible for the plaintiff to neutralise the effect of the defendant's buildings by altering or re-arranging his own buildings, then compensation in money would afford adequate relief. It having been proved that the plaintiff has acquired an easement whereby he is entitled to have free access of light and air through this window, he is prima facie entitled to be maintained in his enjoyment of the said easement. Again, the grant of an injunction is purely a matter of discretion, a discretion which is, of course, to be exercised in a judicial manner. The Courts below have agreed in thinking that a proper exercise of this discretion entitles the plaintiff to the grant of an injunction and I am unable to see any reason for taking a different view.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4
(3)—Death of one of several defendants—Legal representative not brought on record—Suit, when does not abate as a whole.

When one of two or more defendants dies and no application is made under Order XXII, rule 4(3), the suit abates as against the deceased defendant. The question, whether the suit abates as a whole, would depend upon whether the suit can be proved in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased defendant. If the latter had no joint interest with the other defendants and the interests of the several defendants can be discriminated, the abatement of the suit with respect to the deceased defendant will not result in the dismissal of the entire suit. [p. 29¹, col. 2; p. 292, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bankura, dated the 4th August 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Third Court at that place, dated the 22nd April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Panchanan Ghosh (with him Babu Jotintranath Sanyal for Babu Kalikinkar Chakravarty), for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. Plaintiff's case is that she purchased the interest of Raja Balabhadra Singh who got the estate as reversioner after two ladies had held it in limited interest. The defense is that they held the lands from various grants by those ladies and these were, therefore, binding on the plaintiff and that the plaintiff being a benamdar could not maintain the suit. The First Court dismissed the suit on preliminary grounds. Then there were two appeals. In one of them from which the present appeal arises one of the respondents being dead the appeal was dismissed. The questions in the present appeal are two, viz., (1) whether on the death of one of the respondents in the Court of Appeal below the whole appeal abated or only as against the deceased respondent and (2) whether if some of the parties compromised the whole suit could be dismissed.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—Were the defendants interested in the same plot of land?]

No. The land was held by forty-eight persons each claiming separate plots under different grants. The only issue tried by the First Court related to the maintainability of the suit by the benamdar. These things were not gone into. Refers to Order XXII, rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I submit the other issues must be tried before it can be known whether they had joint interest. The case in Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (1) cannot apply as there has been no decree at all in the present case. Refers to Bai Full v. Adesing (2), Khuda Baksh v. Mathra Das (3), Hem Kunwar v. Amba Prasad (4), Mullah's Civil Procedure Code 343. As regards the second question two co-tenants were filed in the First Court between the plaintiff and two sets of defendants. The Court below has dismissed wrongly the suit as against the others.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basu (with him Babu Narendra Nath Chowdhury), for the Respondents.—As regards the question whether the defendants jointly owned the lands there was no issue raised. The relief sought is for khos possession of the entire mouza. Refers to Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (1), Dharanjit Narayan Singh v. Ohandeshwar Prasad Narayan Singh (5) and Azimuddin Mandal v. Tara Sankar Ghose (6). I submit the appeal was imperfectly constituted and has, therefore, been rightly dismissed. As regards the second point the petition of compromise was merely filed. No order was passed on it.

Babu Panchanan Ghosh replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants sought to recover possession, by ejectment of the defendants, of the property in dispute under a purchase from Raja Balabhadra Singh. There are a large number of defendants in the case. Among other defences they raised the plea that the plaintiff was the benamdar for her husband and, as such, she could not maintain a suit for recovery of possession and for ejectment.

The suit was tried along with another which was also dismissed on the same grounds.

There were appeals in both suits. The other suit was remanded to the lower Court for re-trial, the Court having found that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit. So far as the present case is concerned, it appears that one of the defendants, namely, defendant No. 20, Nagendra Nath Mahapatra, died while the appeal was pending before the Court of Appeal below and no application for substitution of the heirs was made within the period allowed by law. The learned District Judge held that the entire suit be dismissed as there was nothing from which the interest of the several defendants could be discriminated.

The plaintiffs appeal to this Court.

There is no doubt that when one of two or more defendants die, and no application is made under Order XXII, rule 4, sub-rule (3) the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant.

The question, whether the suit abates as a whole, depends upon whether the suit can be proved in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased defendant.

No inquiry appears to have been made by the learned District Judge in the matter. He merely says there is nothing from which the interest of the several defendants could be discriminated.

The plaintiff, no doubt, brought a suit for recovery of possession of a mouza but a very large number of persons were made parties defendants. Some of the defendants in their written statement claimed to be in possession of specific parcels of land within the mouza separately from the other defendants. It also appears from two petitions put in by some of the defendants, by which they compromised the case with the plaintiff, that they claimed to hold specific parcels of land within definite boundaries, with regard to which they had come to an amicable settlement with the plaintiff.

AHILIA & BADANSINGH.

These go to indicate that there are, at any rate, some lands which are held separately by some of the defendants; and if the deceased defendant had no joint interest in these plots of land which the defendants claim to hold separately from the others, it is difficult to see why the abatement of the suit with respect to the defendant No. 20 should result in dismissal of the suit with respect to the entire property.

We think, in these circumstances, that there should be an inquiry into the question whether the lands held by the several sets of defendants were held separately from each other. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the defendants are in possession of specific plots of land in which the deceased defendant had no share, it will proceed to try the case as against such of the defendants. But if, with respect to any plot of land, the deceased defendant No. 20 was jointly concerned, the suit must be dismissed with respect to such plot. The Court will also consider the petition of compromise referred to above.

The case is accordingly remanded to the lower Appellate Court for disposal according to law, having regard to the observations made above.

Costs to abide the result.

O. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 46 (1)—Occupancy tenant—Succession—Nearer collateral, heir disqualified under the section whether lets in distant heir.

Section 46 (1) of the O. P. Tenancy Act, 1898, creates a rule of restriction so far as collaterals are concerned. The condition requiring the collateral who claims succession to have shared in the cultivation is a disqualification which disentitles the nearest collateral if he has not fulfilled the condition. But it does not confer any right of succession to the occupancy-tenure on a more remote collateral even though he may have shared in the cultivation. [p. 294, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 28th February 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 159 of 1919.

Mr. S. R. Pandit, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. P. Golhale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical table shows the relationship of the parties:—

It has been found that the occupancy fields in suit were acquired by Gangaram. After Gangaram's death his widow and heir Musammat Punia seems to have gifted the fields to the first plaintiff. At any rate in the Settlement of 1896 the fields were recorded in the joint names of Punia and the first plaintiff. On the death of Musammat Punia about A. D. 1907, the name of the first defendant Musammat Ahilia was according to the jamabandi of Samvat 1964 recorded in the place of Musammat Punia, but it has been found as a fact that neither Musammat Ahilia nor the other two defendants have had anything to do with the fields since the death of Punia, and that the malguzar has accepted the first plaintiff as the sole tenant.

The decision of the lower Appellate Court is on the assumption that on the death of Punia her tenancy rights devolved on the second and third defendants. Musammat Ahilia pleaded that she was not the tenant herself but her name was entered as representing her minor son Ghasiram, with whom defendant No. 3 Padamsing had equal rights.

The lower Courts have held that the tenancy rights of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have been lost by implied surrender, since neither they nor Abhilia on their behalf cultivated the land or paid rent for more than two years. The appeal by the defendants is against this finding.

In the last Settlement of 1918 the name of the first defendant was entered as sole tenant of field No. 11, and as joint tenant with the plaintiffs of fields Nos. 140 and 143 in suit. It is also alleged by the plaintiff that the defendants have taken possession of part of field No. 11. The plaintiffs pray for a declaration that the plaintiffs are sole tenants of all three fields and for possession of the land of which the defendants have taken possession. The plaintiffs' claim has been decreed in full.

In this Court the learned Counsel for the appellants does not oppose the plaintiffs' claim to a half share in field No. 11 and I gather that similarly he admits the correctness of the Settlement entry as regards the other two fields in which the plaintiffs are recorded as tenants along with the first defendant.

On the view I take of the case, it is not necessary for me to go into the merits of the appeal relative to the correctness of the decision that the defendants have lost their tenancy rights by implied surrender.

The third issue was: "Who are the legal and the preferential heirs of Gangaram, plaintiffs or defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and whom did the holdings devolve on the death of Musammam Pania?" The learned Munsif held that the plaintiffs being Gangaram's brother's sons are gotraja sapindas while the second and third defendants being daughter's daughter's sons are heritable Bandhus. The gotraja sapindas he held to have preference over heritable Bandhus. He goes on to say: "But under proviso of section 46 sub section (1) of the O. P. Tenancy Act, 1898, a collateral relative of a tenant cannot inherit a right of tenancy unless at the death of the tenant he was a co-sharer in the holding or unless failing any such co-sharer, he held the land or was permanently resident in the village in or from which his holding is cultivated and is in the male line of descent from an ancestor who occupied the holding. Plaintiffs' case does not come under any of these exceptions, nor is this the case pleaded by him. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were, therefore, the preferential heirs of Gangaram after Musammam Pania's death under section 46 of the O. P. Tenancy Act, and the holdings after their death devolved upon them". This view of the law was not contested in first appeal.

But in this Court the learned Pleader for the respondents under rule 22 Order XL of the First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code supports the decree by contesting the correctness of the above view of the law. He argued that a disqualified agnate excludes a Bandhu who is a remoter heir. He was not able to cite any authority. The learned Counsel for the appellants also cited no authority, beyond authorities to the effect that a daughter's daughter's son may be an heir in the absence of a nearer heir.

I have, however, since found two rulings on the subject. In Sheoshankarpuri v. Musammam Rukhma (1), the following observations were made by Ismay, J. O.

"The Civil Judge also remarks incidentally that section 70 (of the O. P. Tenancy Act) has the effect of modifying the Hindu Law of succession and that by reason of the provisions of that section a daughter's daughter's son would exclude any collateral gotraja sapinda. Here I think the learned Judge is wrong. The section referred to creates a rule of restriction but nothing more. It first lays down that the person to inherit must be one who would inherit if the property were immoveable property of a totally different kind, and it thus proceeds to exclude some of those persons from the benefit they would otherwise derive as heirs. But such exclusion would not have the effect of letting in any person who is not the heir. In the example given the daughter's daughter's son could not claim to succeed merely because a nearer collateral relative was not a co-sharer in the holding when the tenant died. This was the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Shankar Lal v. Dalip Singh (2) and it is no doubt the correct view."

(2) 17 A. 33; A. W. N. (1894) 194; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1345.

OSMAN MANDAL & RADHIKA MOHAN ROY,

The above remarks of Irmay, J. C., appear to be obiter dicta, but that is not the case in respect to the ruling cited by him, which dealt with the present question under the N. W. P. Rent Act XII of 1881, section 9. I would quote the following passage from the judgment of Burkitt, J.: "The facts here are that the more remote collateral shared in the cultivation while the nearer collateral did not so share, and the contention is that, to use a phrase of Hindu Law, the more remote collateral, therefore, excludes the nearer, which is a strange proposition. To this proposition I cannot assent. Under the words of section 9 the right shall devolve as if it were land. I hold, therefore, that the person on whom that right devolves is the person indicated as heir by the law to which he is subject, and not a person more remote in the line of succession who may have shared in the cultivation with the deceased occupancy tenant. As has been very properly remarked by my learned brother, the condition requiring the collateral who claims succession to have shared in the cultivation is a disqualification which disentitles the nearest collateral if he has not fulfilled the condition. But it does not confer any right of succession to the occupancy-tenure on a more remote collateral, even though he may have shared in the cultivation."

These arguments are applicable to the facts of the present case, and with due deference I consider them to be correct.

Thus the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are not entitled to succeed to Gangaram's occupancy holding, in spite of the fact that the plaintiff, the nearer heir under Hindu Law, are disqualified. They have no other claim to the holding.

The plaintiffs have a right of suit, for it has been found that the malguzar has recognised them as the sole tenants; and they must succeed as the defendants have no locus standi at all. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 50 (1), (2), applicability of—"Permanent settlement," meaning of—Presumption under s. 50 (2).

To gain the advantage of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it must be shown that the rate of rent has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. [p. 295, col. 2.]

The words "Permanent Settlement" in section 50 (1) and (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act refer to the Permanent Settlement of 1793, and not to any other Settlement when the land itself was permanently settled. [p. 295, col. 2.]

Even if a case does not come within section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the fact that uniform rent has been paid for a period of 20 years, may create a presumption in favour of the tenure-holder that the rate of his rent has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. [p. 295, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Second Court, 24 Pargannas dated the 1st March 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ramgati Sarkar, for the Appellant:—Notwithstanding the definition of Permanent Settlement contained in section 3-sub section (12) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the expression "Permanent Settlement" referred to in section 50 of the Act does not mean only the Permanent Settlement of 1793. It may refer to the settlement when the land of the tenancy itself was permanently settled. In the present case the land not having been permanently settled until 1905, the words "Permanent Settlement" as used in section 50 refer to the Settlement of 1905. See Tamasha Bibi v. Ashutosh Dhar (1) and Khettermoni Dasi v. Jiban Krishna Kundoo (2). Even if it be held that the presumption under section 50 is not available to the defendant by reason of the land having been permanently settled only in 1905, the fact of uniform payment of rent for a period of more than 20 years would, under the general law, raise a presumption of fixity of rent in favour of the defendant. See Gulab Misier v. Kalanand Singh (3), Nityananda Pal v. Nanda Kumar (4) and Pran Krishna Shaha v. Mukta Sundari Dassya (5). My last contention is that the lower Appellate Court ought not to have increased the enhancement allowed by the Trial Court without referring to the materials stated in section 50 sub-section (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Surendra Nath Sen (with him Babu Raj Kumar Ohakravarty) for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are by the defendant against decisions of the Subordinate Judge of 24 Pargannas affirming decisions of the Munsif of Baruipur.

The main point that arises for our decision in these appeals is, whether the tenant defendant who is an occupancy raiyat is entitled to the protection of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now, what has been argued before us is that, despite the definition of Permanent Settlement contained in section 3, sub-section (12) of the Act, the decisions of this Court go to show that the words Permanent Settlement as used in section 50 are not to be confined to the Permanent Settlement of 1793 and it is said that inasmuch as the land in suit was not permanently settled until 1905 we should hold that the words Permanent Settlement as appearing in section 50, sub-section (1) and also in sub-section (2) refer not to the Permanent Settlement of 1793 but to the Settlement of 1905 when the land itself was permanently settled. Now, no decision has been cited to us which would show that the words Permanent Settlement in section 50, sub-section (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, do not relate to the Permanent Settlement of 1793. But so far as sub-section 2 is concerned we have been referred in support of the argument addressed to us to the case of Tamasha Bibi v. Ashutosh Dhur (1) and to the remarks of Sir Francis Maclean at page 514 in that case when he says discussing sub-section (2) of section 50 that he sees no reason for restricting the operation of the section to the Permanent Settlement of 1793. We have been further referred to a passage in Mr. Justice Banerjee, judgment at page 515 to the same effect. The other case to which we have been referred is the case of Khettermont Dasi v. Jiban Krishna Kundoo (2) which cites and follows the decision in Tamasha Bibi v. Ashutosh Dhur (1). Now, as we read the decision in Tamasha Bibi v. Ashutosh Dhur (1) neither of the learned Judges who decided that case say that the Permanent Settlement in section 50 sub-section (2) does not mean the Permanent Settlement of 1793. But what they say is this that the presumption of the sub-section still applies even if the rent was permanently settled at a later date than 1793. That seems to us to be the real ratio decidendi of the decisions in both the cases to which we have been referred. Accordingly it does not seem to us that there is any force in the first contention raised before us with regard to the meaning of the words Permanent Settlement in the two sub-sections of section 50 to which we have referred. To gain the advantage of section 50, therefore, the defendant has to show that the rate of rent has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. But there is an express finding that the jama was created some 70 years ago. Accordingly it is not fact that the rent has not changed since 1793. Then again so far as sub-section (2) is concerned no doubt there is a finding of the Munsif that the rent has not been changed during the 20 years prior to the institution of the suit and that is a finding to the contrary within the meaning of the excluding part of the sub-section as the origin of the jama has been found to be some 70 or 75 years ago.

A further point was urged before us, namely, that assuming that section 50 has no application, from the fact that uniform rent has been paid for a period of 20 years the Court might draw a presumption in favour of the defendant and we were referred to the case of Nityananda Pal v. Nanda Kumar (4) in support of this proposition. Now there is no doubt that this is so. But so far as the present case is concerned this point was never raised in the lower Appellate Court, and although it is true that there is a finding of the Munsif that the tenant paid rent at a uniform rate for more than 20 years we have no express finding of the lower Appellate Court with regard to this although he does refer to the payment of uniform rate of rent for a period of 24 or 25 years. But if even if there were such a finding we should not be prepared from the length of time or under the facts and circumstances of the present case to draw the presumption which we were asked to draw.

One further point was argued. The Munsif enhanced the rent under the provisions of section 30 sub-section (b) by two annas in the rupee. The learned Subordinate Judge has increased the enhancement by six pies in the rupee. It is said that there is nothing to show how he arrived at this figure. But he does state that the plaintiff is entitled to get an enhancement by 3 annas 6 pies in the rupee. Therefore, we must take it that he has applied his mind to the necessary materials under section 30 sub-section (b) in granting the enhancement of 2 annas 6 pies in the rupee which he has allowed.

In the result these appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

Where a plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court, the original vakalatnama of the plaintiff's Pleader is not determined where the presentation of the plaint before the proper Court can be considered as a continuation of the proceedings in the suit as originally instituted for the purposes of O. Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 31st August 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 89 of 1920.

Mr. N. G. Sarkar, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—The plaint in this suit was originally presented in the Court of the Senior Munsif, Katol, on the 12th of March 1919, having been held back till the very last possible day in accordance with the incomprehensible custom prevalent among Indian litigants. The claim was originally valued at Rs. 1,750 but on enquiry it was found that the proper valuation was Rs. 356 only. As the Court of the Senior Munsif tried no suits with a valuation of less than Rs. 400 the plaint was, on the 24th of July 1919, returned to Mr. Bakre, the Pleader who was representing the plaintiff in that Court under a proper vakalatnama, for presentation to the proper Court, which was that of the Junior Munsif. Mr. Bakre presented the plaint in the Court of the Junior Munsif on the same day, and with it he put in a written application stating that he understood that his power to act for the plaintiff had expired, and asking that he might be given time for procuring a fresh vakalatnama from his client who lived at Shergaon in the Buldana District, the plaint being provisionally accepted in the meantime.

The learned Junior Munsif, purporting to exercise the power mentioned in section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, admitted the plaint and treated it thereafter as having been presented on that day. On the 4th of August 1919 Mr. Bakre put in a fresh vakalatnama duly signed by the plaintiff, the Court having allowed him time up to that day for that purpose. On the merits, the suit was decided in favour of the plaintiff, who was given a decree for possession of the land he claimed against the first defendant. The latter appealed and the learned Additional District Judge ordered the dismissal of the suit as barred by time, holding that it had not been properly presented in the Court of the Junior Munsif till the 4th of August 1919, and that that Court had no power, under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, to allow the plaintiff time for the production of the vakalatnama, as that would be to nullify the provisions of rules 1 and 4 of Order III of the Civil Procedure Code.

The only reason stated for the view that section 151 could not be called in aid in this case is that the provisions of the two rules which were overridden by virtue of that section are clear and imperative. The learned Judge writes: "The provisions of rules 1 and 4 of Order III of the Civil Procedure Code are quite clear and imperative and, therefore, I hold that the lower Court could not, under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, make an order which had the effect of nullifying the provisions of the said rules." But by its very terms section 151 does, in certain specified circumstances, nullify the clear and imperative provisions of the Code as well as those that are ambiguous or advisory, if any of the latter classes exist. The provisions which cannot be nullified by virtue of the power mentioned in that section are not those that are clear and imperative but only those whose operation in the particular case will not defeat the ends of justice or lead to abuse of the process of the Court.

I am strongly inclined to agree with the learned Munsif that the present case is a proper one for the application of section 151. But the power there mentioned must be used very sparingly and only in the last resort, if only because of the great danger of mistake as to what the justice of a given case may be, and the same result can here be achieved in accordance with the letter as well as the spirit of the law. The fundamental assumption made by the learned Pleader for the plaintiff, to which both Judges who dealt with the case and both parties have all along assented, is that the vakalatnama executed for the purpose of the suit in the Senior Munsif's Court expired with the return of the plaint and did not ensure for the purposes of the further proceedings in the Junior Munsif's Court. This appears to me to be wrong. Under rule 4 (2) of Order III the original appointment of the Pleader in the Senior Munsif's Court remained in force till all proceedings in the suit were ended so far as regards the plaintiff.

The express provision that a vakalatnama remained in force till all proceedings in the suit were ended first appeared in the Civil Procedure Code of 1832. But the principle had been accepted long before that. In 1867 in Shah Mukhun Lal v. Sreekishen Singh (1) the Calcutta High Court allowed a Pleader to appear without fresh authority in an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council because he had filed a vakalatnama in the appeal to the High Court. Similarly, in 1869 the Pleader who had appeared in the original suit which was dismissed in default was held, in Rajah Sutto Ohurn Ghossal Bahadoor v. Suroop Ohunder Doss (2), not to require a fresh vakalatnama to enable him to file an application for restoration. In 1892, in Raghunath Singh v. Raghubir Sahai (3), the Allahabad High Court allowed a Pleader to put in an application for the restoration of an appeal that had been dismissed in default by virtue of the vakalatnama authorising him to conduct the appeal. Lastly, the Bombay High Court in 1895 enunciated, in Sadashis Ganpatrao v. Vitthaladas Nanchand (4), the principle that has always been accepted since then, that for the purposes with which we are now concerned execution proceedings are a part of the original suit. I can see no difference in principle between these cases and that of the present appellant.

I wish to guard myself carefully against being understood to say that the presentation of a plaint in the proper Court after its return to the plaintiff by a Court to which it had been wrongly presented, is always continuation of the proceedings in the suit originally instituted, for the purposes of rule 4 (2) of Order III of the Civil Procedure Code. All it is necessary, and therefore, all it is permissible, for me to say is that in this particular case the proceedings in the suit instituted in the Court of the Senior Munsif did not end so far as regards the plaintiff for the purposes of rule 4 (2) of Order III when that Court returned the plaint to his Pleader, but were continued by, and in, the proceedings in the Court of the Junior Munsif.

The vakalatnama filed in the First Court was not, as a matter of fact, produced with the plaint in the Second Court, but that is because it was mistakenly supposed by both Courts and by the Pleader to have expired and had been retained in the First Court; it was mentioned in the application put in with the plaint in the Second Court. For these reasons I hold, that the suit was not barred by time, and as the appeal was decided on that preliminary issue the case must be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision on the merits. Costs in this Court will follow the result. There will be no certificate for the refund of Court fees.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25 (3)—Acknowledgment of barred debt—Implied promise to pay—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Renewal of barred debt.

A document renewing a debt which had already become barred by limitation, cannot operate as an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act.

An unconditional acknowledgment of a barred debt cannot be given effect to, as giving rise to an implied promise to pay within the meaning of section 25 (3) of the Contract Act.

Rule against the order of the Sub Judge, First Court, Pabna, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Charu Chandra Sen (with him Babu Brojendra Kumar Ray), for the Petitioners—I submit that I am entitled to recover even if it is a barred debt. Refers to section 25, clause (3), of the Indian Contract Act. The opposite party promises to pay the amount. I contend that when the defendant's predecessor executed the hatchita I am entitled to recover the amount due. Barred debt is to be regarded as the consideration for the contract. I submit that it is a promise to pay. I do not say that it is an acknowledgment, but it is a fresh promise to pay. Refers to illustration (e) of clause (3), section 25, Contract Act.

[SUBRAWARDY, J.—Unless there is express promise to pay you cannot come under section 25, Contract Act.]

I submit that if the defendant says, "I admit I owe you so much," that amounts to a promise to pay.

[CUMING, J.—No, this is merely an acknowledgment, and so the Limitation Act stands in your way.]

I have already submitted that having regard to the provisions of clause (3) of section 25 and illustration (e) of the Contract Act, my claim to recover the sum cannot be defeated. It is a clear promise to pay and is so enforceable under the law.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Choudhury, for Babu Dwijendra Krishna Dutt, for the Opposite Parties, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—One Mohim Chandra Poddar and the plaintiffs were partners in a business. On accounts being adjusted in 1312 Mohim Chandra Poddar executed a hatchita in favour of the plaintiffs on the 2nd of Baisakh 1312 for Rs 227-11-9. This hatchita was renewed on the 7th Magh 1315 by another hatchita in which this amount is mentioned as due. It was subsequently renewed several times in 1318, 1321 and, lastly, on the 25th Pous 1324. The plaintiffs brought this suit basing his cause of action on the hatchita executed in 1324.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Ferozepore, exercising Small Cause Court Jurisdiction, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that on the 7th Magh 1315 when the hatchita was renewed for the first time the debt had already become time-barred and so it could not operate as an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act.

It is argued in this Rule, which has been obtained by the plaintiffs, that the hatchita of the 7th Magh 1315 ought to be treated as a contract within the meaning of section 25, clause (3) of the Contract Act. That clause, so far as it is pertinent to the present enquiry, says that "an agreement made without consideration is void unless it is a promise made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith * * * to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitations of suits." It is clear that such an agreement must be a promise to pay a barred debt. The hatchita as it stands is merely an unconditional acknowledgment of a debt which, at the date it was executed, was barred. If effect is given to such an acknowledgment, as giving rise to an implied promise to pay, the provisions of the Contract Act would make the condition precedent of the debt being an existing debt as laid down in section 19 of the Limitation Act totally nugatory. We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Judge is right in his view that the present suit is barred by limitation.

The Rule is discharged with costs to the appearing opposite party. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Injunction—Discretion—Duty of Court—Injury to defendant.

In dealing with suits for injunction the Court has to consider in each case not merely whether the plaintiff's legal right has been infringed or even materially infringed, but also whether, under all the circumstances of the case, he ought to be granted an injunction as the proper and appropriate remedy for such infringement.

Ghanasham Nilkant Madhani v. Moroba Ramchandra Rai, 18 B. 474 at p 488; 9 Ind Dec. (N. S.) 825, relied upon.

Where a suit for injunction is prompted by a desire to cause injury to the defendant, the Court will refuse to grant an injunction.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tej Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A perusal of the plan makes it perfectly clear that the portion of the wall marked C. D. in the sketch given in the judgment of the Munsif stands between two rooms, which belong to the defendant, and that the plaintiff cannot have any access to that portion of the wall without committing a trespass on the defendant's property. The wall may be joint, but it is quite clear, and indeed it has been found by Mr. Justice Martineau, that "the pulling down of the wall and the building of the staircase" does no harm to the plaintiff, and that the mandatory injunction, if granted, would certainly injure the defendant.

In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to a mandatory injunction. As pointed out in Ghanasham Nilkant Madhani v. Moroba Ramchandra Rai (1), the Court has to consider in each case not merely whether the plaintiff's legal right has been infringed or even materially infringed, but also whether, under all the circumstances of the case, he ought to be granted an injunction as the proper and appropriate remedy for such infringement. It appears that the parties, though relatives, are on bad terms, and that the present suit for injunction is prompted by a desire to cause injury to the defendant.

We accordingly accept the appeal, and, setting aside the judgment of the Single Bench, dismiss the suit with costs throughout. The cross-objections are dismissed.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwiendra Nath Mookerjee, for the Appellant.—I submit that the decision of the learned Munsif is right and that of the learned Subordinate Judge is clearly wrong in law and so must be set aside. It cannot be denied that Motilal and Baikuntha separated, [GREAVES, J.—Motilal separated. He and Baikuntha were joint at the time of the lease. For five years Baikuntha received rent.]

Motilal and Baikuntha separated in mess, but their properties were never partitioned. There is no finding as to separation of property. Till death Motilal lived in the same bari, but they were in separate mess no doubt. The worst against my client is that he did not have possession and did not receive rent, nor did he pay rent to his superior landlord. The very fact that the defendant raises adverse possession shows that their properties were not partitioned. Under the aforesaid circumstances the possession of Baikuntha and his heirs cannot be held as adverse to Motilal's heirs. Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mondal (1), is clearly in point and disposes of the contention of the learned Subordinate Judge.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pargannas reversing a decision of the Munsif of Basirhat. The plaintiff sued for declaration of her title to, and to establish her right to the rent of, certain land. Her case was that the land belonged originally to one Motilal and that she acquired the land by purchase from Moti Lal's successors-in-interest. The defence was that the land belonged not to Motilal but to Baikuntha and that the defendants were the heirs of Baikuntha. It appeared in evidence that the lands in suit were acquired at a time when Motilal and Baikuntha were joint and, accordingly the plaintiff reduced her claim to 8-annas share in the land claiming Motilal's share. The Munsif decreed the suit in the plaintiff's favour so far as regards the 8 annas share. But the lower Appellate Court reversed the Munsif's finding holding that Motilal and his successors-in-interest were barred by the adverse possession of Baikuntha and his heirs. It is said that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in so holding and that inasmuch as Motilal and Baikuntha only repared in mess and not in estate the possession of Baikuntha and his heirs could not be held as adverse to their co-sharers, that is to Motilal's heirs. We were referred to the case of Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mondal (1). We think that the appellant's contention is correct, and that the Munsif correctly stated the law on the point and that the Subordinate Judge has wrongly held, under the circumstances, that the possession of Baikuntha and his heirs was adverse to Motilal and his heirs.

The result is, that we reverse the decision of the Subordinate Judge and restore the decision of the Munsif. The plaintiff will be entitled to the costs of this appeal and to her costs in the lower Appellate Court.

principal and surety are not made liable under the decree for different portions of the subject-matter thereof but each is made liable for the whole decretal amount and, therefore, the decree is a "joint" one passed against both of them.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang and Lala Har
Gopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The firm of Kanwar-Bhan Sukh Nand obtained a money-decree in 1914 against Nand and Company as principal debtors and against Honda Ram as surety, the decree reciting that Honda Ram would be liable if the money were not realized from Nand and Company. Execution was first taken out against Nand and Company, but they were adjudicated insolvents, and on the 16th July 1918 application for execution was made against Honda Ram. That was consigned to the record room, and in the following year a fresh application was made which is the subject of the present appeal. The First Court dismissed the application on the ground that the decree-holders should have first taken steps to recover their money from the property of Nand and Company, but the District Judge on appeal set aside the order and held that the decree-holders were entitled to proceed against the surety. The latter has appealed to this Court. The second and third grounds of appeal have not been argued, and the only contention put forward by Mr. Madan Gopal on the appellant's behalf is, that the decree was not passed jointly against Nand and Company and the surety and that, therefore, as execution was not applied for against the appellant till more than three years had elapsed since the decree was passed, the present application for execution is barred by limitation. I cannot agree with this contention. Nand and Company and the appellant are not made liable under the decree for different portions of the subject-matter thereof, but each is made liable for the whole of the decretal amount. The decree is passed "jointly" against both the judgment-debtors notwithstanding the fact that it is to be executed against the surety only in case the decree holders fail to realize it from the principal debtors. The previous applications for execution against Nand and Company, therefore, take effect also against the appellant under Explanation I to Article 182 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, and the present application for execution against the appellant is within time.

Narayan Ganpatbhat Agsal v. Timmayi (1), which is cited on behalf of the appellant, is not in point, as in that case the surety had made himself liable only under section 253 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1832 (corresponding to section 145 of the present Code) and there was no decree against him.

The appeal fails and I dismiss it with costs.

XX, r. 4 (2)—Judgment based on personal inspection—High Court, power of, to set aside.

The Court of the Controller, appointed under the Calcutta Rent Act, is a Court of civil jurisdiction, and the High Court, by virtue of the general powers of superintendence conferred upon it by section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, has power to revise orders made by the Controller [p. 303, col. .]

Where the judgment of a Court appears to be based solely on a personal inspection by the Presiding Officer, and contains no reference to the evidence taken in the case, it is liable to be set aside by the High Court. [p. 303, cols. 1 & 2.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the Controller of Rents, Calcutta.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendranath Roy, (with him Babu Santosh Kumar Bose), for the Opposite Party.—This matter arises out of a decision of the Rent Controller appointed under the Calcutta Rent Act. I submit this Court has no power to revise the order under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Rent Controller being no Court under the Code.

Babu Manmatha Nath Moovjerjee (with him Babu Nanda Gopal Banerjee), for the Petitioner.—I submit there is no substance in the preliminary objection. It has been held by this Court that the order of the Rent Controller is revisable by this Court. Further section 107 of the Government of India Act confers wide powers of superintendence over all subordinate Courts by the High Court; The petitioner is a tenant of the premises. The rent was originally Rs. 180. Then the opposite parties took lease of the premises from the landlord and enhanced my rent to Rs. 400. Hence I applied for standardisation of rent under section 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act. After the evidence was adduced by the parties the Controller went to the spot and inspected the premises and brushing aside all evidence, he came to the conclusion that the premises in question were excluded from the scope of the Act. The question is can he do that? He held that the premises are godowns. I submit the Controller has not acted as Court. Our case was that the house was partly let out for residential purposes and partly for storing hides. He has absolutely no jurisdiction to make such enquiry according to the rules under section 23 of the Act. He did not refer to the evidence at all and ought to have considered the original purpose for which the premises were let.

Babu Mohendranath Roy (with him Babu Santosh Kumar Bose), for the Opposite Parties.

—This Court has no power to interfere under section 115 inasmuch as the judgment is based on inspection note. We have distinctly set out the plea that the premises were let out as hide godowns. The Controller had to decide that question. In the Court below no lease was produced and the whole matter had to be decided on oral evidence. There is evidence on the record to show that the premises were used as godowns. He inspected the place after the conclusion of the evidence. The mere omission to refer to the evidence does not vitiate the judgment.

Babu Manmathanath Mookerjee replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner who is a tenant who rented certain premises at a rent of Rs. 180 a month and whose rent was enhanced from Rs. 180 to Rs. 400, asked that the standard rent might be fixed under the Calcutta Rent Act. Evidence was taken, we are told, from both parties, and at the conclusion of the evidence the Controller went and inspected the premises in question and then wrote his judgment holding that the premises he inspected were not "premises" within the meaning of the definition in the Calcutta Rent Act. These "premises" are defined as "any building or part of a building or hut let separately for residential, charitable, educational or public purposes or for the purposes of a shop or an office including any land appertaining thereto and let therewith." The Controller held in his judgment that this was not a case in which the standard rent could be fixed. An application was then made to this Court to revise that decision on the ground that the Rent Controller had acted illegally or with material irregularity in basing his decision upon his inspection without, it is said, any reference to the evidence which has been taken in the case.

A preliminary objection is raised that we have no power in revision to interfere with the decision of the Rent Controller. It has, however, been held by this Court that the Rent Controller's Court is a Court of civil jurisdiction and that the High Court has power to revise the Rent Controller's orders under its general power of superintendence under section 107 of the Government of India Act. We see no reason for dissenting from that decision. It is then said that even if we have jurisdiction to hear this matter, this is not a case in which we should do so. His judgment is expressed in such a way as to indicate, (whether it be the fact or not), that it is based on inspection only; for no reference is made to the evidence which had been previously taken. Whether in fact the Judge had in his mind such evidence and based his decision on such evidence we cannot say. We can only deal with the judgment as it is and draw such inference as the language there used implies. We see no reference made to the evidence. Again, we do not know what use the learned Judge made of that inspection whether it was for the purpose of explaining the evidence, assuming that he had in his mind the evidence which he had taken, or whether or not the learned Judge's decision was based directly and solely upon such inspection. There must accordingly be an order directing the Controller to re-hear and determine the case upon the evidence relying only upon the inspection in so far as such inspection may enable him to understand better the evidence which he has taken and which both parties have given. Whether or not further evidence should be allowed will be determined by the Controller. It may be that it has not been sufficiently clear to him and the parties that in order to see whether a property comes within the term "premises" as defined in the Act it is necessary to ascertain the purpose for which the premises were let. It may be that the actual user of the premises may be relevant on that point. In determining the case the Rent Controller should bear in mind the purposes for which the property was let. The Rent Controller will have to determine whether the premises in question were let for the purposes mentioned in section 2 clause (c) of the Calcutta Rent Act, though, as I have said, on the question what was the purpose of the original letting, the actual user of the premises may be evidence. I do not say it must be evidence but it may be evidence. This depends on the circumstances of the case.

The Rule, therefore, is made absolute and the order of the Rent Controller is hereby set aside and he is directed to determine the application having regard to the observations made in our judgment. The hearing fee is assessed at five gold mohurs in this Rule.

The costs of this Rule will follow the event, that is, the hearing by the Controller.

We may observe that this matter has been pending from a long time and we are told that a suit is now also pending in respect of these proceedings. We, therefore,

Pre-emption—Transfer by vendee after institution of suit—Transferee, whether can set up superior right of pre-emption—Lis pendens, doctrine of, applicability of.

Where after the institution of a suit for pre-emption the vendee transfers the property in dispute to a third person but the transfer is not made in recognition of the superior right of pre-emption of the transferee, the doctrine of lis pendens applies, and the latter cannot plead his superior right of pre-emption in answer to the plaintiff's claim.

Letters Patent Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Martineau, dated the 13th May 1921, passed in Civil Appeal No. 312 of 1921, affirming that of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 10th December 1920.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Qureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 23th January 1919 a plot of land was sold by Jagan Nath to Amar Nath, and on the 24th January 1920 a suit for pre-emption was brought by the plaintiff Maghar Mal. It is beyond doubt that he has a right of pre-emption against the vendee, but his claim is resisted by one Munshi Ram, who on the 25th January 1920 got the property by exchange from the vendee Amar Nath; and the question is whether he can defeat the suit by relying upon his superior right of pre-emption.

There can be no doubt that the transfer being made pendente lite could not adversely affect the plaintiff's right as it existed at the time of the institution of the suit. It is, however, contended that the doctrine of lis pendens is not applicable to the case of a rival claimant who by asserting his right of pre-emption acquires the property out of Court, and whose right to sue had not become barred by lapse of time before the date of transfer in his favour. It is true that there are some judgments of the Punjab Chief Court which lay down the rule that where, after the institution of a suit for pre-emption another pre-emptor asserted his right of pre-emption privately, and the vendee in recognition of his right transferred the property to him before the lis became contentious, the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply to such a transfer. Now, assuming for the sake of argument the correctness of the above proposition of law, we have no hesitation in holding that it has no application to a case like the present where the transfer, as found by the District Judge, was not made in recognition of the right of pre-emption. It is to be observed that the transfer in favour of the appellant was not a sale but an exchange, and that the deed makes no reference whatsoever to any right of pre-emption. In view of the clear finding arrived at by the learned District Judge that the transfer was not made in recognition of the right of pre-emption, we must hold that the appellant was not entitled to rely upon the transfer in order to defeat the claim of the plaintiff.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

A suit to recover the value of fruit removed from a tree is excluded from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court by Article 35 (ii) of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, if the removal amounts to theft.

The fact that no objection as to jurisdiction is taken in the Trial Court, has not the effect of conferring a jurisdiction on that Court which it otherwise did not possess.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of a decree of the Munsif, First Class, with powers of a Judge Small Cause Court, Batala, District Gurdaspur, dated the 15th October 1920.

Lal Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Petitioner.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for the value of fruit removed by defendant from a tree which plaintiff claims to be his. It has been decreed by a Small Cause Court. If the plaintiff's case be correct the defendant's action amounts to theft and so the case is not triable by a Small Cause Court, see Article 35 (ii) of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Lala Jagan Nath urges that objection as to jurisdiction was not taken in the lower Court. This is correct, but this will not confer jurisdiction. And as the question of title is involved it will be better to get it decided at once by a judgment which will be binding on the parties. Defendant should have objected in the lower Court, and following the course taken in Ram Prasad v. Sricharan (1), the case on which defendant relies I accept this application and setting aside the lower Court's decision I direct the plaint to be returned to a Court having jurisdiction, and I also order that defendant shall pay costs in the Small Cause Court, and in this Court; I assess costs in this Court at Rs. 16, and in the lower Court at Rs. 10. Muafi khairati tenants, different kinds of.

Two classes of persons may be recorded as muafi khairati tenants. In one class a man may be entitled to hold certain land free of rent as long as he performs certain services, both tenure and exemption being dependent on the services and ending with them. In the other are persons entitled to hold land as tenants, with an added condition that they shall pay no rent as long as they perform certain services, the exemption but not the tenure being dependent on the services and ending with them. [p 306, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 14th of July 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 113 of 1921.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The fact that the defendant respondent and his ancestors have been recorded as "muafi khairati" tenants does nothing but help to confirm the finding of the two lower Courts that their exemption from paying rent was for services to be rendered to the malguzar, not for services to be rendered to the village. It does not help us to decide in which of the two classes of persons who are recorded as "muafi khairati" the defendant falls. The distinction between the two classes clear and has been set out in several published rulings of this Court, but it has certainly not been grasped in either of the Courts below. A man may be entitled to hold certain land free of rent as long as he performs certain services, both tenure and exemption being dependent on the services and ending with them. That is one class. In the other are persons entitled to hold land as tenants, with an added condition that they shall pay no rent as long as they perform certain services, the exemption but not the tenure being dependent on the services and ending with them.

In this particular case the defendant admitted that his tenure as well as his exemption depended on the performance of certain services, though he added that the services were to the village Rest House and not to the malguzar personally, and those he had not ceased to perform. This is very clearly stated in his written statement and he repeated it in unequivocal terms in this Court, where he appeared in person. What he said here was this: "If I stop doing the work for which the land was given to my ancestors I shall have to give up the land, but I am still doing the work, as my father and grandfather did before me, that is the work of the guzi. That is the work for which the land was given rent free to my ancestors, not the private service of the malguzar."

It has been found by both the Courts below that the services for which the land was given were private services to be rendered to the malguzar, and this finding is further shown to be in accordance with actual fact by the entry in the wajib-ul-ars drawn up in 1910-11 which runs: "Ta chakari mof malguzar ka nizi naukari hai (Rent-free during service. He is the private servant of the malguzar)." It is the basis of the case for both parties that the defendant has ceased to render these private services to malguzar. He must, therefore, give up the land, which he is entitled to hold only so long as he does render those services. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and in lieu thereof it will be decreed that the defendant is to give possession of field No. 1172/3 D (area 61) in Birkona to the plaintiff. The learned Advocate for [redacted] has stated here that he abandons his claim for mesne profits up to the end of the agricultural year 1921-22.

JUDGMENT.—In this case there is a preliminary objection that the appeal had abated, two of the defendants, Ishar Singh and Hamir Singh, died during the pendency of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court. Their legal representatives were brought on to the record by that Court but by a mistake these legal representatives were not made respondents in this Court and it was not till some nine months after the institution of the appeal that an application was made for the rectification of this error. The error was due to a mistake in the judgment on the part of the Copying Department which did not show the names of the legal representatives, although they had long been brought on to the record. It is urged for the respondents that the appeal has, therefore, abated as the legal representatives were not on the record in this Court but I do not consider that the provisions of Order XXII, Civil Procedure Code, apply to these circumstances, if they did apply, the mistake being a bona fide one there would be sufficient ground for extending the period of limitation.

The plaintiff in this case, who is the proprietor of a large area of shamilat land, brought a suit for a perpetual injunction against adna maliks and other tenants of the village that they should be prohibited from grazing their cattle except on a small area of 198 kanals 13 marlas which he considered sufficient for their use. The first Court held that the whole shamilat of 2126 kanals was excessive for the requirements of the defendants and, after issuing a commission for inquiry as to the suitable area to be set aside, granted the plaintiff an injunction except with regard to an area of 648 kanals plus 92 kanals and some other rights which it is unnecessary to mention.

Against this decision the defendants appealed and the learned District Judge, after a discussion of the law on the subject, held that the plaintiff was not entitled to restrict the exercise by the defendants of their grazing rights to any particular portion of the 2126 kanals. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred and it is mainly argued on the contentions that the District Judge has made a mistake of fact in considering that the defendants are adna maliks of this land, and has also made a mistake in law in considering that in such cases a proprietor is not competent to use for his own purposes a part of land over which grazing rights have been given, if that land is in excess of the requirements of the persons who have those rights.

It is clear that the District Judge was in error in stating the defendants to be the adna maliks of the land in suit. They are adna maliks of the other land in the village but plaintiff is the sole proprietor of the land in suit and the defendants have only the grazing rights therein and also the right to cut wood for their own purposes. These facts are admitted by Counsel for both parties before me.

The only question, therefore, is whether the plaintiff is entitled to restrain the defendants from the user of the whole area. It is clear that in cases where the area over which grazing rights extend is larger than that required by the persons with those rights a proprietor may use the excess for his own purposes. The defendants cannot prevent him from developing any excess area and using it to its best purposes. This has been laid down in many judgments such as Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindari Co., (1), Hansraj v. Narain Ohani (2), Gurditta v. Dheru (3), Hira v. Nathu (4) and Nagina v. Baggu (5). Counsel for the respondents does not seriously contest this view but raises other objections against the decision of the first Court which will have to be dealt with by the lower Appellate Court. He contends that it is not shown that the area allotted will give the defendants the ample grazing which they have enjoyed hitherto especially in the seasons of draught. It is also possible, he argues, that owing to improvements in cultivation the number of cattle of the defendants may increase. As for the rights in the wood to which defendants have been accustomed, he urges that in a restricted area, even if the wood is sufficient at first, the growth in future will be rendered precarious owing to the number of cattle in a small area. All these arguments will have to be considered by the lower Appellate Court in hearing the appeal on the merits.

I accept this appeal and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for decision of the other grounds of appeal. Costs to be costs in the cause.

When a mortgagee sells the mortgaged property as an ostensible owner, and there is valuable consideration for the sale, the right of the purchaser becomes unassailable by the mortgagor by the lapse of 12 years from the date of the purchase, under Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and the fact that the purchaser comes to know of his transferor being only a mortgagee soon after the purchase would not stop the running of the time in his favour. Mr. Pendse (with him Mr. V. D. Limaye),

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover by redemption possession of the plaint property. The property had been mortgaged with possession in 1891 by one Ganpat Bhiva Chavan for himself and as guardian of his minor nephew, Krishna Babaji Chavan, to the first defendant's father Martand. The equity of redemption eventually came to two girls, Kondi and Niri, from whom the plaintiff purchased in 1918.

In 1902, Martand sold the property to the second defendant purporting to be the owner thereof, and the second defendant has since been in possession.

It is clear then that any suit against the second defendant to recover possession of the suit property must fall under Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act if it is not filed within twelve years from the date of the transfer. But the appellant wishes to rely on the fact that within a few months of the transfer, the second defendant acquired the knowledge that Martand was a mortgagee and not an owner. Defendant No. 2 stated that he asked Martand why he sold the property if he was only a mortgagee, and Martand said he had become the owner in pursuance of an agreement, which he promised to give to the second defendant later on. Whether that story is true or not, the Indian Limitation Act makes no provision for the case of a transferee who gives valuable consideration at the time of transfer from an ostensible owner, but finds later on that his transferor was only a mortgagor, and not owner of the property transferred.

There does not seem to be any direct authority on this point. But unless direct provision is made in the Act that on the acquisition of such knowledge, the time which had previously begun to run against the mortgagor should stop, it is difficult to say that the later knowledge on the part of the transferee would prevent time running in his favour. Good faith is no longer required on the part of the transferee. Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act XV of 1877 had the words "and afterwards purchased from the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration," while in the present Article 134 the words are "and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration." In Bagas Umarji v. Nathabhai Utamram (1) it was pointed out that the alteration in the language of Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) was a "legislative recognition of the soundness of the view that the Article was intended to give protection to all transferees for value including mortgagees." Therefore, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

COYAJEE, J.—I agree that in the present state of the law it is difficult to give effect to the contention raised on behalf of the appellant, namely, that five or six months after the purchase the second defendant obtained the mortgage-deed itself from Martand and that, therefore, he had knowledge of the nature of his vendor's rights. The learned District Judge in this connection observes :—

"There is, however, nothing to show, and no good reason to believe that the recitals in his sale-deed were made in collusion with him and the mortgage-bond was handed over to him at the time the sale-deed was passed and not subsequently as stated by him. On the whole, therefore, I find upon the strength of the recitals in the sale-deed, that the mortgagee Martand had purported to sell the land as his absolute property and defendant No. 2 had purchased it as such. That being so, the case is governed by Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act."

The learned Judge is right. When a mortgagee sells the mortgaged property as an ostensible owner and there is valuable consideration for the sale, the right of the purchaser becomes unassailable by the mortgagor by the lapse of twelve years from the date of the purchase. The mortgagee may be dishonest, the purchaser may not make any enquiry as to his vendor's title, the mortgagor may be ignorant of the sale of his property by the mortgagee: these facts no longer affect the rights of the purchaser who has given valuable consideration. Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1871) required "good faith" on his part. That condition was, however, removed by Act XV of 1877 and is not re-imposed by Act IX of 1908. The language of the enactment now in force being clear, the plaintiff's suit must fail.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for Mr. Sishan Narain, for the Petitioner.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal purports to be one under the Guardians and Wards Act, and it has arisen under the following circumstances :—

Radha Kishen, appellant, was appointed guardian of the minor, Musammāt Vidya, by an order dated the 25th July 1918. The guardian came into possession of certain ornaments and other properties, both moveable and immovable belonging to the minor. There were certain debts due to the minor which the guardian realized. He also performed the marriage ceremony of the minor and had to incur expenses. Apparently under the provisions of section 34, clause (d) the Court called upon the guardian to file accounts and to deposit into Court whatever may be due to the minor. Upon the statement prepared a sum of Rs. 2,580-8-10 was shown as being due to the minor. The Court ordered this to be deposited, but appended a foot-note to the effect that the sum of Rs. 540 belonged to the guardian himself, having been paid to his account by one Sultani lambirdar. If this foot note were to be given effect to, the sum due to the minor would be Rs. 2,040-8-10 only, but in spite of this note the Court by an oversight made an order directing the guardian to deposit Rs. 2,540-8-10 into Court within a fortnight. This order was made on the 9th July 1921. The present appeal is preferred against this order. On the appeal coming up for hearing the learned Counsel for the respondent raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of it. His objection is that the present order does not come under any of the clauses mentioned in section 47 of the Guardians and Wards Act. Section 43 of the Act provides that "save as provided by the last foregoing section, and by section 622 of the Code of Civil

RAJE UDAJIRAM v. RAJESHWAR.

Procedure, an order made under this Act shall be final, and shall not be liable to be contested by suit or otherwise."

Mr. Kanwar Narain, the learned counsel for the appellant, has argued that the order may possibly come under clause (1) of section 47, as the order amounts to an order regulating the conduct, or proceedings of a guardian. The learned Counsel for the respondent in reply argues that there is a specific provision for such an order to be found in clause (d) of section 34, and no appeal has been given by section 47 against an order made under clause (d). Looking at the several clauses of section 47 it appears rather strange why a right of appeal should not have been given against an order of such importance as the order under appeal in this case, but unless the Legislature chooses to give a right of appeal it is not open to an appellant to prefer an appeal against such an order. In the last resort, Mr. Kanwar Narain has asked me to treat this matter as a revision. Ordinarily, I would be slow to exercise the revisional powers under such circumstances, but in this case there is an apparent mistake on the face of the record which must be corrected. Even Counsel for the respondent admits that there is a clerical mistake and the appellant ought to have been ordered to deposit Rs. 2,040 8-10 and not Rs. 2,540 8-10. I modify the order to this extent in revision. In other respects it will stand. The ad interim order for stay of execution is discharged. No order as to costs.

Messrs. M. K. Padhke and D. W. Kathalay, for the Applicant.

Mr. K. K. Ganthe, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—In Civil Suit No. 19 of 1912 the parties were plaintiff Raje Rajeshwar Trimbak and defendants Raje Gopal Kashirao, minor, Moreshwarrao Ramrao, Laxmanrao, Jagjiwanrao, Devidas and Amrinarao. On 6th May 1914 a compromise petition was put in and accepted by the Court on behalf of the minor defendant No. 1. That compromise petition divided the property in dispute and determined what each of the parties was to get. A decree was passed on the 15th May 1914 purporting to be in accordance with the terms of the compromise. This decree has been acted on. On 12th February 1920 the plaintiff in that suit made an application, purporting to be under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code, stating that there had been a clerical mistake in the decree on the compromise, for in the compromise application it was asked that defendant No. 1 should give notice to the plaintiff and to the other defendants every year in November and should sell by auction the Bazar after consultation with the others present at the auction and should divide the money according to their shares, and that the plaintiff and defendants should sell the mango produce.

RAJES UDARJIRAM C. RAJES. W. R.

in accordance with their share or keep them for their own use. These two matters had, through an oversight, not been entered in the decree in the suit. The applicant asked that they might be entered in the decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise and that the judgment and decree be amended accordingly. The non-applicants contested the application stating that it was not a clerical or arithmetical mistake. The Judge framed the following issues: Whether the omissions in the decree were accidental or intentional? The Judge who framed the decree was examined as the sole witness. He stated: "I see that clauses Nos. 2 and 5 from the application are referred to neither in the judgment nor in the decree. It is not possible for me to say positively from memory why reference to them was omitted from the judgment and the decree. I must have omitted reference to them being of opinion that they related to procedure with regard to enjoyment of certain property laid down for the guidance of the parties themselves. My opinion must have been that this portion could not be a part of the decree to be executed through suit." On this evidence the Judge came to the conclusion that the amendment as prayed for should be made in the decree and did so purporting to act under section 152. Against that order this application for revision has been filed by the first defendant Gopal Rao. Some of the others, namely, the plaintiff Rajeswar, Ramrao, Luxmanrao and Jagjwanrao applied against Gopalrao and Devidas in Civil Revision No. 170-B of 1921.

It is contended that the decree could not be altered under section 152 as the frame of the decree sought to be amended was not due to an accidental slip or omission; that it was not the intention of the parties that all the details of the compromise should find a place in the decree and that the evidence of the Judge shows that the two points now raised were intentionally omitted from the decree, that a long time had passed since the passing of the decree and it should not now be amended. The applicant in his revision case also asked for revision of the order passed complaining that the amended decree invests the non-applicant alone with the power of dividing the sale-proceeds and has not allowed the applicants to auction their share of the Bazar and mango crops separately: in accordance with the compromise the applicants had got that right. I notice from the record that an application to amend the decree by the defendant No. 1 Gopal was made on 23rd November 1914, but this was abandoned on the 17th April 1915.

It is here contended that the decree is not a decree at all because it has not been endorsed on a stamped paper. I am referred to clause (15) of section 2 of the Indian Stamp Act which states that an instrument of partition includes a final order for effecting a partition passed by a Civil Court. It is stated that a decree requires a stamp and it is recoverable under section 45. On the other hand, when an instrument has been admitted in evidence such admission should not, except as provided in section 61, be called in question at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that the instrument has not been duly stamped.* In the present case the decree was passed in 1914, or 8 years ago. It has been acted upon and I do not think now its validity can be called in question on the ground of its not being stamped. I am aware of the decisions in Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Sejoy Chund Mahatap (1), Stamp Reference by the Board of Revenue, In re (2) and Thiruvengadathan Aiyar v. Manjappa (3), but in the present case the difficulty lies in the fact that the decree has been executed and though a document may be inadmissible in evidence it does not follow that it is invalid. It seems to me it is too late at this stage to call for a decree upon a properly stamped paper. On the other hand, it seems to me fairly obvious that the omission to mention the Bazar or mango rights in the compromise decree was not due to a clerical or arithmetical mistake and, therefore, section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply. Nor does, in my opinion, section 151 cover the case. The parties allowed a decree to be enforced for six years before any of them really attempted to get it changed and I think they are now bound by its terms.

I set aside the amended order of the lower Court. In Civil Revision No 105 B of 1921 the applicant will get his costs from the non-

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of Rs. 447.89. The claim was originally made against the East Indian Railway Company, but the plaint was subsequently amended and the Secretary of State for India in Council was also impleaded as a co-defendant, the reason being that the parcel in respect of which the claim was preferred had been carried also on the N. W. State Railway. The following facts will disclose the nature of the claim:—

The plaintiff was the endorsee for value of one box of scent under Railway Receipt
No. 303109—D, dated the 11th July 1920, from Karachi to Delhi. The plaintiff went to take delivery of the parcel from the Railway Authorities at Delhi, but finding that there was a deficiency of half a seer in weight called upon the authorities to open the parcel, compare the contents with the lists contained in the beejak and effect, what is technically called, an open delivery. As the Railway Authorities refused to give an open delivery the plaintiff did not take delivery of the consignment and left the parcel with the defendants. It may be mentioned that before the parcel was weighed the plaintiff had given a clear receipt after paying freight, etc. The plaint also stated that the parcel had arrived in a pilfered condition. Paragraph 5 of the plaint states the cause of action for the claim in the following words:—

"Cause of action arose at Delhi in July 1920 when goods were found in a pilfered condition and plaintiff was not allowed to compare it with the beejak."

The detail of the claim is given in the plaint as follows:—

	Rs.	A.	P.
Value of scent	...	380	11 3
Railway freight	...	8	4 0
Terminal tax	...	0	3 6
10 per cent. profit	...	58	6 0
TOTAL	...	447	8 9

The claim was resisted mainly on the following grounds, namely:—(1) that the consignment had arrived at Delhi in good condition and was delivered accordingly; (2) that the plaintiff took delivery of the consig-ment under a clear receipt and paid the freight Rs. 8.40 due on it at Delhi on the 21st July 1921, but subsequently he refused to remove the consignment as the contents of the parcel were not compared with the beejak in his possession, and (3) that section
75 (1) of the Indian Railway Companies Act absolutely exonerated the North Western Railway from all liability in the transaction.

The following issues were framed by the Judge of the Small Cause Court:—

(1) Are the goods in this case such as are exempted under section 75 (1) and the Railway is not liable?

(2) Did the plaintiff take delivery on a clear receipt and refused to take up the goods afterwards?

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. SHAM LAL DEOKI NANDAN.

(3) Or, did the plaintiff deliver the Railway receipt and sign the register in pursuance of the practice of the Railway by which every owner of goods is bound to tender the Railway receipt and sign the Railway register before he is allowed access to the goods?

(4) If the plaintiff is entitled to his claim, what are the damages suffered by him?

On the first issue the learned Judge held that the consignment consisted of perfumery and was not excepted under clause (g) of Schedule II, that it did not require to be insured and that, therefore, the Railway was not absolved on that ground alone. It is common ground that the goods were despatched at Railway risk. On the second issue the finding is, that the outer case of the parcel was in good condition, and that there was a deficiency of half a seer in weight. The contents were examined and compared with the original invoice of Messrs. Zenobia, Limited, by the Commissioner appointed by the Court and it was found that two items out of No. 502 and three items out of No. 504 were missing. The Court was of opinion that the Railway Authorities were not justified in refusing to give an open delivery merely because the outer condition of the parcel was good. Finally, the Court arrived at the conclusion that, in the ordinary course, if the Railway had agreed to give open delivery the liability would have extended merely to the extent of the deficiency, but as the goods were on Railway risk and as there was a deficiency of half a seer in weight, the plaintiff was justified in refusing to take delivery and that the Railway was liable for the amount claimed. The claim was accordingly decreed, and the Secretary of State has come up in revision to this Court. Two pleas are taken in the petition for revision, namely, (1) that the defendants were not bound to offer open delivery and that the plaintiffs were bound to accept delivery as tendered, and (2) that the goods in question were excepted articles under Schedule II of the Indian Railways Act, 1890.

This last plea, has, however, been abandoned and has not been pressed by Mr. Jai Lal, Assistant Legal Membrancer. The only question that has been pressed and requires determination is that contained in plea No. 1. What I have to decide is, whether the refusal by the Railway Authorities to effect what is called an open delivery gave any cause of action to the plaintiff for the present claim. There is no provision in the Railways Act making it incumbent upon a Railways Company to effect an open delivery, nor has any rule or regulation been brought to my notice, according to which the plaintiff could insist upon the Railway Authorities to open the parcel and compare its contents with the items given in the beejak in his possession. The plaintiff, therefore, was not justified in refusing to take delivery of the parcel and then to prefer the claim for the price of the goods. In support of this view I may cite the case of Jwal Pershad and Co. v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway (1). The facts of that case were almost similar to those of the present case. The learned Judge, who decided the reported case, made the following observation with reference to the facts of the case.

"The question is, whether or not the Railway Company has committed any wrong by reason of which damage has accrued to the plaintiff. The wrong alleged is the refusal to grant the 'open delivery.' The learned Vakil for the plaintiff is unable to show me any rule of the law or any rule of the Railway under which, in circumstances like the present, a consignee can demand that the Railway Company shall open a consignment and allow him to examine it before giving up the Railway receipt..... It seems to me that the plaintiff's action, though entirely bona fide, was mistaken. What he ought to have done was to enter on the back of the receipt the fact that the actual weight was less than that entered in this receipt and also the fact that the Goods Clerk had refused to open and examine the consignment. He should then have signed the receipt, tendered the freight and taken delivery. It would then have been open to him to examine..... either at the Goods Shed... or elsewhere and he then would have had a good case... for recovery of damages for the loss sustained, if any. The consignment was carried at Railway risk. Instead of doing this, the plaintiff himself refused to take delivery."

As already observed, the plaintiff has no cause of action to maintain the suit according to law.

HANS RAJ v. SOMNI.

I, therefore, allow this application for revision and set aside the decision of the Court below. The plaintiff, however, is entitled to the price of the items discovered to be missing. I, therefore, grant a decree for the price of the two items out of No. 502 and three items out of No. 504 of the bsej sh. The amount due to the plaintiff will be determined in the execution proceedings. As the suit, however, as put in the plaint, fails, the plaintiff must pay the costs throughout. The result is, that the decree of the Court below is modified.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Gorakhpur, reversing a decree of the City Munsif.

Mr. S. S. Sastry for Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Lawry Saran and Harnanjan Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a house situated in Gorakhpur city. The house was originally an enclosure, belonging to Chunni. Chunni died leaving two widows, Musammât Pati and Musammât Somni, and a daughter, Musammât Ganga Dei. In 1910 a partition took place whereby the disputed enclosure was allotted to the share of Musammât Pati. On the 7th of September 1914 Musammât Pati mortgaged that land with Hansraj for Rs. 150 stating that Rs. 25 out of the same were required for the repairs of her own dwelling house and Rs. 125 for giving a caste dinner in connection with the death ceremonies of her husband. Her husband had died about 4 years earlier. The Court of first instance found that Rs. 25 had been borrowed for the purpose of repairing the dwelling house occupied by Musammât Pati, which was in a dilapidated condition, but there was no legal necessity for borrowing Rs. 125 for giving a caste dinner. It, however, awarded Rs. 600 to the mortgagee on account of the cost of constructing a house over the disputed land after the mortgage. On appeal the Additional District Judge came to the conclusion that there was no legal necessity whatever for the mortgage and that the mortgagee was not entitled to claim the cost incurred by him in constructing a house on the disputed land. He accordingly allowed the claim and directed the defendant to remove the materials of the house constructed by him, within two months from the date of the decree. The defendants have come here in second appeal and the main points argued on their behalf are: (1) that on the facts found the mortgagee was entitled to claim Rs. 150, the entire amount lent by him to Musammât Pati, and (2) that in any event he was entitled to the value of the improvements made by him under section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882).

With regard to the first point it is stated by the learned Additional District Judge that Musammât Pati's means were sufficient to enable her to repair the house, which she was occupying, and that the caste dinner had already been given by Musammât Somni within a fortnight of the death of her husband. In view of those facts it can hardly be said that there was any legal necessity for Musammât Pati to have borrowed the money for repairing the house or to give another dinner to the people of her caste in response to their wishes in the matter. The learned Additional District Judge observes that it was usual and perhaps the duty of the widows to give a caste dinner soon after the death of their husband and that such a feast had been given by Musammât Somni. We are not, therefore, in a position to say that a second feast was necessary and that the mortgage was justified.

With regard to the second point, section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application. It applies only to the case of a transferee of immoveable property, who makes any improvement in the property, believing in good faith, that he is absolutely entitled thereto. But in the case of a Hindu widow a person dealing with her would ordinarily know that she has only a life-interest and he can reasonably be expected to make enquiries as to whether there was any legal necessity for the mortgage and whether the widow had any right to make the transfer. The mortgagee cannot be said here to have acted in good faith in dealing with such a widow so as to affect more than her life interest. The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants relies on the decision in Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Ram Ratan Sahu (1), but in that case the sale was held to have been partially made for legal necessity, and the improvements made consisted of the erection of seven or eight big tanks and the construction of a dyke for the purpose of irrigation, which had the effect of permanently increasing the rental value of the disputed property. Musammât Pati is dead and her interest has reverted now to the plaintiff by survivorship. It is not necessary to enter into the other questions raised in this appeal.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants asks for three months time for removing the materials of the house constructed by the defendant-appellants.

The appeal is dismissed except in so far that we extend the time for the removal of the materials to three months from the date of the decree of this Court. The defendants-appellants will bear their own costs and pay those of the plaintiff-respondent.

Where a Sub-Registrar has attested under section 33(2) of the Registration Act a power-of-attorney, purporting to be executed by a parda-nashin lady, it will be presumed that he was satisfied that it had been voluntarily executed by the lady; but a presumption is only a rule of evidence which throws the onus on the other side; and it is of no avail where there is evidence on the record which would lead the Court to the conclusion that there was not evidence sufficient to satisfy the Registrar that the power-of-attorney was voluntarily executed by the parda-nashin lady. All powers-of-attorney should be construed strictly. [p. 317, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya.

Messrs. Manuk and S. N. Roy, for the Appellants.

RAM LAL SINGH v. BISI SHAHRUNNISA.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmed and B. C. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAK, J.—This appeal comes before us from the judgment of the learned District Judge of Gaya and arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs against the defendants to enforce two mortgage-bonds executed by the defendant No. 1 through her attorney, Abdul Hakim. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiffs a mortgage-decree against the defendant No. 1 but on appeal the learned District Judge has reversed the decision of the Court of first instance.

The mortgage-bonds, as I have mentioned, were executed by the lady through her attorney Abdul Hakim. The question which was debated before the Courts below was whether the lady had in fact executed the power-of-attorney in favour of her husband, Abdul Hakim, and whether the documents were read and explained to the lady. The validity of the documents was also called into question and it was argued on behalf of the lady that there was a distinct violation of the provisions of section 33 of the Registration Act. The learned District Judge differing from the Court of first instance came to the conclusion that there was such a violation and that it followed that the power-of-attorney was not executed and authenticated in accordance with law.

Section 33 of the Registration Act lays down that "If the principal, at the time of executing the power of attorney, resides in any part of British India in which this Act is for the time being in force, a power-of-attorney executed before and authenticated by the Registrar or Sub-Registrar within whose district or sub-district the principal resides shall alone be recognised in Courts of law." The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the power-of-attorney on which the plaintiffs rely was not executed in accordance with paragraph (a) of section 33 of the Registration Act, but then he entirely ignored the provisions of the proviso to that section which provides that amongst other persons "persons exempt by law from personal appearance in Court shall not be required to attend at any Registration Office or Court for the purpose of executing any such power-of-attorney as is mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of this section." The defendant No. 1 is admittedly a parda nashin lady and accordingly is exempt by law from personal appearance in Court. She could not, therefore, execute the power-of-attorney in the manner provided by paragraph (a) of section 33 of the Registration Act. Paragraph (2) of section 33 gives the procedure which should be adopted by the Registrar in cases where persons exempt by law from personal appearance in Court are concerned. That paragraph provides that "In every such case the Registrar or Sub-Registrar or Magistrate (as the case may be), if satisfied that the power-of-attorney has been voluntarily executed by the person purporting to be the principal, may attest the same without requiring his personal attendance at the office or Court aforesaid." In my opinion, provided the plaintiffs have established that the Sub-Registrar did attest the document after being satisfied that the power-of-attorney was voluntarily executed by the defendant No. 1, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed so far as this point is concerned. Unfortunately the learned District Judge did not consider the question whether the Sub-Registrar was so satisfied and whether he attested the document after being so satisfied. Mr. Manuk on behalf of the appellants urges that since the Sub-Registrar did attest a power-of-attorney it ought to be presumed that he was satisfied that it had been voluntarily executed by the person purporting to be the principal. There is great force in the argument but still a presumption is only a rule of evidence which throws the onus on the other side and there may be evidence on the record which would lead the Court below to the conclusion that there was not evidence sufficient to satisfy the Sub-Registrar that the power-of-attorney was voluntarily executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of her husband. While I hold that the decision of the learned District Judge is wrong on this point, I am clearly of opinion that the case must go back in order to enable the learned District Judge to decide whether the Sub-Registrar attested the power of attorney after being satisfied that it had been voluntarily executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of her husband.

There is another point on which the learned District Judge has decided this appeal in favour of the respondents, viz. the power-of attorney gave authority to Abdul Hakim "to execute and admit its execution before the Registering Officer all sorts of deeds as sale, mortgage lease, bonds etc. etc. and do the needful in the Registration Office;" The learned District Judge is of opinion that such a power-of-attorney has to be construed strictly and I entirely agree with him that all powers of attorney have always to be construed very strictly. But when the learned District Judge says that a power to execute a mortgage does not carry with it the power to incur any loan I entirely differ from him. Mr. Sultan Ahmed, appearing on behalf of the respondents, has relied upon the case of Roy Badha Kissen v. Nauratan Lal (1). That was a case where it was held that a power to sign a mortgage-bond did not carry with it a power to enter into a mortgage transaction. I entirely agree with the view which was taken in that case. It is worthy of note that in that case a distinction was drawn between a power to sign a document and a power to execute a document. In my opinion the power to execute a document carries with it the necessary powers to enter into the transaction itself.

The other points have all been decided by the learned District Judge in favour of the appellants; but there is another question which he did not decide. It was contended in the Court of first instance on behalf of the defendants that, assuming it be held that the defendant No. 1 did execute the power of attorney, the document was not read over and explained to her and that she did not understand what the nature of the document was.

The learned Munsif dealt with this question at very great length and came to the conclusion that the power of attorney was in fact read out and explained to the defendant No. 1 and that she understood the nature of that document. The learned District Judge has, however, not dealt with the question. It is obvious that this question must be investigated by the Court below.

In the result, then, I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree passed by the Court below and remand the case to that Court for decision after a consideration of the two points which I have mentioned in my judgment. Costs to abide the result.

COURTS, J.—I agree.

*Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 5, 75 (3)—District Court, power of, to grant review—Appeal from order granting review—High Court when will

A District Judge acting under the Provincial Insolvency Act has power to review his own order, because section 5 of that Act gives a District Judge, when sitting as an Appellate Court, the same powers under the Code of Civil Procedure which he would have had if he had been sitting to hear an ordinary appeal. [p. 318, col. 1.]

Though an appeal lies to the High Court under section 75 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, from an order granting a review of judgment, yet the Court in dealing with such an appeal should be guided by the principles laid down in the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 318, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Aligarh.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Perry Lal Benrji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Court of the District Judge of Aligarh sitting in insolvency had before it an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of that place in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction, by which certain questions arising under section 4 of the Insolvency Act, No. V of 1920, had been decided in favour of the Receiver in bankruptcy for the benefit of the general body of creditors. The District Judge did not hear or dispose of the appeal on the merits. He recorded a finding, if it can be called a finding, that the questions raised by the pleadings of the parties in this matter were of such a nature that they ought to be decided by a regular suit and not in the course of insolvency proceedings. On this ground alone he allowed the appeal, set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and gave certain directions to the Receiver. A little more than two weeks later the Receiver petitioned the District Judge pointing out, in the first place, that it was impossible for him to comply precisely with the directions which had been given him. In issuing those directions the District Judge had overlooked the fact that possession had passed under the transaction which the Receiver was seeking to impugn, so that a suit for a mere declaration would not be maintainable. The Receiver asked the District Judge, in effect, to re-consider his own position and submitted that the view which the District Judge had taken regarding the powers and duties of an Insolvency Court in a matter of this sort was a mistaken one and not in accordance with the latest decisions of this Court. Reference has since been made to the case of Shakri Prasad v. Hofts Aziz Ali (1) which was published after the District Judge had passed his first order on the appeal. The District Judge issued notice to the opposite party and, after hearing both parties, passed an order granting a review of his own previous judgment and fixing a date for hearing and determining the appeal on the merits. We have before us an appeal against that order, and a number of legal objections have been raised on both sides. We are content to say that, in our opinion, the District Judge had jurisdiction to review his own order, because section 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, No. V of 1920, gave him when sitting as an Appellate Court, the same powers under the Code of Civil Procedure which he would have had if he had been sitting to hear any ordinary appeal. On the other hand, it has been questioned before us whether there is any right of appeal from this order granting review of judgment, or whether, assuming such right to exist, it is not bounded by the provisions of rule 7, Order XLVII, of the Civil Procedure Code. We may note that the appeal before us does not purport to be preferred under Order XLII, rule 1(w), of the Code of Civil Procedure, but under section 75 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, No. V of 1920, the leave of the District Court having been obtained for the purpose. We think, however, in dealing with an appeal of this sort, we ought in any case to be guided by the principles laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure. We are satisfied that the first order passed by the District Judge on the appeal before him was a mistaken and unfortunate order and that it was proper in the interests of justice that he should proceed to hear and dispose of the appeal before him on the merits, as he is anxious to do. He will have full jurisdiction in the matter when he comes to hear the appeal, and if in his opinion there has been anything unsatisfactory in the procedure of the Subordinate Judge sitting as a Trial Court, that is a matter which can be considered and gone into at the hearing of the appeal. We are further satisfied that under the Code of Civil Procedure this order granting a review of judgment could not be questioned under any of the provisions of rule 7 of Order XLVII of that Code. On the whole, the conclusion we come to is that the order in question granting review is not one with which we ought to interfere.

The result is that we dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 144—Restitution—Execution proceedings—Suit for relief of restitution, whether may be treated as proceedings.

Although a suit for restitution is barred by section 144 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, yet where such a suit is instituted it can be treated as proceeding, under section 47 (2) because an application for restitution is in substance a proceeding in execution.

Appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, dated the 28th of February 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 20 of 1921.

Mr. G. M. Pande, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. D. Kale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The present appellants obtained a decree against the plaintiff for possession of a house. This decree was reversed in appeal but before that happened defendants took possession. The plaintiff applied to the Court of first instance for restitution but only got possession of the vacant site. He now sues for recovery of Rs. 150 for damages on account of materials of the house taken away by the defendants and Rs. 50 for damages for injury caused to his adjoining house.

The defendants denied the alleged removal of the materials and damages and contended that plaintiff's remedy was by an application for restitution to the Executing Court and not by a separate suit. The First Court held that the costs of the materials removed by the present appellants amounted to Rs. 100 but found that the suit was barred by sub-section 2 of section 144, Civil Procedure Code, and dismissed the suit. On appeal the amount of damages has been confirmed but the lower Appellate Court finds that though the relief was restitution and the case primarily falls under section 144, it is yet one relating to the execution of the decree and as such will also fall under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and as under that section the Court has the power to treat a suit as a proceeding or a proceeding as a suit, it treated the present suit as a proceeding and confirmed the payment of Rs. 100 as damages by the defendants to the plaintiff. The defendants now appeal.

It is contended here that sub-section (2), section 144, Civil Procedure Code, bars the suit. This is doubtless true. It is also contended that the case cannot fall within section 47, Civil Procedure Code. But there is authority for the view adopted by the learned Additional District Judge, namely, Balvantrav Ose v. Sadrudin (1), Narayana Patter v. Gopalakrishna Patter (2) and Hamidali v. Ahmelalli (3) and Saran v. Bhagwan (4). The case of Jamini Nath Roy v. Dharma Das Sur (5) though quoted by the appellants in the present case is really in favour of the view argued for the respondent. It seems to me that though applications for restitution may have to be brought under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, yet they are in substance execution proceedings and as such cognizable by the Executing Court. I think they also come under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and suits under that section can be treated as execution proceedings and proceedings as a suit. That is what the Additional District Judge had the power to do and which he has exercised in the present case.

It is contended that the lower Appellate Court has not in dealing with the question of damages dealt with all the evidence. There are two witnesses for the appellants: one has been obviously considered and the other who is a defendants' servant says nothing about the value of the house. There is thus no force in this contention.

But I think there is some ground in the argument that, as the suit was treated as Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Hindu temple—Suit by worshipper for declaration—Sanction, whether necessary.

A Hindu entitled to worship in a temple is not competent, as such, to maintain a suit for possession of property alleged to belong to the temple, as prima facie it is only the trustees who can claim that relief. But he can sue for a declaration that a certain property is trust property attached to the temple and no sanction is necessary under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, to bring such a suit. [p.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 17th ordinate Judge, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 16th February 1915.

No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen are briefly as follows:—On the 12th of October 1907 one Charan Das, chela of Gobind
Das, asadh bairagi, of Nakodar, sold a certain house to Bassao Mal. On the 13th of October 1913 Mul Raj, Salig
Ram and Raja Ram, sons of Badhawa, Brahmans of Nakodar, instituted this suit against Bassao Mal and Charan Das in which they asked for a decree for possession of the "open space" in suit after removal of the materials thereon, or, in the alternative, for a decree to the effect that the said "open space" together with the materials thereon was the property and in possession of a certain temple, and that the possession of the said property should be made over to the said temple after the sale in question had been set aside. As to the first prayer, it was claimed that the plaintiffs' ancestors had made this particular property in suit dharm arth to provide for the expenses of the temple in Bhallian street and that, therefore, the property being dharm arth Charan Das, the man in charge, was not entitled to sell it. The Courts below have held that the property in suit was not at any time the property of the plaintiffs' ancestors and had not been dedicated for religious purposes by them. This question has not been re-opened and need not be further considered. As to the prayer in the alternative, the primary Court having decided the case on the first point gave no finding. The learned District Judge, however, came to the conclusion that before the plaintiffs could institute the suit, assuming the property to pertain to a religious institution, it was necessary for them to obtain the necessary sanction laid down by section 92, Civil Procedure Code. Against this decision the plaintiffs have preferred this second appeal through Mr. Nanak Chand, and we have heard Bakbshi Tek Chand on behalf of the respondents.

DURGA PRASAD C. BABU LAL.

Our attention has been drawn to the fact that the learned District Judge has confused two houses. One house is the house in which there is a gurdwara, and the other house is the one in suit. A reference to the judgment of the learned District Judge at page 9, lines 1 to 7 of the printed book, indicates that there had been some confusion as alleged. The muafi referred to was not granted in connection with the house in suit but in connection with the house in which there is a gurdwara, and this house is not in suit. In face of this confusion the finding of the learned District Judge at line 1, page 9, of the printed book that the property having descended from guru to chela is, therefore, religious in character, is one that requires re-consideration.

With regard to the applicability of section 92, Civil Procedure Code, Mr. Tek Chand admitted that if the claim was merely confined to a declaration that the property in suit was dharm arth and, therefore, not alienable, the plaintiffs could sue without recourse to section 92. He, however, contended that, inasmuch as possession of the temple was also asked for this further prayer brought the suit within the purview of section 92, Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Nanak Chand, however, contended that this further prayer was a mere surplusage and might, and should, be regarded as such. Now, it seems to us that the plaintiffs could not, as worshippers, sue for possession, as prima facie it is only the trustee who could claim that relief. The plaintiffs, however, can sue for a declaration, and to such a suit section 92 has no application. We held, therefore, that no sanction was necessary under section 92 for a suit for a declaration and, as the learned District Judge has confused the two properties, we consider that there should be a re-hearing of the appeal before him.

We accordingly accept this appeal and return the case to the Court below who will re-hear the appeal so far as the claim for a declaration is concerned and come to a definite finding thereon. Costs in this Court will follow the event.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Tender of money with application to set aside sale—Tender, whether application—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 4, applicability of.

RAJARAM SITARAM V. JAGANNATH GOVINDRAO YESHWANTRAO.

The terms of section 4 of the Limitation Act are wide enough to cover an application of every kind, which a man is called upon to make in Court.

A tender of money made with an application under O. XXI, r. 89, for the setting aside of a sale is in itself an application offering to pay the money and is, therefore, governed by section 4 of the Limitation Act.

Civil revision from an order of the First Additional Judge, Aligarh.

Mr. M. L. Agarwal, for the Applicant.
Mr. E. B. Dang, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision for the discharge of an order setting aside a sale held in execution of a decree under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The sale took place on the 25th August 1920. The Civil Courts closed for the vacation on the 16th September 1920 and re-opened on the 25th October 1920. On that date an application was made by the judgment debtor for setting aside the sale. He filed with the application a tender offering the amount mentioned in the proclamation of sale with the compensation payable to the auction-purchaser. But his tender could not be signed by the presiding Judge of the court concerned that day and the actual payment of the money was not, therefore, made till the next day, though the applicant was ready to pay it on the day on which the tender was made. The Court below accepted the application and set aside the sale.

The learned Counsel who appears for the auction purchaser contends that the deposit should have been made within thirty days from the date of the auction-sale and that the judgment-debtor was not entitled to the benefit of section 4 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) so as to allow him to make the same after the re-opening of the Court. The terms of section 4 are wide enough to cover an application of every kind, which a man is called upon to make in Court. An application asking for the setting aside of the sale under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Code of Civil Procedure had been duly made on the date the Court re-opened. It was accompanied by a tender which in itself was an application offering to pay the money required as a preliminary to the setting aside of the sale.

Section 4 would govern that application also. The Court below rightly held that the delay in the payment was not due to any fault of the judgment-debtor. The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Khoti Settlement Act (I of 1880), s. 21—Entry in Settlement Register, whether final—Decision of Recording Officer, binding effect of—"Such decision or entry," meaning of.

It is nowhere provided in the Khoti Settlement Act, 1880, that the mere entry in the Settlement Register of the name of a particular person as the occupant of a Survey Number is either final and conclusive, or that it is binding upon all parties concerned unless and until it is reversed or modified by a decree of the Civil Court. [p. 324, col. 1.]

Under section 21 of that Act, it is the decision of the Recording Officer which is made binding, and not a mere entry of a person's name in the Settlement Register. [p. 324, col. 2.]

The expression "such decision or entry" in section 21 of the Act means, such decision or the entry which is the result of such decision. [p. 324, col. 2.]

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

COYAJEE, J.—The plaintiff in this case and the twelfth defendant are Khotas of Mouje Kosumb in the Ratnagiri District. The defendants Nos 1 to 11 are members of a family named Potphode. The plaintiff brought the suit which has given rise to this appeal to recover possession of lands comprised in Survey No. 269, Falni No. 4, alleging that he was the owner thereof, that they formed part of his Khoti Khasagi estate and that the Potphode defendants had unlawfully dispossessed him of the same.

The third defendant was the only party who contested this claim in the Trial Court. He denied the plaintiff's title and possession as alleged, and asserted that the said lands belonged to, and were continuously enjoyed by, members of the Potphode family. He further contended that the suit lands were entered in the village Botkhat in the name of some members of his family; that the plaintiff did not get such entry reversed or modified by the decree of a competent Court within the period prescribed by law, and that, therefore, the entry had become binding upon the plaintiff.

The first two issues framed by the Trial Court related to the questions whether the plaintiff had proved his title and his possession within the twelve years preceding the commencement of this suit. The third issue was: whether the said entry in the Botkhat was a "decision" within the meaning of section 21 of the Khoti Settlement Act, 1880, so as "to give finality against plaintiff, and what would be its effect?"

The learned Judge held that the plaintiff had satisfactorily established his title and also his possession within the twelve years immediately preceding the suit; and that the entry in the Botkhat was not such a "decision" as was contemplated by section 21, and was, therefore, not binding upon the plaintiff. He, therefore, granted the reliefs claimed in the plaint.

From that decree an appeal was preferred to the District Court, not by the third defendant, but by the defendants Nos. 2, 9 and 19 who, until then, had taken no part in the proceedings. The appeal, however, failed, the learned Judge recording his complete agreement with the findings made by the Trial Court.

The original defendants Nos. 2, 3, 9 and 10 have now brought this appeal here and it is contended on their behalf that the entry in question has become binding upon the plaintiff according to the provisions of the said section 21.

For the determination of this question it becomes necessary to examine the material provisions of sections 16 to 21 which come under Part III of the said Act.

Section 16 provides that the Settlement Register prepared under section 108 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, shall show whether a particular Survey Number is held by a privileged occupant or not; and if it is held by one or more privileged occupants, then the said register shall further specify (1) the tenure; (2) the names of the occupants; and (3) in the case of land held by a permanent tenant whether his interest therein is transferable otherwise than by inheritance or not. In this case the entry in question does specify the names of some members of the Potphode family as the occupants of the suit lands. By section 17 it is provided that the other records prepared under the said section 108 shall specify the description and amount of rent payable to the Khot. These two sections (16 and 17) are headed "Settlement Records."

Sections 18 to 21 fall under a different heading. "Custody and Amendment of Records: Determination of Disputes". Section 18 deals with the custody and amendment of the Settlement Register, and here I do not overlook sub-section (3) (c).

Then section 19 (1) enacts that—

"If it appears to the Recording Officer that there exists any dispute as to any matter which he is bound to record, or as to any amendment proposed to be made under section 18, he may, either on the application of any of the disputant parties, or of his own motion, investigate and decide such dispute, and frame or amend the Settlement Register or other record accordingly."

It is only when a dispute arises as to any matter which the Recording Officer is bound to record that he proceeds to "investigate" it in the manner provided in sub-section (2); as a result of such investigation he arrives at his "decision" and he has then to "frame or amend the Settlement Register or other record accordingly," i. e., to make an entry in accordance with the result of his decision.

Section 20 enacts that entries recording (1) certain facts regarding the interest of a permanent tenant, or (2) the liability of a privileged occupant to pay rent, shall be

"conclusive and final evidence of the fact or liability so recorded."

Lastly, it is provided by section 21 that "in any other matter" the decision of the Recording Officer shall be binding upon all the parties affected thereby until reversed or modified by a final decree of a competent Court.

It becomes clear then that—these being the only sections bearing on the question—the Act nowhere provides that the mere entry in the Settlement Register of the name of a particular person as the occupant of a Survey Number is either final and conclusive, or that it is binding upon all parties concerned unless and until it is reversed or modified by a decree of the Civil Court. In support of his contention Mr. Desai, who has presented the appellants' case with care and ability, appeals to the provisions of section 21. But what is made binding by these provisions is the decision of the Recording Officer and not a mere entry of a person's name in the Settlement Register. As observed by Scott, C. J., in Mahomed Ibrahim v. Ali Mahomed Ali Pangarkar, Second Appeal No. 850 of 1914, decided by Scott, C. J., and Shah, J., on the 12th July 1915: "it seems to us quite clear that the word 'decision' refers to a determination of a dispute either in the presence or not in the presence of parties such as is referred to in section 19." And as there, so in this case, "there is no indication that any such dispute had arisen for the decision of the Recording Officer." In Bhiva Bhika Chokekar v. Babu Balshet Bathate (1), Hayward, J., interpreted section 21 thus:—

"Now that section makes conclusive certain decisions of the officer defined as the Recording Officer. What those decisions are is to be gathered from the preceding sections and a perusal of those preceding sections seems to me to make it clear that the mere entry of the name of some particular person as occupant was not intended to be included among those decisions of the Recording Officer."

I am of the same opinion. The Act does not invest a mere entry, such as we have here, with any degree of finality; and much could be said in favour of the view that the Legislature has deliberately refrained from giving to it that effect. Mr. Desai has, however, urged that the proviso to section 21 favours his contention. But it seems to me that the expression "such decision or entry" occurring there means no more than "such decision or the entry which is the result of such decision." Reference may in this connection be made to the material words in section 19 (1) which are that, "the Recording Officer may investigate and decide such dispute, and frame or amend the Settlement Register accordingly."

Finally, it was contended for the appellants that the entry in question may be regarded as a "decision" of the Recording Officer based upon a consent of all parties affected thereby. The argument derives no support either from the language of sections 19 and 21, or from the decisions referred to above. It is, however, sufficient to say that this contention was not placed before the lower Courts and it cannot, therefore, be allowed to be raised here for the first time in this second appeal.

I would for these reasons affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Raipur, dated the 27th April 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 3 of 1921.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the judgment of the First Court a finding is recorded that the amount privately tendered was Rs. 3,300. The judgment on this point is contradictory and the finding would almost certainly have been set aside if it had been considered in the lower Appellate Court. The matter was contested in the appeal to that Court, but was not considered and the finding of the First Court was accepted as stated. It has not been mentioned in the memorandum of grounds of appeal to this Court, and we have, therefore, to assume that the appellant has accepted the finding. We are concerned, then, only with the question of the money deposited on the 5th of August 1919, which was Rs. 3,352-9-0.

If interest for the months intercalated in the first and fourth years of the continuance of the mortgage is included, as was agreed in the mortgage bond, the amount due on it on the date of the deposit was Rs. 3,355-15-0, or Rs. 3-6-0 more than the amount deposited. This deficiency was only discovered during the course of this suit. When the plaintiffs appeared in answer to the notice of the deposit sent to them under section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act the only reason they gave for refusing to accept it as sufficient was that it did not include interest up to the date on which they were summoned to appear in Court; it was never suggested that it was not the full amount due for principal and interest on the date on which the deposit was made. Even in the pleadings in this suit and in the deposition of the second defendant it is not suggested that the deposit was insufficient on the day it was made and it is admitted that the only reason for its refusal was that it was insufficient on the date of hearing.

It must then, I think, be taken to have been admitted by the plaintiffs as a fact in the proceedings under section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act that the deposit was of the full amount due on the date it was made. It was argued by their learned Counsel in this Court that no admission of the sufficiency of the amount would make it sufficient if it was not so in fact. This is not correct. The plaintiffs were entitled to accept as sufficient to satisfy their mortgage any sum less than the amount which would be found due on a mathematically exact calculation of the amount due on it. Their admission of sufficiency would also include admissions of one or more of a number of facts such as previous payment. It is to be presumed that they made a correct calculation of the amount due to them on the date of the deposit, and after making allowance for any small sum that might have been paid or might be due by them to the mortgagor or might be remitted or intentionally neglected by them, came to the conclusion that that amount was Rs. 3,352-9-0 or less. Otherwise, they would have said that more than that sum was due to them even on the date the deposit was made. Under the principle embodied in Explanation IV of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code the plaintiffs cannot now be heard to say that the amount deposited on the 5th of August 1919 was less than the sum due to them on the mortgage on that date.

In these circumstances, the plaintiffs are entitled to get a decree for Rs. 3,352-9-0 only, and that sum was deposited in Court for payment to them on the 5th of August 1919. This suit was, therefore, totally unnecessary, and the plaintiffs must pay all the costs incurred in it by the contesting defendants. The period allowed for redemption will be extended by another six months, that is, up to the 16th of December 1922. The decree of the lower Appellate Court has, therefore, to be modified by the substitution for Rs. 4,023-8-3, the amount declared due on account of principal, interest and costs on the date fixed for payment, of Rs. 3,352-9-0 minus the costs incurred by the defendants transferees (Nos. 8 to 12) in all three Courts in this litigation.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O VIII, r. 6—Set-off—Counter-claim—Difference—"Money due"— Unascertained damages.

Set-off and counter-claim are governed by rules of procedure which must be construed strictly. [p.
327, col. 2.]

A set-off can be pleaded as a defence and can only arise where the claim to be set-off one against the other whether by plaintiff or defendant exists in the same right. The principle on which an equitable set-off can be allowed is that the claim on which it is based must arise from the same transaction which is the subject-matter of the plaintiff's suit, and it is only when a claim for damages, for instance, forms the subject-matter of a counter-claim that it makes no difference whether damages are based on a claim arising on the subject-matter of the suit or are based on some transaction which is entirely outside the plaintiff's claim. [p. 327, col. 2; p. 328,
col. 1.]

Though every set-off can be pleaded as a counter-claim, if a defendant so desires, every counter-claim cannot be pleaded as a set-off. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance to keep separate the questions of set-off and counter-claim when a defendant seeks to claim as a set-off not money due but an unascertained sum for damages. [p. 328, col. 1.]

A counter-claim is bad when it cannot form the subject-matter of a separate suit in the Court trying the suit in which it is pleaded [p. 328, col. 1.]

Where a defendant pleaded a set-off on the basis of an Article of Association, by which the plaintiff was bound and which ran as follows "The directors may deduct from the dividend or bonus payable to any shareholder all sums of money due from him to the company":

Held, that, as the defendant wanted to set off an unascertained sum for damages, it could not be allowed as it was not money due with in the meaning of the above article. [p. 327, col. 1.]

Griendtveen v. Hamlyn & Co., (1892) 8 T. L. R.
231, distinguished.

Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Kaji.

Mr. Inverarity, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kania, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant Company to recover the amount payable to him by way of dividends in respect of the 72nd and 73rd dividends payable on the 5th February 1920 and 19th April 1920, respectively.

In their written statement the defendants claimed that they were entitled to recover damages from the firms of Vithal-das Venkatlal and Trikamdas Purshottam-das in respect of certain cotton contracts.
The joint family of Gulabdas Haridas, of which the plaintiff was the manager, was a partner in these two firms and was liable to pay these damages. Reference was then made in paragraph 7 to Articles 13, 130 and 131 of the Articles of Association. Articles 13 and 130 had nothing to do with plaintiff's claim; but Article 131, entitling the Directors to deduct from the dividend or bonus payable to any shareholder all sums of money due from him to the Company, would be in point, if certain facts were proved. The defendant Company submitted that by reason of the said Articles the plaintiff was not entitled to claim the dividends referred to in paragraphs 3, 6 and 7 of the plaint, and submitted that the suit should be dismissed with costs.
They, then, counter-claimed, in the event of it being held that the amounts of the damages could not be set off against the claim in respect of the dividends, that the plaintiff as the head of the joint family firm of Gulabdas Haridas & Sons might be ordered to pay to the defendant Company a reasonable sum by way of damages on account of the premises mentioned in paragraph 6 of the written statement.

The plaintiff then took out a summons asking for an order that the counter-claim of the defendant Company might be excluded, or that the Court should refuse permission to the defendants to avail themselves of the counter-claim, and require them (if so advised) to file a separate suit in respect thereof. On the 11th June 1921, an order was made on the summons that it should be adjourned to the hearing of the suit, and it was further ordered by the Court that the suit should be put down on the board of the learned Judge peremptorily for the trial of an issue on demurrer. Accordingly, the suit came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Kaji on the 29th July 1921.

Now, the order that was made on the 11th
June 1921 is couched in somewhat unfortunate terms. In the first place, it is not desirable to use the word "demurrer", as demurrer in VITHALDAS GJLABDAS V. HYDERABAD SPINNING & WEAVING CO., LTD.

English Practice has been abolished since the passing of the Judicature Act, while the term has never been recognised in India by any of the Codes of Civil Procedure. It can only be used in India by way of analogy to a bygone English form of procedure. The proper order to have made, following the provisions of the Code, was to direct the suit to be set down for settlement of issues, and when the issues had been settled, it could be seen whether any of the issues were sufficient for the decision of the case under Order XV, rule 3.

There were two questions: (1) whether the counter claim should be struck out; (2) whether, if the counter claim were struck out, the defendant Company would be entitled to set-off their claim. There were two entirely distinct issues, depending, for their decision, upon entirely different considerations; and the confusion which arose from not raising definite issues is apparent when we come to the judgment of the learned Judge because these two questions, which ought to be dealt with separately, are dealt with together, and the decision is that "this issue must be answered in the negative." On that finding an order was drawn up declaring not only that the defendants were entitled to plead by way of defense the facts set out in paragraphs 6, 7 and 8 of their written statement, but were also entitled to maintain the counter claim in the written statement of defense.

I will first deal with the question whether the counter claim should be struck off. Now it is admitted that if the defendants were to file a separate suit on the subject matter of the counter claim, this Court would have no jurisdiction to try such a suit. Therefore, it is quite clear that the counter claim must be struck out.

Then, there is the question whether the defendant Company can set-off against the plaintiff's claim for dividends their claim for damages under the contracts referred to in paragraph 6 of the written statement. It is obvious that this question must be answered in the negative, because, under Article 131, the Directors can only deduct from the dividend or bonus payable to a shareholder sums of money due from him to the Company. The claim for damages on the contracts is not money due,

That would be sufficient to dispose of the question because in paragraph 8 of the written statement the defendant Company only claim to be entitled to set-off by reason of Article 131.

But I may also deal with the question whether, apart from Article 131 of the Articles of Association, the defendants can set-off the claim for damages. It could only be in the nature of an equitable set-off, which is not permitted by Order VI, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judge considered that the defendants could counter-claim for damages which could not form the basis of an equitable set-off under rule 118 of the High Court Rules and referred to the case of Griendtoven v. Hanlyn & Co (1). But that case is only an authority for the proposition that, where a claim in damages is preferred by a defendant which arises out of the same contract as the one on which the plaintiff is suing, the defendant could be allowed to counter-claim for those damages although a separate suit could not lie for want of jurisdiction. Now, set-off and counter claim are governed by rules of procedure, and a plaintiff can only plead by way of set-off or counter-claim that which is permitted by those rules. A set-off can be pleaded as a defense and can only arise where the claim to be set-off one against the other whether by the plaintiff or defendant exists in the same right. A set-off can also be the subject-matter of a separate action or a counter-claim. And hence the confusion between the terms, as, though every set-off can be pleaded as a counter-claim if the defendant so desires, every counter claim cannot be pleaded as a set-off. It would be much better if the two terms were kept distinct, and that if an equitable set-off is to be allowed, it should be provided for by rule, while rule 118 might be amended by omitting the mention of set-off. But even assuming that rule 118 of the High Court Rules, although the marginal note is "counter claim by defendant," provides for an equitable set-off, then it is quite clear, under the decisions which lay down the principles on which an equitable set-off can be allowed, that the claim for damages must arise from the same transaction which is the subject-matter of the plaintiff's suit, and it is only when the claim for damages forms the subject-matter of a counter-claim that it makes no difference whether damages are based on a claim arising on the subject-matter of the suit, or are based on some transaction which is entirely outside the plaintiff's claim. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance to keep separate the questions of set-off and counter-claim when the defendant seeks to claim as a set-off not money due but an unascertained sum for damages.

(1) (1892) 8 T. L. R. 231.

In any event, it is perfectly clear that in this case the counter-claim is bad because it could not form the subject-matter of a separate suit in this Court for the reason that the defendant, who is now plaintiff, resides outside the jurisdiction, and the whole of the cause of action arose outside the jurisdiction.

It is also quite clear that the defendants' claim does not come within the definition of equitable set-off.

Therefore, the defendants clearly have no answer to the plaintiff's claim for dividends, and as the issue which I have raised as the real issue argued in the lower Court must be found against the defendants, there must be a decree for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, that is to say, Rs. 10,800, the amount of the dividends, with interest at nine per cent. per annum from the 18th July 1920, when notice was given that interest would be charged, till judgment, and costs and interest on judgment at six per cent. per annum.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Endowment—Manager of trust refusing to act—Founder's widow taking up management—Appointment by widow of another manager under Will, validity of.

A Hindu by a Will created a trust in favour of an idol and appointed a manager for the purpose and assigned to the managers of another temple the right of interfering in case of a breach of trust. The manager appointed by the Will did not take upon himself the duties of that office, whereupon the widow of the founder took possession of the property and continued to manage it till her death; during her lifetime, however, she executed a Will whereby she appointed a relative of hers to succeed to the office of manager in her place. The reversioner of the original donor questioned the power of the widow to make the appointment:

Held, per Walsh, J.—The widow as the heir to her husband could not create an interest beyond her lifetime and consequently had no right to bind a reversioner by appointing a manager to act after her death. No special rights having been bestowed upon her by the original deed of endowment, she had no such right under either Hindu Law or custom. [p. 331, col. 2.]

Per Piggott, J.—Though the widow, as representing the estate of the deceased, could make an appointment to inure beyond her lifetime, she had no right virtually to appoint herself as manager and then to endeavour, by means of a testamentary disposition, to take effect after her death, to continue this management in favour of relatives of her own. [p. 334, col. 2; p. 335, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. Girdharilal Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The suit was decided by the Subordinate Judge of Muttra. As regards the Oawnpore property the appeal fails. As regards the Bindra.

GOSWAMI PURAN LALJI v. RAS BEHARI LAL.

ban-property I have come to the conclusion that the appellant is right and the plaintiff is entitled to succeed for the following reasons:—(I will, for the moment, disregard the reasons given by the lower Court for thinking otherwise).

The property was dealt with by a deceased virtuous man who wanted to dedicate it to a certain idol. The deed of dedication is contained in the document dated the 15th May 1871. So far as the property goes with which this judgment is concerned, and in regard to which in my opinion the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, the general intention of the donor to be gathered from the language of the deed which is extremely difficult to follow because it appears to contain provisions inconsistent with one another, was that one Sangam Lal, who was called the second donee, should make arrangements for the worship and service in a temple, collect the rent of the property and spend it on food, offering and entertainment and in no other way. His representative was to act in a similar manner, such provision seeming to imply a power to appoint a representative if he saw fit, but no one was to have the power to transfer the endowed property. Should anybody attempt to transfer the endowed property or to misappropriate the funds, a right was given to the panches and managers of the temple of Banka Behariji Maharaj to take steps to prevent it. As I understand this provision, the latter persons were intended to be a kind of cestui que trust, or guardians of the corpus, who would be sufficiently interested to be recognized by law as persons entitled to interfere in the case of a breach of trust.

The first donee, the widow, to whom the deceased gave the remaining property, survived him for many years. The second donee, Sangam Lal, for some reason or another, which does not appear on the record of either this suit or of the previous suit to which I am about to refer, never took upon himself the office of manager and it is undisputed that the widow got into possession and retained possession, and if the recitals in the Will, the validity of which is raised in this suit, are to be accepted as true, enjoyed and executed in every way the office of manager or mutwalli in place of Sangam Lal.

In the year 1893 the father of the present plaintiff, one Goshain Makhan Lal brought, what appears to have been a foolish suit, and if he knew of the deed of endowment to which I have just referred, must have been a fraudulent suit, against the widow. He launched it in the guise of an innocent, plausible and natural claim by an ordinary reversionary heir against a widow who had acquired a life-interest in her deceased Hindu husband's property and was, therefore, prohibited by Hindu Law from dealing with the corpus, alleging that she had executed a Will in respect of this property in 1893 in favour of her relation Ram Lal to whom reference will be made in a moment, and sought to have the deed cancelled and declared void. That suit was decreed in favour of the then plaintiff though on what ground does not appear from the only judgment which we have on the record. The decree was set aside on the 23rd January 1897, by a Bench of this Court upon the ground that every allegation which had been alleged by the plaintiff in his plaint had failed and that he had no cause of action for asking for the Will to be set aside as a reversionary heir. It was at that date either common ground or pleaded against the then plaintiff that the property had been assigned by the deceased husband to the panches of Thakur Banke Behariji Maharaj and that the widow was given no interest or right of any kind in the property but that she was for the moment in possession in some way or another of the endowed property because the appointed manager Sangam Lal had not taken up his office and that the whole foundation, presumably fraudulent, on which the plaintiff had litigated did not exist in fact. The learned Judges threw out a suggestion that this lady in action as manager might be only a trespasser and that if she was, there might be a right in the heirs of Sangam Lal who may be presumed by this time to have been dead or the panches, to put an end to her trespass, (questions which must depend upon the interpretation of the deed of endowment and the rights of the managers as they are provided, but questions, which, in my opinion, did not and could not lawfully arise for decision in the plaintiff's suit and which this Court did not purport to determine.) They pointed out to the plaintiff that, so far as the management of the endowed property was concerned, he, at any rate, had no right to interfere, which was no doubt a correct but superficial statement, it being sufficient for the decision of the appeal that he had no shadow of a claim as reversionary heir to set aside the Will of 1893. So far as I can gather from the evidence in the suit and from anything which has been suggested on behalf of the respondents before us, that is a correct and comprehensive statement of what happened in the prior litigation. In course of time, the former plaintiff having died and, finally, the widow herself, this suit has been brought by the present plaintiff who is admittedly the heir of the deceased donor. In order to make the matter clear, which I regret to say the judgment of the Court below fails to do, I do not think I can do better than quote from a statement which was made by the plaintiff's Pleader in the Court below setting out correctly as a matter of fact if reference is made to the plaint and also I think correctly in substance, the nature of the claim. Having referred to the waqf and the appointment of Sangam Lal and the widow as mutwalli, the Pleader goes on as follows:—"My claim is that Sangam Lal has never got possession over the property as mutwalli and Musammat Achamb Kuar remained in possession as mutwalli. She had, under the deed of endowment of 1871, no power to appoint a mutwalli in her place. The plaintiff as heir brings this claim under the Hindu Law."

The claim was to have it declared or decided that an alleged power of appointment which the deceased widow had made during her lifetime under a Will dated 1893 in favour of certain persons, to whom I will refer in a moment, had no legal authority, was not justified by the deed of endowment and in the absence of some legal authority, custom, or usage was not justified by the general rule of Hindu Law. I think it is clear that the plaintiff has successfully established the broad principle involved in that statement in this case. The authorities cited are not on all fours with the present case. Few cases are on all fours with one another. But it appears to have been laid down perfectly clearly by the Privy Council so long ago as 1883, [Gossami Sri Gridharini v. Romanlalji Gossami (1)] that "the office of a shebait is vested in the heir or heirs of the founder provided that there is no usage, course of dealing or circumstance showing a different mode of devolution". A different mode of devolution must, of course, mean some mode warranted by law. Obviously, a mode contained in an express condition of the endowment would be a mode warranted by law because every man has a right to do what he pleases with his own property and to indicate the limits within which the succession to the management or control or ownership of his property shall be continued after his death when he is no longer here to direct operations. The authority in question undoubtedly covers the position of the office of the shebait. The point specifically raised in this suit is the power of appointment to such office as is shown by the statement of the Pleader which I have quoted. The plaintiff distinctly put in issue the power of appointment which the lady had endeavoured to exercise by her Will of 1893 and did not specifically raise the question of the succession to the office itself. That case has been followed by two or three Benches of this Court, particularly by a two Judge Bench, [Ohandranath Ohakrabarti v. Jadabendra Ohakrabarti (2)], a case which would otherwise be on all fours but apparently is not on all fours with this suit inasmuch as the lady who had been appointed pujari under the Will of the original donor and who had made the Will seeking to appoint the next manager which the heirs of the founder challenged by the suit, was not, or at any rate is not, shown by the report to have been the widow or heir of the deceased donor. If she had been, there would have been no distinction between this case and that. There is a further relevant decision in 1907 by the High Court of Calcutta Rameshwar Mullik v. Gopeshwar Mullik (3) which lays down another cognate but somewhat narrower rule, namely, that a shebait cannot as such, by Will, alienate the office of shebait. The decision of the Privy Council has also been followed by this Court in Sitoratan Kunwari v. Ram Pargash (4) and Sheo Prasad v. Aya Ram (5) and, as I gather from the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment, was accepted by him in deciding the first issue in the suit, he basing himself in his judgment upon Chandranath Chakrabarti v. Jadabendra Chakrabarti (2) to which I have already referred. So far as I was able to understand the observations addressed to us yesterday on behalf of the respondent, this legal position was accepted as correct by the respondent. That being so, it seems to me quite clear that the plaintiff at that stage had prima facie established a right to succeed in the suit, a state of affairs expressed by the learned Judge of the Court below that the plaintiff could maintain the suit if it did not "fail on the merits". Inasmuch as he dismissed the suit, it must be assumed that he came to the conclusion that it did fail on the merits. What were the merits which he intended to decide to be sufficient to justify its failure, is the problem which I am, on a perusal of his judgment, unable to solve. He finds that the widow was appointed to supervise over the management of Sangam Lal. I do not know where he gets that from, but it is not of very great importance because as Sangam Lal did not manage there was nothing to supervise, and he goes on to find that she remained in possession only as a trespasser. He had already found that the suit was not barred by the Statute of Limitation. It seems to me, therefore, that, having accepted the principle upon which the plaintiff based his claim, and having found that the position of the widow who made the Will was merely that of a trespasser, the logical consequence of these two propositions would be that her right to appoint a successor failed and that she had not discharged the trust east upon her by the plaintiff's prima facie right. His final conclusion on Issue No. 7 is absolutely unintelligible. It looks to me as though he had been frightened by a dictum of this Court in the previous decision which had really no bearing on this suit, and, while expressly holding that the previous judgment of the High Court did not operate as res adjudicata, it was sufficient to justify him in saying that the plaintiff had absolutely no right to maintain the suit. The view pressed upon this Court on behalf of the respondent has been substantially this:— It may be put in more than one way— First, it was said, that the widow being the heir during her lifetime, she might reasonably be held to have the power of appointing a successor to Sangam Lal. Presumably she could, for what such an appointment would be worth, to the extent of her life, until, as the High Court said in its previous judgment, Sangam Lal or the parches attempted to interfere with her right, but whether she could do so by Will so as to bind the present plaintiff after her death which is really the question in this suit, must, I think, depend upon the terms of the deed of endowment. If the right to do so cannot be found there, in my opinion it cannot exist in law. To hold that she could do so on some general principle of law analogous to the right of the beneficial owner, would seem to me to give a higher right to a Hindu widow as heir of her deceased husband than has ever been recognized by Hindu law or custom, that is to say, although she is not in fact a beneficial owner, and the person deriving such benefit as would accrue from the appointment would not be beneficial owner of the corpus, nonetheless it would seem to me to recognize the right of a Hindu widow, who as heir has no more than a life-interest, to do more with endowed property than she can admittedly do with unendowed property. So far as I can speak with any confidence of the terms of the deed of endowment, I am satisfied that no power of appointment was ever contemplated by the deceased donor or intended to be conferred upon his widow.

The respondents' case was also put, as I understand it, in this way:—That if anybody had a power of appointment under the deed of endowment, it was the panches or manager referred to in the latter part of the deed. I do not think the deed is capable of that interpretation. I think the real meaning of the provision with regard to them is that they are persons who are given the right to interfere with the de jure manager and to correct and prevent any falsifications or other mismanagement by him while he is in office. But assuming that that right is conferred upon the panches and managers of the temple above referred to, I have been unable to see how that point can avail the defendants in this case. It is not universally true, but I think it is true in this class of cases, that a person claiming to be either in office, or in possession, or to resist a declaration or assertion of right by a person prima facie entitled, must stand upon his own right or on that of the persons through whom he claims. He cannot set up what is called a jus tertii. It does not seem to me that the defendant, even if he had relied upon that point, would have been entitled to succeed upon it, but I think for the purposes of this case it is sufficient to hold that it was never pleaded. It was not the ground on which the respondent succeeded in the Court below, and, so far as I was able to understand the argument addressed to the Court on behalf of respondents, was not relied upon by him before us.

It, therefore, comes back, as Mr. Durga Prasad rightly said, to a very simple question: Is the widow of the deceased donor justified by the power given by the deed of endowment of 1871 to make the Will of 1909? My answer to that question is, no. In conclusion, I may refer to certain passages in the Will itself which, although this cannot really be used as decisive against the present defendants, go very far to confirm me in the strong view I take of this defence. I think the person who was responsible for drafting or settling this

Will on behalf of the deceased lady discreetly avoided referring to the power under which she was purporting to appoint. I am satisfied that the appointment was made by her qua manager and not as heir. If it had been made as heir there was no reason why she should not have said so, but in the somewhat portentous recital she distinctly alleges that she has been in exclusive possession merely as manager, and in the first operative clause appointing her minor relative she directs that "he shall like myself be the mutwalli and manager of every kind of movable and immovable property and shall as such have all sorts of power." She discreetly said in the recital "I have power to make a fresh arrangement." So far as a document can assert its own legal authority, I think this document was intended to assert that the power so conferred upon her was inherent in her as de facto manager and that it was as such that she sought to exercise it. In my opinion that is sufficient to dispose of the defence. I cannot part with the case without expressing, although it is really not necessary for the decision which I think we ought to arrive at, the very strong view which I take that this appointment in the Will was purely illusory, and if a general power in her favour were to be collected from the deed of endowment or could be, without doing violence to the principles of Hindu law, attributed to her as heir, I think there would be strong ground for holding that the appointment contained in clause 2 of the Will is, what is known in English law, as "a fraud upon the power." The appointment of Ras Behari, her daughter's son, who she says has been brought up as a begotten son and lives with her, is a mere sham. She appoints two persons, his mother Musammot Ram Dei, and Ram Lal, to be guardians of the said minor. So far so good. But she goes on to provide that when the minor attains majority, the two persons she has appointed as guardians during his minority shall continue to look after the property, and during their lifetimes, the executor, in other words, the so-called manager of the endowment now being of full age whom she appointed, is to perform all works in conformity with the opinions of the said two persons. To my mind that provision left these two persons masters of the situation. It made the appointment by the deceased man of the panches and the representative of Sangam Lal as a sort of watch-dog over the corpus with a view to preventing breaches of trust, practically a dead letter. Under such a provision the so called manager, Ras Behari, could never be touched for any breach which he might commit because he would have an absolute answer under his own appointment, namely, that he was bound to comply with the directions of two other persons, and as far as I can see, it would be extremely difficult for anybody in a Court of Law to reach these two other persons, and it is not difficult to see how the whole of the endowment could be squandered and misappropriated, with very great difficulty in preventing, and almost insuperable obstacles in the way of punishing, such misfeasance. I take a very strong view, apart from any other question in this suit, that the alleged appointment made by the widow under this Will was as far from and as hostile to the intentions of the original donor as anything could be, and I am satisfied that our decision is in accordance with the merits as well as in accordance with the law. To that extent the plaintiffs' appeal must be allowed. It must be declared that the appointment is vested in him and that the Will so far as it purports to deal with the trusteeship or managership of the Bindaban property is void and of no effect and that the plaintiff is entitled to take possession. The parties will pay and receive costs in proportion to their failure and success in both Courts. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

PICOT, J.—We are dealing in this case with property held under a trust created by a deed of endowment, and the terms of that deed are necessarily the most important matter for consideration. This deed of the 15th of May 1871 is a singularly ill drafted document and it would be quite easy to take particular portions of it and show that their apparent meaning is contradicted by certain other portions. The most glaring example of this is to be found in the fact that what may be called the operative portion of the deed, where the donor, Sri Goshain Narsinghji, purports to make a gift of property in favour of his wife, Musammat Achanb Kunwar and of Sangam Lal, contains an exception excluding from the operation of the gift the immovable property specified at the foot of the deed which is the principal subject-matter of the present appeal. It is only inferentially, by means of words used in a later portion of the document, that one can understand that the executant intended to make a gift of this immovable property in favour of an idol. We must, however, take it as an admitted fact on the pleadings that a trust was created in favour of an idol. The questions remaining to be considered are, what this idol was and what directions the founder of the trust left regarding the management of the same. It is quite clear that the trust was to be mainly in favour of an idol described by the name and title of Sri Thakur Radha Behariji Maharaj whose image, if it was in existence at all at the date of the deed, had not yet been installed anywhere. It was left to the widow, Achanb Kunwar, to instal this idol in a particular shrine, described as amongst certain buildings which "have been built and are still under construction," in an earlier part of the deed. When this idol was so installed he, considered as a juristic personality, was to have the enjoyment of the income from the immovable property specified at the foot of the deed, and the management of this property, with directions for the proper application of the income was conferred upon Sangam Lal. It may fairly be inferred from an expression used in the deed that this office of manager was intended to be hereditary in the family of Sangam Lal. It is by no means clear, however, whether the actual gift of the corpus of the property was in favour of the idol already mentioned from the date of its installation by the widow. The temple which Sri Goshain Narsinghji had built, or had begun to build, for the reception of this idol was evidently situated in close proximity to a larger temple dedicated to an idol described as Thakur Banke Behariji Maharaj, which temple was in charge of a managing committee of some sort referred to in this deed. According to the terms of the deed it was this idol installed in the larger temple, in the charge of this managing committee, which was "ultimately" to be the owner of the immovable property. The real and principal difficulty about the interpretation of the entire document is this word "ultimately". On the face of it the document is a deed of gift to take effect immediately from the date of its execution and, in so far as certain property, moveable and immoveable, was to be placed in the possession of Achamb Kunwar and of Sangam Lal respectively, the deed evidently did operate from the date of its execution. Those portions of the deed which relate to the application of the income could not come into force until the idol of Sri Thakur Radha Behariji Maharaj was installed in the small temple constructed by the executant, or commenced by the executant and finished by his widow after his death. There is nothing in the terms of the Will to suggest that the word "ultimately" which qualifies the gift in favour of the idol of Banke Behariji Maharaj, in the larger shrine, refers to any date subsequent to the installation of the less important idol in the small shrine. I think it must have been for some such reason as this that in the former litigation it was considered that the ultimate right to the management of the immoveable property specified at the foot of this deed of May the 15th, 1871, vested in the committee of management in charge of the larger shrine of Thakur Banke Behariji Maharaj. I agree, however, that these considerations cannot determine the result of the present suit. I do think that a defendant in possession of immoveable property is entitled to resist a plaintiff claiming possession of the same by setting up a jus tertii, and that there is nothing in the circumstances of the present suit to qualify that right. If, however, a defendant wishes to set up such a defense, he should certainly take the responsibility and submit to the possible consequences of doing so in plain language. After carefully studying the written statement filed by the defendant in the present suit it, does seem to me that the rights of the temple of Thakur Banke Behariji Maharaj or of the idol therein installed, or of the committee of management in charge of that temple, were not expressly pleaded or put in issue.

With regard to the other questions raised before us the position I would take up is a simple one. We must assume, as between the parties to this litigation, that Sangam Lal, the manager appointed under the deed of endowment, either refused to act, or in some other manner clearly indicated that he did not intend to take up the trusteeship offered him under the terms of this deed. There was then beyond all question a right to appoint a new trustee vested in some one or other. The widow, Musammât Achamb Kunwar, seems to me to have acted in good faith and to have done her best to carry out the wishes of her late husband. The first thing she had to do was to instal the idol in the small shrine referred to in the deed of endowment, and it is not denied that she did this. In the absence of another manager it seems to me that she was perfectly entitled, after her husband's death, to take up the management of the trust property herself. The only persons who could question her right to do so would be the committee in charge of the larger temple of Thakur Banke Behariji Maharaj, if they held that under the terms of the deed of gift Sri Ghoshain Narsinghji had so divested himself of this property as to deprive his heirs after him of any right of appointment, the ultimate management of the trust resting entirely in the said committee. Assuming, however, that this committee did not concern itself in the matter, the widow would be carrying out the intentions of her late husband in installing the idol and making arrangements for its due worship. As a matter of fact, she has gone a great deal further, because in the Will which was made the subject-matter of the present suit she has dedicated the entire balance of her property for the benefit of another idol to be installed somewhere at Oownpore. Now my own view regarding the question of law which has been principally adopted before us is this, that under the circumstances assumed by the parties to this litigation, and putting aside altogether the question of the jus tertii to which allusion has been made, if Musammât Achamb Kunwar had seen fit, upon the failure of Sangam Lal to take up the office conferred upon him by this deed, to make another appointment to take effect immediately, she had a right to do so as representing the estate of her deceased husband, and she had a right to make an appointment which would inure beyond her own lifetime. I think, however, on the authorities it cannot be held that she had a right virtually to appoint herself as manager and then to endeavour, by means of a testamentary disposition to take effect after her death, to continue this right of management in favour of relatives of her own. For these reasons, I concur in the decree and order proposed.

—Amendment of pleadings—Interlocutory order—Revision.

Leave to amend should always be given unless the Court is satisfied that the party applying for leave is acting mala fide, or that, by his blunder he has done some injury to his opponent which cannot be compensated for by costs or otherwise. However negligent or careless may have been the omission, however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side. [p. 336, cols. 1 & 2.]

The High Court should hesitate as a rule to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders of the lower Courts, but it should not hesitate in exceptional cases. [p. 336, col. 2.]

Defendants applied for leave to amend their written statement before issues were struck but the Trial Court refused to grant leave to amend. On an application to the High Court in revision:

Held, that this was an exceptional case in which the High Court would interfere with the interlocutory order of the Trial Court. [p. 336, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act of 1919 for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge Delhi, dated the 10th February 1920.

Dr. Gokul Chand Narang, for the Petitioner.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the defendant for revision of an order passed by the lower Court refusing to admit further pleas and to frame additional issues. The additional issues which the Court refused to frame were:—

(1) Whether the agreement in the letter of the 30th October 1916 was or became impossible of performance and completion? If so, what is its effect on the suit?

(2) Whether this Court has jurisdiction to try the case?

The Court refused to frame the first of these issues because no such plea was contained in the original written statement of the defendant which he filed on the 7th July 1919. The Court admitted that by supplementary application of the 31st July the defendant did raise this plea, but disallowed it on the ground that the leave of the Court for filing the supplementary pleas had never been obtained. It refused to frame the issue as to jurisdiction on the ground that the Judge's predecessor Mr. Tapp had already decided that the Court had jurisdiction, and it was of opinion that it could not go behind this. Mr. Tapp's order deciding the question of jurisdiction is dated 13th October 1919. He said: "As regards the jurisdiction the defendant Company admitted that this Court had jurisdiction in their written statement. They only questioned the jurisdiction of the Court in their additional written statement for the filing of which they have obtained no permission. Apart from this, the contract if there was one was entered into at Delhi."

On a reference to the record it appears that paragraph 11 of the plaint was as follows:—

"The valuation for the purpose of Court fee and jurisdiction is Rs. 71,625."

Paragraph 11 of the written pleas of the defendant was as follows:—"There is no objection to the Court-fee paid and to the jurisdiction of the Court."

JHARIA COAL CO., v. DIWAN CHAND & CO.

In the supplementary pleas put in on the 31st July, it was explained that by inadvertence and accidental error in paragraph 11 of the written statement the words "and jurisdiction of the Court" have been written and that the jurisdiction of the Court was not admitted. It is quite clear that the defendant never intended to admit the jurisdiction of the Court. Reading paragraph 11 of the plaint and of the pleas together, it appears that what the defendant meant to say was that he did not object to the valuation of the suit for the purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction. Mr. Tapp was clearly in error in his opinion that defendant admitted the jurisdiction of the Court, and Mr. Moti Sagar frankly admits that Mr. Tapp was mistaken. It, therefore, appears that the latter officer decided the point of jurisdiction through a mistaken impression that the defendant in his original pleas admitted the jurisdiction of the Court. Malik Ahmad Yar Khan was not right in his view that he could not go behind the decision of Mr. Tapp on this point. Mr. Tapp's order was merely an interlocutory one and did not therefore bind him. On the 7th July 1919, when the original pleas were put in, the Court did not do anything except give a further date for the examination of the parties who were not then present in person. On the 31st July, the defendant not only put in supplementary pleas, but made a separate application for the leave of the Court to put in such pleas. Upon this the Court passed no formal order, and it appears to me that it must have overlooked the application. If it had carefully perused it together with the original written pleas, it would, I think, have come to the conclusion that the defendant never intended to admit the jurisdiction of the Court. The case was eminently one where the Court should have allowed the supplementary pleas which were in part necessary as they were explanatory of the original ones. At page 415 of Mulla's Civil Procedure Code the following dictum of Bramwell, L. J., is quoted:—"I have much to do in Chambers with applications for leave to amend and I may perhaps be allowed to say that this humble branch of learning is very familiar to me. My practice has always been to give leave to amend unless I have been satisfied that the party applying was acting malofide, or that, by his blunder he had done some injury to his opponent which could not be compensated, for by costs or otherwise." He also said: "However negligent or careless may have been the omission, however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it could be made without injustice to the other side." There certainly was no mala fides on the part of the defendant in the present case and no damage could possibly have resulted to the other side by the admission of the supplementary pleas put in on the 31st July 1919. I am altogether in agreement with the view that this Court should hesitate as a rule to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders of the lower Courts, but the present is an exceptional case, and, I think, interference is clearly allowable. Mr. Moti Sagar says he has no objection to the additional issue 'whether the contract has become impossible of performance and completion' being framed but he urges that the issue as to jurisdiction should not be added. He says that if there was any agreement at all it took place at Delhi. Counsel for the defendant traverses this on the ground that according to the plaintiff the agreement was confirmed at Jharia and not at Delhi. In my opinion, there is not sufficient material on the record for the immediate determination of the question of jurisdiction, and I see no reason why there should not be an issue on the point. At the same time, I am not prepared to say that the question of jurisdiction should be decided before the evidence is recorded and findings come to on the other issues.

I allow the revision and direct that the two additional issues asked for by the petitioner be added. Costs of this Court will be costs in the cause.

Where a District Magistrate in pursuance of authority conferred by a Government Notification authorises a Superintendent of Police to take action against a person for an offence under rule 25 (1) of the Defence of India Rules, of which offence the Police are not authorised to take cognisance, and on the authorisation of the Superintendent of Police, a Subordinate Officer makes a chalan, the chalan may be treated as a complaint.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Petitioner.

Sardar Mahtab Singh, S. B., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Khushal Singh, son of Maya Ram Singh, was convicted of an offence under rule 25 (1) of the Defence of India Rules of 1915, and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for nine months. In addition, he was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a further period of one month. He appealed to the Sessions Judge of Jullundur who maintained the conviction; but reduced the sentence to three months' rigorous imprisonment, remitting the fine. He has now come up to this Court under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, through Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, and I have heard Sardar Mahtab Singh, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown. The facts are given in ample detail in the judgment of the lower Court and need not be here recapitulated. Suffice it to say, that I am unable to see any reason to interfere on the merits. It is urged, however, by Mr. Mukand Lal that the conviction was bad in law, inasmuch as the Magistrate had taken cognisance of the case on a Police report or chalan and that rule 25 (2) of the Defence of India Rules of 1915 rendered it imperative that a complaint should be filed by some one duly authorised in that behalf. He referred me to Shamal Khan v. Empress (1), Kirpal Singh v. Empress (2), Abdul Ghani v. Municipal Committee, Peshawar (3), Nurdin v. Municipal Committee, Lahore (4), Nahinya v. Empress (5) and Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (6). I am, however, unable to see that these cases are really applicable to the present one. The Punjab Government Notification No. 10920 of the 22nd April 1919 shows that all District Magistrates in the Punjab were empowered to order, or authorise, complaints to be made in respect of such offences as came within the purview of rule 25 (1) committed within their jurisdiction. In the case before me the District Magistrate of Jullundur directed the Superintendent of Police to make an inquiry, complete the case and send it up for trial. In due course the Police put up a chalan before the District Magistrate who sent it to the Trying Magistrate who has disposed of it. It is clear that the Police were not authorised to take cognisance of the offence, inasmuch as it was not one which they had power to take up suo motu. They, therefore, were not authorised by any law to put up what is usually termed a chalan. Chalans by the Police are only possible in cases cognisable by them. Sardar Mahtab Singh contended that the so-called chalan in this case must be regarded as a complaint and that, therefore, the Magistrate was properly seized of the case. In support he referred me to King-Emperor v. Sada (7). In that case it was held "if the alleged offence is a non-cognisable one, there is no section in the Code which empowers a Police Officer of his own motion to make any report to a Magistrate. A Police Officer, however, may lay information of any offence of which he cannot take cognisance and when he lays such information he must be regarded as having filed a complaint."

It was, therefore, held that a Police Officer, who had lodged information of a non cognisable offence, must be held to have filed a complaint and that, therefore, he was liable to pay the compensation provided by section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, if his information turned out to be false, frivolous or vexatious. It seems to me that that case is applicable to the facts before me. The District Magistrate undoubtedly had power under the Notification to order the filing of a complaint. He did actually pass such an order to the Police and in compliance with that order the Police after due inquiry placed an information before him. The mere fact that that information was prepared in the same form as a chalan does not to my mind render the information anything other than a complaint.

Mr. Mukand Lal then contended that, inasmuch as the District Magistrate had directed the Superintendent of Police to take action, it was the Superintendent of Police only who could make the complaint or lodge the information and had no power to authorise any of his subordinates to do so. This question was considered by Scott Smith, J., in Criminal Revision No. 778 of 1919, in which it was held that there was nothing in that Notification against such delegation. This is a revision and, in my opinion, substantial justice has been done, and I am not prepared to interfere.

It appears, however, that the petitioner had been released on bail by order of the learned Judge who admitted this petition before he had completed his sentence. The petitioner appears to have served over $\frac{2}{3}$ of his period of imprisonment, and, in the circumstances, I see no reason to send him back to jail. I accordingly reduce the sentence to that already undergone.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 41—Stolen property, possession of—Possession of wife, whether possession of husband.

Accused with several other males and females lived in a house as a joint family. During his absence from the house, a locked box containing stolen property was found therein, whose key was produced by accused's wife. Accused was convicted under section 411 of the Penal Code:

Held, that although the possession of a wife would frequently be the possession of the husband, yet this could not be presumed per se in every case: there must be something to connect the husband with the possession more than the mere fact that he is the husband, and that, in this case, the conclusion that the husband was in possession could not be justified.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 21st November 1921.

Mr. S. O. Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sankar Saran, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts may be stated briefly. A locked box was in a house in which Kehar Singh, other male members of his family and several women resided. The key of the box was produced by the wife of Khushi Ram, son of Kehar Singh. The box was opened. In the box was stolen property. Khushi Ram was not in the house. On this evidence Khushi Ram has been convicted under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge considered that these facts justified a finding that the property was in Khushi Ram's possession. I do not think that such an inference can be drawn legally from the evidence. Actual possession was of course with the wife. Can it be presumed that in every case of this kind, the possession of the wife is "per se" the possession of the husband? I think not. Possession of the wife would frequently be the possession of the husband. In fact, it would usually be the possession of the husband, but there must be something to connect the husband with the possession more than the mere fact that he is the husband. In this particular case when the house was occupied by members of a joint family including several males and when the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 517, 520—Order by Stationary Sub-Magistrate under s. 517—Appeal, forum of.

An appeal from an order passed under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code by a Stationary Sub-Magistrate directing the return of the subject-matter of a charge to the complainant, lies to a District Magistrate and not to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate inasmuch as the latter exercises appellate powers only on delegation by the former.

Khima Rukhad, In re, 45 Ind. Cas. 501; 42 B. 664; 20 Bom. L. R. 385; 19 Cr. L. J. 597 and Queen-Empress v. Ahmed, 9 M. 448; 2 Weir 672; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 707, referred to.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bhimavaram, in Criminal Appeal No. 116 of 1920, dated the 8th January 1921 against an order of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Narsapur, in Calendar Case No. 239 of 1920.

Mr. G. Lakshmanan, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Narsapur, in acquitting a person charged with an offense under section 406, made an order under section 517, Criminal Procedure Code, that certain jewels which were the subject-matter of the charge should be returned to the complainant. An appeal against this order was preferred to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bhimavaram. He dismissed it on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to hear the case because the case ended in acquittal.

The jurisdiction of the Court to vary an order under section 517 is conferred by section 520 which speaks of 'any Court of Appeal, confirmation, reference or revision.' The meaning of these words has been differently interpreted by this Court and by the Bombay High Court. The latter has held in Khima Rukhad, In re (1) that the words "Court of Appeal" mean the Court to which an appeal lies in the particular case. This Court has held in Queen-Empress v. Ahmed (2) that they mean the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the Court which passed the order under section 517. It is on this latter ruling that petitioner depends in arguing his case before us, but, unfortunately, it is of no use to him because, in two subsequent cases, different Benches of this Court have held that the words "Court to which appeals ordinarily lie" cannot cover the case of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate whose power to hear appeals depends on a delegation by the District Magistrate under section 407, clause (2). Whatever view we might be inclined to take on this latter point, we do not feel justified in refusing to follow the two cases quoted to us, which are Criminal Revision Cases No. 525 of 1905 and No. 84 of 1908.

We must, therefore, hold that the Court which had power to modify the Stationary Sub-Magistrate's order in this case was the District Magistrate and not the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order dismissing the appeal was right. The Criminal Revision Petition is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 164, 342—Confession—Duty of Magistrate recording confession—Memo. of enquiry—Cross-examination of accused, whether competent.

In all cases in which a confession is recorded by a Magistrate it is advisable that he should record a memorandum of enquiry showing what steps he has taken to fully satisfy himself that the accused person is confessing voluntarily. [p. 341, col. 1.]

The mere absence of such a memorandum, however, would not render a confession, otherwise duly recorded, inadmissible. [p. 341, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 1st/2nd December 1920.

Mr. Ghulam Rasool, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. A. Herbert, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Umar Din alias Umba has been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Lahore of the murder of Mangal of village Sahoke on the night between 17-18th July 1920. He has appealed to this Court, and his appeal has been argued before us by Mr. Ghulam Rasool, and the case is also before us for confirmation of sentence under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code. With Umar Din was tried Kaka alias Nizam Din but as there was very little evidence against him besides the retracted confession of Umar Din and the statement of Musammal Rahmate, widow of the murdered man, P. W. No. 19, which was not believed, he was acquitted.

The theory for the prosecution is that there were four murderers, Lal Singh, Iman Din, Kaka and the present appellant. The two first men are said to be absconding. It is clear from the facts stated in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge that Kaka and the absconders had enmity against the deceased, and the theory is that they induced the present appellant who lives in the house of Mangal, who is his first cousin, to assist them in the murder. There are some grounds, as stated by the learned Sessions Judge, for supposing that Musammal Rahmate, the widow of Mangal, was an abettor of the murder. There is a good deal of evidence to the effect that immediately after the murder she cried out saying that Kaka and others had murdered her husband. The witnesses who give this evidence are P. W. Nos. 22, 18, 20, 21, 23, 24 and 25. The only one of these who says that the widow named all the four as the alleged murderers is Rahim Bakhsh P. W. No. 21, and we may, therefore, take it as certain that she did not at that time name Umar Din appellant as one of the murderers. He was arrested on the 24th July 1920 and the Police applied to the Magistrate for his confession to be recorded on the following day. The Magistrate could not take it then and passed an order that the accused persons would remain in the judicial lock up. So from the 26th July onwards Umar Din was not in Police custody. His confession was recorded by Mr. Wace, Magistrate, First Class, on the 27th July 1920, and on the 5th August Mr. Keelan, the Committing Magistrate, examined some of the witnesses for the prosecution, and on the 7th of August he recorded Umar Din's statement in which he admitted the correctness of the confession made by him on the 27th July, and which was at that time read out to him. When he was again examined on the 19th August by the Committing Magistrate he retracted his confession and said that he had made it under the influence of Police torture.

Now, with regard to the confession, Counsel for the appellant has raised the objection that the Magistrate recorded no memorandum of the enquiry made from Umar Din before the confession was recorded. He based his objection upon section 164, Criminal Procedure Code which lays down that no Magistrate shall record any such confession unless upon questioning the person making it he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily. Now the law which makes this provision does not say that the Magistrate should make any memorandum of the enquiry which he makes at the time before recording the confession of an accused. No authority has been referred to which lays down that in the absence of any memorandum of enquiry the confession otherwise duly recorded shall be inadmissible in evidence. We note that a proper certificate as laid down in section 164 (3) has been appended by the Magistrate at the end of the confession. Counsel for the appellant referred to Nga Shwe Sin v. Emperor (1) where it was held that it is the imperative duty of the Magistrate, before recording a confession, to carefully examine the accused person and, to the best of his ability, ascertain that he is not wishing to speak owing to any inducement, threat or promise, but that his confession is purely voluntary. In that case it appears that each accused was asked once at the end of his statement whether he confessed voluntarily or was induced to do so, and it was held that it was not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 164 (3). In that case it will be noticed that stress was laid upon the necessity of the Magistrate making an enquiry, though it was not laid down that in the absence of a memorandum of the Magistrate's enquiry the confession is inadmissible. Queen-Empress v. Narayan (2) was also referred to but that too is not an authority for the proposition put forward by Counsel. We, therefore, are unable to hold that the confession of Umar Din is inadmissible. At the same time, we consider it to be most advisable that in all such cases a Magistrate should record a memorandum of enquiry showing what steps he has taken to fully satisfy himself that an accused person is confessing voluntarily. In view of the fact that on the 7th August, i.e., 11 days later, Umar Din adhered to his confession before the Committing Magistrate, we see no reason to suppose that he did not make it voluntarily.

The evidence corroborative of the confession is said by the learned Sessions Judge to consist of the following facts:—

(1) that Umar Din was present when the murder took place;

(2) that he had cuts on his head obviously inflicted in order to give the false impression that he too had been attacked;

(3) that he himself had sharpened the toki (see the evidence of the mochi woman Musammât Rahmate, P. W. No. 10);

(4) that the toki was found in a pond a few yards from the scene of the murder, Umar Din himself having admitted in his confession that he had thrown it there;

(5) that the pieces of rag in which Umar Din said he had wrapped the toki when he hid it in the courtyard under some bricks, was found in the place pointed out by him.

As to No. 1 it is not denied that Umar Din was sleeping alone in the courtyard, Mangal and his wife being on the roof at the time the murder was committed. It seems, therefore, highly probable that the murderers thought it necessary to get Umar Din on their side before committing the murder.

As to No. 2 the medical evidence shows that the appellant was examined by the Doctor on the 19th July. Three incised clean cuts, superficial ones, were found on his head. The skin was merely cut and only a little blood had come out of the wounds. The wounds were in the same line and level and superficial and seemed to be self-inflicted. They were one day old and appeared to have been caused by a sharp edged weapon, such as a razor or a knife. The appellant in his confession said that after the murder Kaka got out a knife and made cuts on his head so as to make it seem as if he also had been attacked by the assailants. The explanation given by the appellant when he retracted his confession was that he received these injuries some 10 or 15 days before the occurrence when he was lifting some firewood. This explanation is absurd and is inconsistent with the medical evidence which shows that the wounds were on the 19th July only one day old. In fact the appearance of these wounds is, in our opinion, a strong corroboration of the explanation given by the appellant in his confession.

As to No. 3 we have the evidence of Musammât Rahmate, P. W. No. 10. She is only a low caste woman, but prima facie there is no ground for disbelieving her evidence to the effect that the appellant came to her house and sharpened the toka there on the day preceding the night of the murder. The appellant, in his confession said that he sharpened the toka two days before the night of the murder, but the discrepancy is unimportant because Musammat Rahmate could easily have forgotten the exact interval that had elapsed between the appellant's visit to her house and the time of the murder.

As to No. 4 it is an undoubted fact that a toka was found in the pond a few yards from the house where the appellant was sleeping on the night of the murder. He could have easily thrown it there after the murder.

We do not attach much importance to the fifth piece of evidence referred to by the learned Sessions Judge, because the appellant might have shown any piece of cloth and have stated that he had wrapped the toka in it.

The Assessors were unanimously of opinion that Umar Din's confession was true and that he was not threatened or tortured into making it, and that he might have been forced to join in the crime by the other accused persons, and that the cuts on his head had been caused by his accomplices. In his confession the appellant stated that he had joined in the murder under the influence of the threats of his companions. Now, even if we believe that the appellant had been compelled to join in the murder by reason of threats, it would not entitle him to the benefit of the exception contained in section 94 of the Indian Penal Code which lays down that, except murder and offences against the State punishable with death, nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is compelled to do it by threats, which, at the time of doing it, reasonably caused apprehension that instant death to that person would otherwise be the consequence. We do not, however, believe that Umar Din was compelled by threats to join in the murder. His confession shows that his companions spoke to him about the murder several times and that everything was arranged before-hand. It was perfectly easy for him to inform both Mangal and the authorities of what was intended to be done, but he did not do so. We, therefore, do not consider that he is entitled to be treated with any leniency.

We agree with the unanimous opinion of the Assessors and of the Sessions Judge that the guilt of the appellant has been established and dismiss his appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

Before we close we wish to draw the attention of the Committing Magistrate to the manner in which he cross examined the accused in recording his statement on the 19th August. Section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, allows a Court at any stage of any enquiry, or trial to put such questions to the accused as the Court considers necessary, and lays down that the Court shall, for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, question him on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called for his defence. It is not competent to the Court under this section to cross-examine the accused, see the authorities in Henderson's Criminal Procedure Code, 8th Edition, page 681. The Magistrate, moreover, in the present case not only cross-examined the accused, but even after the latter had retracted his confession put certain questions to him which assumed that the accused was still confessing, for instance, after the appellant had denied having sharpened the toka, the Magistrate asked the following question:—

"Was any one there when you sharpened it?"

He put many other questions of like character which appear to have been put with the object of trapping the appellant into some sort of admission after he had resiled from his confession and had said that he had made it under the influence and ill-treatment of the Police. These questions were not, in our opinion, proper and should not have been put.

The law in India regarding corroboration of an accomplice's evidence does not differ from the English Law. [p. 344, col. 1.]

Confirmation of an accomplice's evidence does not mean that there should be independent evidence of that which the accomplice relates or his testimony would be unnecessary. The corroboration must be by some other evidence than that of an accomplice. One accomplice's evidence is not corroboration of the testimony of another accomplice. Evidence in corroboration must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms, in some material particular, not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also that the prisoner committed it. The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. [p. 344, col. 1.]

The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime: it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. [p. 344, col. 2.]

Revision of the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Amraoti, dated the 22nd November 1921, in Criminal Appeal No. 262 of 1921.

Messrs. M. R. Dixit and K. V. Brahma, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The applicants (1) Kisan Raghojee, (2) Bajirao Shewajee, (3) Gopal Rao Raghupat, (4) Shamji Ramji, (5) Govinda Sakham, (6) Sheoram Raghojee, (7) Panjaji Narayanji, (8) Deoappa Bapunnappa and (9) Laxman Manohar were convicted under section 437 read with section 34 or 114, Indian Penal Code, or both. Applicants Kisan and Bajirao were in addition convicted under section 471. Bajirao died after this application was filed. The hearing of these applications has been regrettably delayed. The first date fixed for hearing parties was the 25th January 1922. There were four hearings of the case at intervals, the last being on the 18th April 1922. The hearing was twice adjourned at the request of the Counsel for the Crown with the consent of the opposite parties, once at the joint request of both parties and twice on account of press of other work.

The case was fought out most strenuously before the Magistrate, the evidence of the three principal witnesses Nos. 1 to 3 extending over 142 pages of the record. The case against the accused which depends upon the evidence of the approvers Sonaji (P. W. No. 2) and Digambar (P. W. No. 3) is that they conspired to forge and helped in forging a Will purporting to be executed by Govinda Hiranman who died on the 17th December 1903. By the document Govinda purported to adopt one Motiram, a minor son of Panjaji Sakham, and make him his heir. The applicant Kisan was made the guardian of the minor and was authorised to take possession and have full management of the estate which was worth Rs. 50,000 or more. The deed was subscribed by the applicant Panjaji. Govinda's signature thereon was forged by Sonaji (P. W. No. 2) who was at the time Govinda's Munim. It was attested by, amongst others, Digambar, (P. W. No. 3), and the applicants Kisan, Sheoram, Govinda, Shamji Bajirao and Gopal Laxman, a Registration Mohurrir, is said to have prepared the draft and he and Deoappa are said to have taken part in forging Sonaji, who was then a boy of about 15 years, by threats to forge Govinda's signature, and otherwise aided in the commission of the forgery. The document was presented for registration by Kisan, and Bajirao identified Kisan before the Registrar.

Remarks have been made here about the conduct of the investigation by P. W. No. 1, the Circle Inspector. These, however, are irrelevant to the merits of the case if the evidence of the two approvers taken with other corroborative evidence is accepted as substantially true. Both the lower Courts have held that the approvers' story has been sufficiently corroborated and have believed it. If the witnesses were not accomplices the conviction of the applicants would be justified on their evidence, for their stories not only harmonise with each other but are free from any inherent improbability or other serious defect.

The principal point for consideration amongst those raised on behalf of the applicants is, whether there is corroboration as regards each applicant. The law in this country regarding corroboration of an accomplice's evidence does not differ from the English Law. The latest English ruling on the point in which the previous case-law has been reviewed is Rex v. Baskerville (1) in which the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal was delivered by Lord Reading, C. J. As regards the nature and extent of the corroboration required, the proposition laid down in Reg. v. Mullins (2) by Maule, J., that "confirmation does not mean that there should be independent evidence of that which the accomplice relates, or his testimony would be unnecessary" was accepted as law. It was observed that if it were required that the accomplice should be confirmed in every detail of the crime, his evidence would not be essential to the case, it would be merely confirmatory of other and independent testimony. It was further held that the corroboration must be by some evidence other than that of an accomplice and, therefore, one accomplice's evidence is not corroboration of the testimony of another accomplice. At page 667 it was held that: "Evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it * * * * The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. It would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration, except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice that the accused committed the crime is true, not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused.

"The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime... Were the law otherwise many crimes which are usually committed between accomplices in secret, such as incest, offences with females, or the present case, could never be brought to justice."

Judging by the test laid down above it appears to me that there is sufficient corroboration on the record of the accomplice's evidence as regards each applicant. That the Will is a forgery is sufficiently proved, apart from the admission of Kisan and the evidence of the approvers, by P. W. No. 12 the handwriting expert. No attempt appears to have been made in the lower Courts to show that it was genuine. The document being a forged one apparently brought into existence after Govinda's death, a presumption may well be raised that the writer and the attesting witnesses are responsible for it and that they have combined and lent their aid to bring it into existence. The circumstances are strongly suggestive of a conspiracy to support a false claim by forgery. If they plead innocence they must prove it, I cannot take it for granted, as I am asked to do, that the writer Punjaji or the attesting witnesses Kisan, Govinda, Bajirao and Gopal wrote the Will or attested it in the circumstances alleged by them, namely, that some one else asked them to write or attest the document, or that the document already bore the signatures of other attesting witnesses. This is not the conduct of persons of ordinary prudence or of persons of the class to which the accused belong. Apart from other circumstances, the fact of their handwriting appearing on the Will is, in my opinion, corroboration connecting or tending to connect them with the crime.

Shamji's case is that the Will is genuine, that he saw Govinda sign it and that he attested it at Govinda's request. Sheoram too states that he attested the Will at the request of Govinda. No rebutting evidence to prove the genuineness of the Will has been called and it is difficult to see how these two can escape conviction if the Will is in fact forged.

The cases of Laxman and Decappa stand on a somewhat different footing. They have not attested the document, and it has to be seen what corroborative evidence exists in their case. As remarked above, such evidence may be merely circumstantial. Laxman and Decappa are friends of Kisan. Both have been under pecuniary obligation to him. They were living in Kisan's bada at the time the forgery was committed and the deed was attested by Kisan and others in their presence. They were examined as Kisan's witnesses in Kisan's civil suit to establish the forgery of the Will. There is some evidence that they were subsequently rewarded by Kisan. These are circumstances which tend to show their connection with the crime. I am now dealing with the case in revision, and I have only to see whether there is any corroboration. Whether the corroboration is strong or slender is not a matter into which I am inclined to go in revision. It is sufficient for me that both the lower Courts have accepted it as sufficient.

The case has been argued here more or less as an appeal. The main point, however, which, in my opinion, required consideration was the question of corroboration. Other minor points urged by some of the learned Pleaders who represented the accused may be briefly noticed.

It is argued that the joint trial of those accused who pleaded that the Will was genuine with the others who did not so plead or admitted that it was forged was bad. The Sessions Judge has dealt with this objection in paragraph 4 of his judgment. I need only add that the plea that the accused is likely to make in defense has no bearing on the question whether a joint trial may legally be held or not.

On behalf of Gopala it is urged that the approvers' evidence does not show that Gopala had any knowledge of the conspiracy before the Will was brought to him for attestation. It is said that the forgery of the Will was complete as soon as the executor's signature was forged on it and nothing more was required to give the document the force of a Will, for no attestation is necessary in law for the Will of a Hindu. The argument is plausible but opposed to probabilities. I have no doubt that a Will complete with attestation, whether legally required or not, was meant to be forged. One without the hall-mark of attestation would have been deemed by the parties interested as utterly valueless in a Court of Law. I have very little doubt that people of the class to which the deceased Govindrao and the accused belong would never think of an unattested Will as sufficient or valid in law, or likely to stand much chance of being held proved in a Court. Gopala was in my opinion fully cognisant when he wrote his signature that he was writing a part of the document intended to be forged. In any case the writing of Gopala's signature itself would, it seems, amount to a forgery.

It is pointed out that the main motive for the forgery was believed and put forward by the prosecution to be the creation of evidence to establish Kisan's adoption by Raghoji and that it is clear from the record that this forgery was by no means necessary as an aid to the proof of the adoption. It is contended that the alleged motive failing, Kisan and the accused who are said to have acted for his benefit must be held to be innocent. It is true that the Will is not the sole or even the main prop of Kisan's adoption by Raghoji and that the principal motive for the forgery appears to be to enable Kisan to get immediate possession and management of Govinda's property. Nevertheless, the Will in a secondary way goes to support Kisan's adoption by Ragho. Apart from this, however, the failure of the prosecution to appreciate the real motive cannot affect the merits of the case if it is otherwise sufficiently proved.

Bajirao's application abates. All the other applications fail and are dismissed.

Under section 125, Criminal Procedure Code, a District Magistrate has power to cancel a bond for keeping the peace at any time, if he considers it ought never to have been taken at all, but he cannot alter or modify it. It is wrong to exclude from consideration direct evidence of specific incidents showing that the person to be bound down behaved as man of violent and aggressive temper. These are relevant to the question whether a man is likely to commit a breach of the peace or not and the evidence concerning those incidents is in no sense evidence of repute. Revision of an order against the District Magistrate, Nimar, dated the 16th February 1922.

Mr. M. E. Dixit, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant for revision, H. F. Baines of Khandwa, was bound over to keep the peace for one year on the 9th of January 1922 by a Sub Divisional Magistrate. He applied to the District Magistrate to cancel the bond under section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the learned District Magistrate, purporting to act under that section, reduced the period to six months, of which five have already expired. He has now applied to this Court to revise this order. The application is one of the common class of applications and appeals, both civil and criminal, that are made without the least thought of possible loss to the applicant. Under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure all that a District Magistrate is empowered to do with a bond for keeping the peace is to cancel it or leave it alone, he cannot alter or modify it. Under sections 406 and 423 of the Code he can alter a bond for good behaviour but these sections apply only to that kind of bond. Unless, therefore, I can find reason for holding in revision that the bond ought never to have been taken at all, the District Magistrate's order will have to be set aside and that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate restored.

(2). It might be suggested that the only logical result of the restoration of the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate would be that a month hence, unless anything should happen in the meanwhile to make such a course inexpedient, the District Magistrate would cancel the bond for one year for the reasons stated in his order under consideration as reasons for holding that it never ought to have been taken for more than six months. It was held in Emperor v. Dalli (1) that he has power to cancel a bond if he considers that it ought never to have been taken at all and if he can do so immediately after the execution of the bond, he can equally do so six months later. But he did not find that this bond ought never to have been taken; he found that it was rightly taken, but he was of opinion that all likelihood of a breach of the peace would probably disappear in six months. He will be in a much better position to decide this matter at the end of the six months, and he can then cancel the bond or let it stand as may seem to him advisable; indeed, there is no reason why application in the matter should not be made to him at once before the end of the six months. I may, however, remark that the allegation of the disappearance of the probability of violence that existed in June 1921 and January 1922 would require more support than is to be found in merely technical objections to the finding that it did exist then.

(3) I have, however, to consider the applicant's contention that the order never ought to have been passed at all. In support of it his learned Counsel put forward two arguments. The first seems based on a misreading of the evidence. It is urged that Mujahid Khan, the person who practically confesses himself a professional "butly", says that Baines asked him to get Dr. Khisty beaten about May 1920, just after the incidents which he desired to avenge, and he informed Dr. Khisty of Baines' proposals to him about September 1920, and this cannot be regarded as evidence that there was any likelihood of a breach of the peace after the 15th of June 1921, when Dr. Khisty first complained to the Police in the matter. But what Mujahid Khan says is, that Baines approached him about four times between May 1920 and September of the same year, when he first told Dr. Khisty about it, and again four or five times between September 1920 and June 1921; and he again warned Dr. Khisty six or seven days before Id-ul-fitr, which fell on the 8th of June 1921. It seems beyond doubt that the likelihood of a breach of the peace was considerably greater in June 1921 than it was in May 1920, and not less. But in a case of this character the view of this Court of the effect of the evidence is of little consequence; there is evidence on which both the lower Courts could legally and reasonably base their finding and I cannot disturb that finding.
(1) 29 Ind. Cas. 827; 11 N. L. R. 98; 16 Cr. L. J. 5,

(4) But the main argument advanced for the applicant is that section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies only to persons likely to commit a breach of the peace themselves, not to one who merely instigates a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity by others. The section itself speaks of a person who "is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity." Now, abetment by instigation or conspiracy of the offense of voluntarily causing hurt is undoubtedly a wrongful act, and I can imagine nothing more likely to occasion a breach of the peace than instigating the infliction of a public thrashing such as was contemplated here. The view for which the learned Counsel contends is, however, supported by the judgment of the Chief Court of the Punjab in Dewan

Singh v. Emperor (2) in which Mr. Justice Johnstone held that a finding that a person is not likely to commit a breach of the peace himself but may very likely induce his partisans to do so does not warrant the taking of security from him under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that such security should not be taken in order to prevent a person from inducing another person to break the peace. With all due respect, I feel bound to take the exactly contrary view, which appears to me the only possible meaning of the very plain words of section 107 that are quoted above.

(5) The learned Judge states no reasons for the view he takes but cites as exactly in point and follows without discussion the rulings in Empress v. Badhawa Singh (3) and Ram Gopal Singh v. Rajah Gopal Singh Deb (4). In the former case the Chief Court of the Punjab (Powell and Roe, JJ.) held that the acts found proved against the accused were not likely to cause a breach of the peace and went on to say that section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code "clearly contemplates that the Magistrate should have some tangible evidence that some definite act is contemplated, which act, if committed, is likely to cause a breach of the peace." That is surely a plain expression of the view that incitement to a breach of the peace is within the contemplation of section 107. In the second case quoted the Calcutta High Court held in 1872 that it was illegal to take security from a person to prevent his over-zealous friends from committing a breach of the peace out of sympathy with him but entirely without his incitement or instigation. That is as clearly outside the words of section 107 of the present Criminal Procedure Code as it is outside those of section 282 of Act XXV of 1861 then in force or section 491 of Act X of 1872 which followed it, and also outside the natural justice and common sense of the matter.

SHEOBARAN DUBE v. EMPEROR.

(6) It is perhaps necessary to mention that the learned District Magistrate was wrong in excluding from consideration direct evidence of specific incidents in which Baines behaved as a man of violent and aggressive temper. Those incidents are very relevant to the question whether he was likely to commit a breach of the peace or not, and the evidence is in no sense evidence of repute. That consists of the statements of witnesses that a person is very generally regarded as being of a particular character or as being in the habit of doing certain acts. No evidence of that kind is to be found in this case. The rejection of the evidence has not, however, varied the decision. The order of the District Magistrate reducing the terms for which the bond for keeping the peace was to be taken to six months is set aside, and that of the Sub Divisional Magistrate's to the effect that a bond for one year is to be executed is restored.

A District Magistrate acting in the exercise of his powers under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, can pass an order against an accused person, residing outside the local limits of his jurisdiction, when the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended within the local limits of his jurisdiction.

Criminal revision from an order of the Officiating District Magistrate, Jaunpur.
Messrs. Nihal Chand and H. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Applicants.

Mr. E. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The evidence on the record shows that all the applicants have threatened the complainant, Parsotam, so as to cause a reasonable belief that any one of them might commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity. The evidence brings this fact home to every one. There can be no objection to the legality of the order on the ground that there is no evidence on the record to justify it, for there is evidence on the record to justify it. The remaining point taken is that Jagannath is a resident of the Benares State. The argument is that, in these circumstances, no order can be passed against him under section 107. There is no force in this argument. Section 107, sub-section (2) of Act V of 1898 lays down very clearly that no proceedings can take place under section 107 unless either the person informed against or the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended is within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate determining the matter. Jagannath is not a resident of the Jaunpur district and it may be that when the notice was issued upon him he was not within the Jaunpur district but in Benares State. It is immaterial whether he was or was not in the Jaunpur district at the time that the notice was issued, for the place where the breach of the peace is apprehended is within the Jaunpur district and the second proviso of section 107, which lays down that no proceedings shall be taken before any Magistrate other than a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate unless both the persons informed against and the place where the breach of the peace is apprehended are within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, has been complied with, for these proceedings were taken before the District Magistrate. I can find no errors or irregularities in the procedure, and on the merits I consider the order abundantly justifiable.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 197—
sanction under s. 197 for prosecution of, if necessary.*

A Forest Ranger in the Central Provinces is not a public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Government of India or the Local Government. Consequently the previous sanction of the Government to prosecute a Forest Ranger for an offence committed by him in his official capacity is not necessary under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 350, col. 1.]

Revision against an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Amroli, dated the 12th January 1922, in Criminal Case No. 111 of 1921.

Mr. B. R. Jaywant, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The applicant, Kripasingh, a Forest Ranger, was challaned by the Police under section 347, Indian Penal Code, for wrongfully confining a boy named Kachria for the purpose of extorting money from him or from some persons interested in him. The facts on which the prosecution relied are briefly these. Kachria, his father and brother were said to have removed each a bundle of grass from the forest without passes. Kachria was seized by Mahabhik, forest guard, and produced before the applicant. He was tied to a post about mid-day by the applicant's order and was not released till his mother came about sunset and paid Rs. 3, Re. 1 for the bundle of grass taken by him and Rs. 2 for the bundles said to have been taken by his father and brother who had escaped seizure.

After the prosecution case was closed, an objection was raised on behalf of the applicant that under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, the Court had no power to take cognizance of the case without the sanction of the Conservator of Forests. This objection was overruled by the Trying Magistrate and the present application in revision is filed against the order of the Magistrate disallowing the objection.

Two points require decision in this case: first, whether the applicant is a public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Government of India or the Local Government; and second, whether he is accused of the offence charged as a public servant.

With regard to the first point, it is not contended that a Ranger is a public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Government of India. The only question, therefore, is whether a Ranger is one not removable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government. It is contended for the Crown that he is not such. Under Article 37 of the Forest Department Code, 7th edition, which came into effect from the 1st April 1913, the removal from service of a Ranger, who is an officer of the Subordinate Forest Service, is to be regulated by the orders of the Local Government. I understand the effect of this Article to be, that it is left to the Local Government to decide whether a Ranger shall be an officer not removable from office without its own sanction. It appears that the Local Government has decided that he is not: vide paragraph 28 (2), Part I, Central Provinces Forest Manual, 4th Edition, 1921, which provides that the dismissal of Rangers will be ordered by Conservators.

Reference is made by the learned Pleader for the applicant to letter No. 1214/XIV-1.75, dated the 25th November 1914, from the Under-Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, to the Chief Conservator of Forests, Central Provinces. In this letter the Chief Commissioner, accepts the proposal of the Conservators' Conference relating to the delegation to Conservators of power to dismiss Rangers. It is contended that this letter shows that the power to dismiss a Ranger was in the hands of the Government and must be deemed to continue still in its hands though now exercised by the Conservators by delegation. I am not prepared to accept the latter part of this contention. The Government has decided that a Ranger can be dismissed by the Conservator. The order of dismissal by the Conservator does not require confirmation by the Government and is effective without it. The power has in fact been transferred to the Conservator without any reservation. In a sense every officer of the Government exercises his power by delegation. The Government has general control over his actions and the power to undo what he has done. The Ranger dismissed by the Conservator may be restored to office by the Government, but that does not mean that the order of dismissal by the Conservator is invalid and ultra vires for want of its sanction, or in other words, that the Ranger is not removable from his office without its sanction.

NIZAMUDDIN KHAN v. MUHAMMAD ZIA-UL-NABI KHAN.

The applicant not being a public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Government of India or the Local Government, no sanction under section 197 is necessary before a Court can take cognizance of the offence. In this view, it is unnecessary to consider whether the applicant is accused as a public servant. The application fails and is dismissed.

District Magistrate, power of, to cancel a bond for keeping the peace—Grounds for cancellation.*

The only ground on which a District Magistrate can cancel a bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour is that something has supervened since the date of the First Court's order which satisfies the District Magistrate that, in view of the facts since come to light, there is no longer any necessity for keeping the accused person under bond. [p. 851, col. 1.]

A District Magistrate taking action under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot treat an application made under that section as an appeal and reverse the order of the First Class Magistrate on the facts. If he considers the order to be wrong on the merits, he can exercise his revisional powers and submit the record to the High Court. But the cancellation of bonds contemplated by section 125 can only be on the ground that the bonds are no longer necessary. [p. 351, col. 1.]

Mr. B. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—These two applications in revision arise out of certain proceedings which were taken in the Court of an Assistant Magistrate of the Agra District under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It was apparently reported to the Magistrate that two persons, namely, Nizamuddin Khan and Muhammad Zia-ul-Nabi Khan were on very bad terms and were likely to commit a breach of the peace. The report was made to the Magistrate with a view to both parties being bound over to keep the peace. The parties, it appears, are relations.

Separate proceedings were instituted against each of the parties, and in the result the Assistant Magistrate bound over both parties for a period of one year.

Zia-ul-Nabi Khan made an application to the Officiating District Magistrate of Agra under section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that officer passed an order cancelling the order of the Assistant Magistrate by which Zia-ul-Nabi Khan was bound over to keep the peace.

The case of Nizamuddin Khan, the other accused, came up before the permanent District Magistrate at a later stage under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. So far as Nizamuddin Khan was concerned, the District Magistrate passed an order refusing to interfere with the order passed by the Assistant Magistrate.

I have now before me two applications in revision both presented on behalf of Nizamuddin Khan. As regards his own case Nizamuddin Khan contends that he was not liable on the evidence offered at the Trial Court to be bound over to keep the peace. As regards the case of Zia-ul-Nabi Khan the contention is that the order passed by the Officiating District Magistrate cancelling the bond under the provisions of section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was an illegal order. Notice has been issued to Zia-ul-Nabi Khan in this case to show cause why the order under section 125 should not be set aside.

Dealing, first, with the case of Nizamuddin Khan, which is Case No. 94 of 1922, I have examined the evidence which was led in the Court of the Magistrate, and, after perusal of that evidence which was not rebutted by any evidence on the part of Nizamuddin Khan himself, I am satisfied that there was ample ground justifying the order passed by the Magistrate. I may further observe that, when Nizamuddin Khan was called upon to show cause, he expressed his willingness to be subjected to a bond. So much for the case No. 94. The application of Nizamuddin is dismissed.

As regards the other case in which Zia-ul-Nabi Khan is the accused (Case No. 93 of 1922), it appears to me that on the authorities of this Court the order passed by the Officiating District Magistrate is an illegal order. I may refer to two cases one of which is to be found as Banarsi Das v. Partab Singh (1). In that case it was held that a District Magistrate taking action under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot treat an application made under that section as an appeal and reverse the order of the first class Magistrate on the facts. If he considers the order to be wrong on the merits, he can exercise his revisional powers and submit the record to the High Court. But the cancellation of bonds contemplated by section 125 can only be on the ground that the bonds are no longer necessary. This case was followed in another case reported as Shankar Lal v. Emperor (2). I agree with this interpretation of section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It appears to me that the only ground on which a District Magistrate can cancel a bond for keeping the peace and to be of good behaviour is that something has supervened since the date of the First Court's order which satisfies the District Magistrate that, in view of the facts since come to light, there is no longer any necessity for keeping the accused person under bond. I do not think section 125 can be used by a District Magistrate as if he were sitting as a Court of Appeal or that he is justified in passing an order under the section merely because he takes a different view of the evidence which has been submitted to the Court of first instance. If he thinks that the order of the First Court is not maintainable on the evidence as presented, his duty is not to pass an order under section 125 but to refer the case to the High Court on its revisional side. I, therefore, set aside the order of the Officiating District Magistrate dated the 24th and restore the order of the Assistant Magistrate which bears the date, 17th of September 1921.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 342 (4), 526—Application by accused for transfer—Affidavit of accused, whether competent.

When an accused person makes an application for the transfer of a case against him, he is not precluded by section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code from making an affidavit in support of such application, nor would there be any bar to his being prosecuted under section 195 of the Penal Code for making a false statement in such an affidavit. RAGHUNANDAN PRASAD V. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken by Mr. Jai Lal on behalf of the Crown that the affidavit of the accused Ali Ahmad which has been filed in support of the application for transfer is not a proper affidavit, on the ground that the accused could not be prosecuted in respect of any false statements that it may contain. Mr. Jai Lal has cited Queen-Empress v. Subbaya (1), Barkat, In the matter of the Petition of (2) and Emperor v. Bindeshri Singh (3), and he relies mainly on the last of these rulings, in which it was held that, when an accused person applies for the transfer of a case pending against him, supporting his application by an affidavit, he cannot, or at least ought not to, be prosecuted under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of statements made therein. I cannot agree with the contention. The provision in section 342 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code that no oath shall be administered to the accused evidently has reference only to the statement made by him in answer to questions put by the Court in accordance with sub-section (1) of that section. It does not preclude him from making an affidavit in support of an application for transfer under section 526, and I do not see that there would be any bar to his being prosecuted under section 193, Indian Penal Code, for making a false statement in such an affidavit. I hold, therefore, that the affidavit is one that satisfies the requirements of section 526. No sufficient reason, however, has been shown for transferring the case from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's Court. The only material portions of the affidavit are paragraphs 3 and 7, and the report received from the Magistrate is a sufficient answer to the allegations made. I dismiss the application.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been admitted on one ground only, namely, the propriety of the order passed by the Magistrate directing the accused to produce sureties who reside within a radius of five miles of the village of Omraha.

This order of the Magistrate's is illegal. He has no authority to lay down any limits within which the sureties must reside. So much of the order, therefore, is set aside, and the Magistrate will be directed to receive and accept any proper sureties who may offer themselves on behalf of the accused. Patent medicine, imitation of—Suit for injunction—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54—Test of imitation—Protection of Court, when to be given.

A customer is generally and to a great extent guided by first impressions of general similarity. Consequently in a suit for injunction against the imitation of a patent medicine, its label and general get-up, the true test is to consider the number of similarities, not to calculate the points of difference. Minor points of distinction here and there which are not likely to attract a customer's eye on first sight, should not be magnified. [p. 355, col. 1.]

Though a Court of Law will not assist in the perpetration of a fraud, yet, where a particular business cannot be shown to be fraudulent, forbidden by law or even harmful to the public interest, the person whose trade is being captured and patent right infringed is entitled to its protection. [p. 355, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Narain Prasad Athana, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen and Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—On the 19th of February 1918, the plaintiff, Chetarpal Sharma, a tradesman in Muttra, brought a suit against Lala Jagannath Das, also a tradesman, and also in Muttra. The plaintiff set out that for more than twenty years he had been selling medicine under the name of Sukh Sancharak Co., and that he had put upon the market a medicine by the name of "Sudha Sindhu," that the medicine had borne that name for more than twenty years, and that for more than eight years the medicine had been sold in a uniform get up, that is to say, the bottle had always been the same size, there had been the same inner label on the phial, there had been the same external label, being the outer wrapper on the packet. Enclosed in the packet were directions and 'puff' advertisements and description of diseases. He also said that in the year 1908 he had registered the labels as his trade-mark. He further said in his plaint that he had what he described as "Agents" in the villages in India, Burma, Ceylon and elsewhere, to the number of 15,000. He gave evidence in support of all these matters, and he showed that for some years, at all events, about 100,000 bottles of this medicine had been distributed throughout this country every year. He complains of the conduct of the defendant who, he said, had imitated his labels and get-up of his medicine with a view, no doubt, to cut into and enjoy some part of this very prosperous trade of the plaintiff, which a year or two ago had brought him in some Rs. 14,000 profit annually. The plaintiff alleged that by reason of the similarity of the labels, of the wording on the labels, of the colouring, of the spacing, in fact which in general is called "the get-up," the defendant had put upon the market an article so like that which the plaintiff was selling and which had become associated with his name that it was calculated to mislead, and could be passed off as and for the goods of the plaintiff. He alleged that that conduct constituted an actionable wrong and entitled him to an injunction.

Taking the article as it is handed over from the seller to the buyer, one finds that in both instances the packet is cylindrical and approximately, indeed almost identically, of the same size. In each case the foundation of the paper of the outer cover is white. The registered label of the plaintiff has a peacock blue back ground. The label of the defendant is green and there is thus a distinct and most appreciable difference in the general background colours. At the end of each packet and acting as seals for the fastening, the plaintiff has at one end the name of the medicine "Sudha Sindhu" in English. The defendant also has a label similar in appearance but with a green background and with the name of his medicine "Piyus Sindhu." Both have at the other end the name of the medicine in Hindi. Samples of other medicines sold by the defendant have been produced and at the bottom of such packets there is not the name of the medicine but the representation of a rising sun which is said to be the trade-mark of the defendant.

Turning now to the text and the general conformation of the outer labels, we find in both cases they are the same size and have ornamental tracery running all round the outside along the outer edge. Both labels give prominence to the name of the medicine. Both names are printed in red ink with an outline of white, and on the right hand side the medicine of the plaintiff is described as "a good remedy for cholera, asthma, cough and diarrhoea." On the left hand side of the defendant's label the description is "an invaluable remedy for cough, cholera, diarrhoea and asthma." In the centre of each label there appears what is said to be photographs of the plaintiff's and defendant's respectively. The background of the plaintiff's (in the copy furnished to us) is very dark. The background of the defendant's is white. Transversely across the chest, in each case, is the signature of the plaintiff and the defendant. In tablets below there is white printing on a red ground in each, and underneath it white printing on a dark blue ground and the dark blue is precisely the same colour in each case. Inside the red tablet with the blue printing of the word "Sudha Sindhu" there appears an unnecessary white dot, probably a printer's error. It is clearly marked and clearly defined. In the big label of the defendant's that dot is not reproduced, but when we come to examine the similar inside labels we find that that dot in the "Sudha Sindhu" label has by some extraordinary coincidence been incorporated into the defendant's label. Wrapped round each bottle is a smaller but similar label. At the top of the plaintiff's label are the words "this whole label is our trade mark, registered No. 13." At the top of the defendant's is "this whole design is our registered trade mark No. 16."

We have already pointed out the singular circumstance that the misprint which occurs in the "Sudha Sindhu" is reproduced in the "Piyus Sindhu". "Sudha Sindhu" is described as "good remedy for cholera, asthma, cough and diarrhoea." "Piyus Sindhu" is described as "good remedy for cough, cholera, colic, asthma and diarrhoea." We attach importance to the fact that the defendant a year or two before the action used the very words "good remedy for" which had been on many thousands of the plaintiff's bottles for many years past. Immediately under those words in the plaintiff's label is the name of the firm "Sukh Sancharak Co., Muttra," and in the same place are to be found in the defendant's labels the name of the defendant's firm. In each case are words in Hindi, again showing the same characteristics of colouring, red, white and blue as are in the plaintiff's label. No one comparing these two sets of labels can have any reasonable doubt that the person, who a year before the commencement of this action brought the defendant's labels into existence, had the plaintiff's labels before him and copied them as accurately as he dared to do.

The question is whether these labels, connected as they are with certain literature, to which we shall refer in a moment, constitute so close an imitation of the well-known get-up of the plaintiff's as to be calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that the defendant's goods are those of the plaintiff's. Inside the outer covering of each of these medicines, there are directions and advertisements. They are of the usual florid character which are used in patent medicines. But the point of importance is this, that when the defendant is describing all the virtues which his medicine possesses, we find that he is taking in many cases word for word the advertisements which the plaintiff had previously drafted years before. The actual text of the two has been transcribed for our use into the Roman character and has been read to us. Two persons sitting down independently to describe coughs, asthma, diarrhoea, etc., would, no doubt, give a generally similar description but a comparison of the text shows beyond doubt that the defendant copied the text of the plaintiff, being careful, however, to make occasional transpositions. Now what, in our view, would be the effect of all these similarities amongst the purchasers to whom the plaintiff's medicine is usually sold? The bulk are illiterate. Indeed, it is said that certainly not one person in twenty who is a customer of the plaintiff's would be able to read that which is upon the labels. Therefore, he must necessarily go by the general comparison of the labels, of the contents and of the size of the bottle. As regards the size of the bottle, it is of a usual size and one in which neither the plaintiff nor the defendant can claim any special property. Many of these kinds of medicines are sold in bottles of this size and Mr. O'Connor does not contend that he can require the defendant to alter the size of his bottle.

We are of opinion that this medicine of the defendant, encased as it is in the way we have described, could be readily passed off so as to deceive the ordinary village customer into the belief that he was purchasing the medicine of the plaintiff. We have no doubt that it was with that very object that the defendant arranged for the get up of his goods and came into the market as against the plaintiff. The defendant did not go into the witness-box. He preferred to take his chance that the plaintiff would not give sufficient evidence to bring this matter within the recognised standards by which these cases have to be decided. Singularly enough, he succeeded before the Subordinate Judge who did not give to this case that degree of thought and care which he should have done. The learned Judge looked at the matter from the wrong point of view—he focussed attention on the points of difference. He did not consider the number of similarities, nor did he consider that in passing off you must be guided very greatly by first impressions as to general similarity. The Judge enumerated the points of difference, and then said the points of resemblance were quite immaterial. We think, on the contrary, that the points of resemblance are the principal matters, and had they been carefully considered in relation to the facts as to the trading of the plaintiff and defendant, no one could have come to any other conclusion than that the defendant deliberately copied the labels of the plaintiff and the get-up of his goods. We think that the copyist was so successful in his attempt as to bring the defendant's goods within that class of cases in which the proper remedy of the plaintiff is an injunction.

Dr. Katju has referred us to the 20th paragraph of the written statement in which the point is taken that, inasmuch as this medicine does not do all that is claimed for it and is of an ordinary allopathic nature, passed off under a Sanskrit name, that the plaintiff is entitled to no protection. Now, there is no doubt that the Court must not assist in the perpetration of a fraud. There is equally no doubt that if any particular business could be shown to be a fraudulent business or one forbidden by law, or on which the public policy of the law was to prevent, then in those cases the proprietor could not claim the protection of the Court. All patent medicine vendors puff their goods extravagantly. No one believes that these advertisements and claims are literally true, but at all events there is proof that this medicine of the plaintiff has been in the market for twenty years and is used by many thousands of people. The defendant went to the expense of calling an eminent Civil Surgeon who spoke about the properties and proportions of the various compounds which this medicine is said to contain, and, although he thought that the strength of a particular dose was such as to be of very little medicinal value, there certainly is no condemnation of the preparation such as would justify one in thinking that the preparation was harmful. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the business carried on by the plaintiff which he seeks to have protected cannot come within that passage from the Laws of England which Dr. Katju has read to us.

The question is, in what form the injunction is to go. Mr. O'Connor has said that, assuming the labels were entirely distinct from that of the plaintiff's, as, for instance, black printing on a white ground, he could not object nor could he lay claim to restraining the defendant from the use of the words "Piyus Sindhu", and if the defendant honestly wishes to put this preparation on the market and at the same time to be free from the suspicion of wishing to capture the plaintiff's trade by unfair means, that is the easiest way out of the matter, but at all events he must be restrained by an injunction and he must understand that if he disobeys the injunction, he must be committed to prison for contempt of Court. It is, therefore, ordered that the defendant be restrained from selling or offering for sale his medicine "Piyus Sindhu" in any outside wrapper or inside label or with any instructions for use or advertisements in any form calculated or intended to pass off or enable others to pass off such medicine as and for the medicine of the plaintiff.

This appeal, therefore, must be allowed with costs and fees on the higher scale, and an injunction must issue to the defendant in the above terms. We make no order for an account.

Partition—Widow of deceased co-sharer, whether can claim partition—Maintenance, agreement to receive, whether bars claim.

The widow of a deceased co-sharer in a joint holding has a statutory right to demand partition. Bhag Bhari v. Wazir Khan, 14 Ind. Cas. 45; 70 P. R. 1912; 91 P. W. R. 1912; 124 P. L. R. 1912, followed.

The mere fact that she once agreed to receive a certain amount as maintenance from the co-sharers of her deceased husband would not debar her for all time from seeking to have her share in the holding partitioned off.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 9th April 1918, affirming that of the subordinate Judge, Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 31st January 1918.

Lala Harbhagwan Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badri Nath Kapur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the widow of Wadhawa Singh, is a co sharer with her husband's brother and uncle in a holding. She was receiving Rs. 24 and 24 kaccha maunds of wheat a year from the brother-in-law but finding this insufficient she applied to the Revenue Authorities for a partition of the holding. The application was rejected and she then brought the present suit for a declaration that she was entitled to have her share partitioned off.

The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit, holding that the plaintiff's remedy is to take steps to have her maintenance allowance increased. The First Court said that when the maintenance had once been fixed the plaintiff could not get the land partitioned, it being proved by the defendants' evidence that there was no custom by which she could do so. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff should have proved a custom by which she is entitled to the right which she claims.

KASHIBHAI KALIDAS v. VALLABHAI WAGJIBHAI.

The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal, and we think it should be accepted. Not only is there no evidence on the record on the question of custom, but there was no issue framed on the point, so that the lower Courts were not justified in going into that matter. Moreover, the question of custom never arose on the pleadings, so that no issue in regard to it was necessary.

It was held in Bhag Bhari v. Wazir Khan (1) that the widow of a deceased co sharer in a joint holding has a statutory right to demand partition and as the question of custom is eliminated we fail to see why the plaintiff should not obtain partition. The fact of her having agreed to receive a certain quantity of money and grain annually from her brother-in-law does not debar her for all time from seeking to have her share in the holding partitioned off.

We, therefore, accept the appeal, reverse the decrees of the Courts below, and give the plaintiff a decree declaring her to be entitled to have her share in the joint holding partitioned off. The first defendant, who resisted the claim, will pay the plaintiff's costs throughout.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.Easement—Eaves, projection of, over another's land—Title to land, if acquired—Easement if established within 20 years—Injunction, when to be refused.

Where the plaintiff had allowed the defendant's eaves to project and rain-water to be discharged over his land for twenty years, all that the defendant could acquire by prescription would be an easement imposing the burden on the servient tenement of having that projection over it, he could not acquire a title to the plaintiff's land even up to the line of his projections.

A plaintiff is entitled to seek relief by means of an injunction against a party seeking to establish an easement against him within 20 years and his acquiescence would not, as a rule, disentitle him to the grant of an injunction. But where on account of the acquiescence the cost of obeying the injunction would be very much greater than it otherwise would have been, or even prohibitive, the Court ought to refuse it.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 556 of 1917, varying the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Nadiad, in Civil Suit No. 248 of 1916.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to obtain various perpetual injunctions against the defendant. The first was to restrain the defendant from discharging rain water on to plaintiff's land at a particular place. The second was an injunction to the defendant to remove the projection over the khadki wall and the suit land. The third was to restrain the defendant from making the intended dattan (cess-pool).

The plaintiff succeeded in both the Courts in getting an injunction restraining the defendant from making the intended dattan, the remaining portions of the claim being rejected. The lower Court had come to the conclusion that, because the plaintiff had allowed the defendant's eaves to project and rain water to be discharged over his land for nearly twenty years, he was thereby barred from coming to a Court of Equity for relief. The learned Appellate Judge went further than this and held that the plaintiff had lost his title to the land up to the line of the defendant's projections, which had existed over twenty years. That would be a very startling decision and it was obviously wrong.

All that the defendant could acquire by prescription would be an easement imposing the burden on the servient tenement of having that projection over it. Even if he acquired the right to project his roof over the plaintiff's land and to discharge rain-water over the plaintiff's land, he could not acquire a title to the plaintiff's land. His rights would be in the nature of an easement, which he could only acquire either by grant or by prescription, and it is admitted by the defendant that he had not acquired any easement.

It has been argued before us that owing to the long acquiescence by the plaintiff of this trespass against his rights, although it had not continued for twenty years, the Court will not grant an injunction. Reliance is placed on a decision of this Court in Vithoba Raghunath Sonar v. D. Anna Rozario Mendosa (1). In that case the Court said :—

"However, it appears that the plaintiff has acquiesced in the falling of the water on his land for many years; and under these circumstances, we think that, having regard to section 56, clause (4) of the Specific Relief Act, an injunction restraining the defendant from allowing it to fall ought not now to be granted."

Clause (h), if that was referred to, relates to the prevention of a continuing breach in which the applicant has acquiesced; clause (i) is applicable when the conduct of the applicant or his agents has been such as to disentitle him to the assistance of the Court. We do not think that any general rule can be laid down in such cases. The Statute of Limitation entitles the plaintiff to seek relief by means of an injunction against a party seeking to establish an easement against him within twenty years. Admittedly, there may be cases where it would be inequitable on account of the plaintiff's acquiescence over a period of less than twenty years to grant the relief. If on account of the acquiescence the cost of obeying the injunction would be very much greater than it otherwise would have been or even prohibitive, then I agree that the Court ought to penalise the plaintiff for his neglect to assert his right earlier. But there is no such equity in this case. It does not appear that there will be any more expense to the defendant in obeying the injunction than there would have been if the application had been made shortly after the defendant erected his building. The defendant must have erected his building in defiance of the plaintiff's rights and he did so at his own risk.

We think, therefore, that the appeal must be allowed and there must be in addition to the injunction already granted by the JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of possession over 522 kanals and 4 marlas of land situated in Mahal Nagban belonging to Lamba Gaur Jag'r. At one time it was in the possession of Balahia Gujars under a peculiar tenure known as menhara. In Sambat 1918 His Highness Maharaja Partab Chand made a grant of the tenure (menhara) to Mian Dalipa. The document creating the grant is not available but a copy of the khewat prepared at the revised Settlement of 1868 relating to Mauza Mahal Nagban has been filed in which the words contained in the grant are reproduced. Below the usual entries of the khewat the following statement is found appended:—

No rent is paid to the Raja Sahib. In other words it is muaf "free" to the menharadar under the following qatta :—

"Gorja, Negi of the Nagban is hereby informed under the orders of His Highness Maharaja Partab Chand that a Baghan Khot'a which is a menhara and which was formerly in possession of Balahia Gujars but now unoccupied has been granted to Mian Dalipa. The said menhara in which the Balahia Gujars used to graze their cattle has been granted to Dalipa and shall now be used by his she-buffaloes.

Written on the 22nd Sawan Sambat 1918, by order of Mian Kahr Chand."

The plaintiff Raja Jai Chand is now the owner of the Mahal having succeeded to the Jagir Lamba Gaur on the death of his father.

JAI CHAND—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

VERSUS

SHAHZADA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Courts Act (XVIII of 1884), ss. 40, 70 (1), (a), (b)—Divisional Court confirming decree of lower Court—Revision to the Chief Court—Revision converted into appeal under s. 70—Punjab Courts Act I of 1912 passed before this conversion giving right of appeal—Appeal whether valid.

A petition for revision, under section 70 (1) (a) of the Punjab Courts Act XVIII of 1884, was presented to the Chief Court on 10th January 1920. Before the petition came up for admission, that section was repealed by Act I of 1912 but the admitting Judge by a mere inadvertence and probably not having before his mind the Act of 1912, admitted it as an appeal under clause (1) (b) of the repealed section. At the hearing of the appeal it was objected that as the power of converting a revision into a further appeal had been taken away by the new Act, the order of the Judge was made without authority.

Held, that although the Act of 1912 had taken away from the Chief Court the power of converting a revision into a further appeal, yet under section 40 of the Act of 1884, as amended by the Act of

JAI CHAND V. SHAHZADA.

The menharadar Mian Dalipa is also dead and as his successors, his sons and nephews, have come into the possession of the land in dispute claiming the right to remain in possession as menharadars.

The plaintiff sued to eject them on the ground that they had taken possession as usurpers. The defendants contested the suit with the allegation that the grant in favour of Dalipa created a heritable and irrevocable right which had descended to them as such and that the plaintiff was not entitled to eject them. Both oral and documentary evidence was produced by the parties in support of their respective contentions and the Court of first instance after a careful analysis and consideration thereof decided in favour of the defence and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court which also took the same view and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff then came up to the Chief Court and presented a petition for revision under section 70, sub-section (1), clause (a) of Act XVIII of 1884, as no further appeal lay against the decree of the Divisional Court under the provisions of section 40 of the Act. The judgment of the Divisional Judge was dated the 24th November 1911. The petition for revision was filed in the Chief Court on the 20th of January 1912 but before it was admitted, Punjab Act No. I of 1912 was passed by which section 70 of Act XVIII of 1884 was repealed and the provisions of section 40 of the Act were materially altered. The petition came up for admission on the 13th of February 1912 before a learned Judge of the Chief Court. The learned Judge by a mere inadvertence, and probably not having present before his mind the Act I of 1912 which had repealed section 70 of the old Act, made the following order: "Courts have concurred, but the case is of some importance and the decision may govern other grants of the kind, and the material for establishing so sweeping a custom seems to be meagre."

"Admitted as an appeal under section 70, sub-section (1), clause (b) and referred to a Division Bench." This appeal has now come up for decision before us and Mr. Tek Chand for the respondents has raised a preliminary objection to its hearing. His contention is that the valuation of the suit being only

Rs. 522 no further appeal lay against the concurrent judgments of the lower Appellate Court and therefore a petition for revision was filed on behalf of the plaintiff under section 70 (1), (a). The power of converting a revision into a further appeal under clause (b) of sub-section (1) of the above mentioned section had been taken away by Punjab Act I of 1912, therefore, the learned Judge who admitted the appeal on the 13th of February 1912 had no power to do so. In support of his contention the learned Vakil has relied upon three decisions of the Chief Court reported as Nur Din v. Musammatt Jhanlo (1), Bukam Chand v. Jindo Bai (2) and Surju Mal v. Asram (3).

The facts of this case, however, are somewhat different from the facts of the cases relied upon. The petition for revision in this case was filed within 90 days from the decree of the lower Appellate Court and when the present appeal was admitted the period of 90 days had not expired. Section 40 of the Punjab Courts Act provides that: "An appeal shall lie to the Chief Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to the Chief Court on any of the grounds" mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c). Therefore, an appeal could have been admitted in the case on the 13th of February 1912 when this appeal was admitted. Mr. Tek Chand, however, argues that only those appeals will be governed by the present section which relate to decrees passed after the coming into force of the present Act I of 1912. This contention is opposed to the plain wording of the section and in order to give effect to this contention it will be necessary to add to the section the words: "After coming into force of this Act" and this cannot be done. The preliminary objection, therefore, cannot prevail and we overrule it. We treat the appeal as having been properly admitted under section 40 of Act I of 1912 and proceed to decide it.

The question to be decided is, whether the grant in favour of Dalipa conferred a heritable right upon him or not. In the grant the tenure is described as menhara tenure and Dalipa is mentioned as menharadar. A description of this class of tenure is to be found in the Punjab Gazetteer and they are also found entered in the Settlement papers. In order to determine the nature of these tenures it is necessary, therefore, to examine closely the evidence to be found in those records. In the Settlement of 1868 the Settlement Officer, after making necessary enquiry, made a detailed entry as to this tenure in the wajib-ul-arz relating to Mahal Nagban Jagir Lamba Gaun. The wajib-ul-arz is translated and printed at pages 2 and 3 of the supplementary paper-book printed in this case. In clause 8 dealing with menhara and Soana tenures, the result of the inquiry, made by the Settlement Officer, is given in detail, and it is recorded therein that: "The right of menharadars is heritable. The Jagir is not competent to cust one and bestow the right on other." But it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the wajib-ul-arz refers only to those menharadars who pay dues and whereas it is admitted in this case that no dues are either fixed or are payable with respect to the menhara in dispute the wajib-ul-arz cannot apply to this menhara tenure.

In our opinion the circumstances of the non-payment of any dues cannot affect the question. For if it is a menhara tenure and as such it was granted to Mian Dalipa it must carry with it all the incidents attached to such tenures. The question is a question of fact which had to be determined on the evidence in the case and both the Courts below have come to a concurrent finding on the evidence that the tenure was intended to be hereditary and that, according to the custom relating to this tenure, the grant was irrevocable. There was some oral evidence also given in the case which has been believed by the lower Appellate Court. It is not possible for us in record appeal to hold that the Courts below have recorded a wrong finding on the evidence. These findings are binding upon this Court and cannot be interfered with. No question of law arises.

The appeal must necessarily fail and we dismiss it with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of the suit land from the first three defendants, or, in the alternative, to recover Rs. 417-9-0 from the fourth defendant. The fourth defendant had obtained a mortgage-decree on the 15th August 1913 in Suit No. 696 of 1910 against defendants Nos. 5 and 6 Sakharam and Tukaram. In the execution of that decree, the suit land was sold by auction on the 3rd March 1917. The plaintiff purchased it for Rs. 401 and his sale was confirmed on the 23rd May 1917. He says that he got possession of the land unobstructed, but the defendants allege that only symbolical possession was obtained and the plaintiff was never in actual possession or Vahivat.

BALVANT RAMNATH C. BALA MALU.

of the land. On the 28th August 1917, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 asserted their right to be in possession of the land, whereupon the plaintiff filed Suit No. 26 of 1917 in the Mamlatdar's Court which he lost. So he had to bring this suit. In the Trial Court it was found that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had been in possession as owners for more than twelve years and, therefore, the plaintiff could not succeed as against them. The learned Judge passed a decree for Rs. 407-6-0 and costs against the fourth defendant relying on the decision in Rustomji Ardeshir v. Vinayak Gangadhar (1).

In appeal this decision was reversed by the District Judge who considered that the rule laid down in Rustomji Ardeshir v. Vinayak Gangadhar (1) had no application to a sale in pursuance of a mortgage decree under O. XXXIV, that there was no allegation of fraud, and that, therefore, there was no basis for the claim to recover the purchase-money.

Now, under O. XXI, r. 91, an auction-purchaser at a Court sale in execution of a decree may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, and the period of limitation for such application is thirty days. If the order is made to set aside the sale, then the purchaser under r. 93 is entitled to an order for re-payment of his purchase-money, with or without interest as the Court may direct, against any person to whom it has been paid. The corresponding section in the Code of 1882 to O. XXI, r. 93, was section 315 which directed:—

"When a sale of immoveable property is set aside under section 310A, 312 or 313 or when it is found that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it, the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase-money (with or without interest as the Court may direct) from any person to whom the purchase-money has been paid."

It will, therefore, be noticed that a considerable change has been made in the law by the Code of 1908, for the statutory: (1) 7 Ind. Cas. 955; 35 B. 29; 12 Bom. L. R. 723.

right to file a suit for recovery of the purchase-money has been taken away. If it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest when the property was sold, the purchase-money cannot be recovered until or unless the sale is set aside. That is the construction placed on O. XXI, rr. 91 and 93 by the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Nannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das (2). The learned Judges remarked at page 111*:—

"It is only necessary to point out that there is a marked difference in the terms of the present Code of Civil Procedure and the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Section 315 of the latter Act provided that the purchaser might get back the purchase-money when a sale had been set aside under sections 310A, 312 or 313, or when it was found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which is purported to be sold and the purchaser was for that reason deprived of it. We have already pointed out that, under the provisions of the present Code, it is only when the sale has been set aside that the purchase-money can be returned... As regards sales under a decree of a Court, there is no warranty of title either by the decree holder or by the Court. In the case of Dorab Ally Khan v. Abtool Azeer (3) their Lordships remarked:—'Now it is, of course, perfectly clear that when the property has been sold under a regular execution, and the purchaser is afterwards evicted under a title paramount to that of the judgment-debtor, he has no remedy against either the Sheriff or the judgment-creditor.'"

The same point was dealt with in Farvathi Ammal v. Govindasami Pillai (4). In that case the Court-sale was set aside on account of irregularities in its conduct perpetrated by the decree-holder. The purchaser thereupon filed a suit for a return of the poundage-fees not returned to him and interest on the purchase-money paid by him. It was held that a suit was maintainable for the recovery of the same. The argument for the appellant was that the plaintiff should have sought redress in execution and that a separate suit did not lie. Their Lordships said:—

"The present Code contains no provision regarding the right of the purchaser to obtain a refund of his purchase-money without applying to set aside the sale when it is subsequently found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property. It may be, as suggested by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar for the respondent, that unless the purchaser seeks the aid of the Court to set aside the sale, he has no remedy against the decree-holder. It was laid down by the Judicial Committee in Dorab Ally Khan v. Abdool Azeer (3) that there was no warranty of title in Court-sales: see also Sundara Gopalan v. Venkatarada Ayyangar (5). The right of action to obtain a refund consequent on the want of saleable interest in the judgment debtor is not a right inhering in a purchaser, but is the creature of a Statute, and the right thus conferred can only be exercised within the limitations prescribed. Consequently, without getting the sale set aside through Court, the purchaser has no right of action."

The case relied upon by the appellant, Lustonji Ardeskir v. Vinayak Gargadhar (1) was a case under the Code of 1852 being Second Appeal No. 472 of 1909. His Lordship the Chief Justice said:—

"We think, however, that the right of the plaintiff to maintain a suit is made clear by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in the manner indicated in Sundara Gopalan v. Venkatarada Ayyangar (5). Under the Civil Procedure Code an implied warranty of some saleable interest when the right, title and interest of a judgment-debtor is put up for sale is implied, and the purchaser's right based thereon to a return under certain conditions of the purchase-money which has been received by the judgment-creditor is recognized."

I doubt very much whether there was any necessity to base the right given by the Legislature under the old Code of 1852 to a purchaser to file a suit to recover his purchase-money on a warranty. But for the purpose of this case we are bound by the provisions of the Code of 1908, and it seems to me we should follow the cases of Nannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das (2) and Parvathi Ammal v. Govindasami Pillai (4), which decide that an auction-purchaser at a Court sale, should he get nothing from his purchase, must get the sale set aside under r. 91 before he can obtain the right to ask for a refund of the purchase money. He can undoubtedly maintain a suit against the judgment debtor on any ground which is open to him in law, such as fraud or misrepresentation; but such a claim would depend on different evidence, and would be entirely of a different character to the present suit. No fraud or misrepresentation was alleged in the plaint, and the only ground on which the plaintiff sought relief was that, after he purchased the property, he discovered that other persons were entitled to it. Therefore, the decision of the District Judge is right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are these. One Nand Ram died on the 28th of November 1904 leaving him surviving a widow named Musammât Lashhmi but no issue. Musammât Lashhmi succeeded to her deceased husband's estate and mutation was effected in her name on the 21st of December 1904.

On the 7th of August 1907 one Ram Rattan filed an application before the Revenue Authorities asking that Musammât Lashhmi's name should be struck off and that he, as a collateral of Nand Ram, should be brought on to the Revenue Records as owner. It was alleged that Musammât Lashhmi had forfeited her life-interest as she had married one Daya Ram by Karewa. The Karewa marriage was denied and Ram Rattan's application was dismissed. He thereupon instituted a civil suit on the 29th August 1907 claiming to be entitled to succeed to Nand Ram's property on the ground that Musammât Lashhmi had re-married. He obtained a decree which was, however, reversed on appeal and his suit dismissed, it being held that the Karewa marriage had not been proved.

A couple of years later Musammât Lashhmi sold 129 bighas 1 biswa of land to Telu, son of Daya Ram above-named, and mortgaged 9 bighas 14 biswas to Kapuria. These transactions were oral ones and, when it was sought to have the lands mutated in accordance with them, Ram Rattan again came forward and protested alleging that these alienations were fictitious and, without necessity and threatening to institute proceedings. In the course of the mutation proceedings the parties came to terms and a compromise was entered into. There is no deed of compromise but the terms are entered in an order passed by the Revenue Authorities. According to this arrangement Ram Rattan undertook to recognize the two alienations while Musammât Lashhmi, admitting the Karewa, made over all the remaining property of the deceased Nand Ram to Ram Rattan. This arrangement was given effect to and Ram Rattan by virtue of it came into possession of practically half of Nand Ram's estate.

On the 28th of May 1913 Puran and Jai Ram, grandsons of Ram Rattan, instituted the present suit claiming possession of 138 bighas 15 biswas of land sold and mortgaged by Musammât Lashhmi as stated above. It was alleged that Musammât Lashhmi had no right to alienate this property, which was ancestral, without legal necessity, and that they, as collaterals of the deceased Nand Ram, were entitled to possession, Musammât Lashhmi having married Daya Ram by Karewa. The principal defendants, who were Telu and Kapuria, while admitting the Karewa marriage, pleaded the compromise entered into by Ram Rattan and contended that his grandsons, plaintiffs, were bound by it. The primary Court granted the plaintiffs a decree holding that the two transactions were without necessity and that the plaintiffs were not bound by the compromise entered into by their grandfather. On appeal the learned District Judge took a different view and, holding that the plaintiffs were bound by the compromise, dismissed their suit. They have thereupon come up to this Court in second appeal through Dr. Muhammad Iqbal and we have heard Mr. Shamair Chand on behalf of the respondents.

The point for determination is, whether or not the plaintiffs-appellants are bound by the compromise entered into by their grandfather Ram Rattan. Dr. Muhammad Iqbal contended that, inasmuch as Musammât Lashhmi by her marriage with Daya Ram had forfeited all her claims to Nand Ram's estate the compromise entered into by Ram Rattan was wholly without consideration and was, therefore, not binding on his clients. It seems to us, however, that this contention cannot prevail. It has to be borne in mind that, at the time when the compromise was entered into Ram Rattan had already attempted unsuccessfully to prove that Musammāt Lashhmi had married Daya Ram by Karewa. This matter had been concluded and it was, therefore, impossible for him to re-open it. All that he could do was to attack the two alienations on the ground that they were without legal necessity and, therefore, did not affect his reversionary rights. Whether or not he could have succeeded in establishing his claim was, of course, problematical and would have depended on the circumstances in which the said alienations were made. In any event, it meant litigation which would have cost money. By giving up the suit and acknowledging these transactions he obtained possession of the remainder of Nand Ram's property at once whereas he would have had to wait for this property till the death of Musammāt Lashhmi. As a matter of fact, he has predeceased Musammāt Lashhmi so that he could never have come into possession of any portion of Nand Ram's estate. That there was consideration for the compromise is, therefore, evident. Dr. Muhammad Iqbal contended that the admission as to the Karewa marriage showed that Musammāt Lashhmi and her alienees were taking undue advantage of Ram Rattan's ignorance. It is, however, quite clear that Ram Rattan was well aware of the fact that Musammāt Lashhmi had re-married although he had been unable to prove the fact. The position was peculiar and when doubtful questions of law or of fact have arisen between two parties and each of them has agreed to waive what he honestly believes to be his lawful claim in whole or in part the transaction amounts to a compromise, the waiver or abandonment on either side furnishing the consideration, provided, of course, that both parties had equal knowledge of the facts and equal opportunities of ascertaining their rights. Here it seems to us that both parties were fully aware of the true circumstances and each party waived a right and that, therefore, there was consideration emanating from both sides. In these circumstances, we are unable to see that the compromise was not a valid one. We also think that this compromise was binding on the present plaintiffs appellants, for, in our opinion, Ram Rattan entered into this compromise in good faith believing it to be the best in the circumstances and for the protection of the estate. Nor can we say, that in the then existing circumstances it was unreasonable. In our view we are fortified by Buta v. Khuda Bakhsh (1).

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

KUNJ LAL v. GULAB RAM.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit against ten defendants to recover a sum of Rs. 4,617-4-0. A decree was passed against the first defendant only by the Trial Court, and an appeal against that decree was dismissed by the District Judge. The plaintiff has now filed a second appeal against that decree, and claims to value his appeal as if he was suing merely for a declaration, namely, that the decree passed by the Trial Court was binding against the other defendants also. This contention seems to have found favour with the Taxing Officer, who relied upon the decision in Zinnatunnissa Khatun v. Girindra Nath Mukherjee (1) which has nothing whatever to do with the point raised by the appellant in this case. There the suit was filed originally for a declaration that a certain decree was ineffectual and inoperative against the plaintiffs.

In this case there is a money suit against a large number of defendants, and the plaintiff having only got a decree against one of them, seeks to get a decree against the remaining defendants. The only order, therefore, that this Court could pass, if the appellant is successful, would be that the remaining defendants should pay the amount claimed to the plaintiff.

The same question came up for decision before the High Court of Madras in Ramasami v. Subbusami (2). There the suit was filed upon a hypothecation-bond executed by the first defendant. The son adopted by the deceased husband of the first defendant was made a party, and he claimed that the debt was not binding on him. The first Court passed a decree against both the defendants. In appeal, the second defendant was exonerated. The plaintiff preferred a second appeal against the second defendant as sole respondent and affixed to the memorandum of appeal a ten rupees stamp as if a declaratory decree was sought. The judgment was as follows:—

“The appeal is substantially to establish the plaintiffs’ right to render the hypothecated property belonging to the second defendant liable to be sold in satisfaction of the debt claimed in the suit. The Court-fees payable must, therefore, be calculated on this amount.”

It is, therefore, clear that the decision of the Taxing Officer was wrong, and the appellant cannot, by saying that he is asking for a declaration that the decree passed against the first defendant is binding against the other defendants, get rid of the fact that he is asking this Court to pass a money decree against the other defendants. The appeal, therefore, has been wrongly valued, and it may be noted that when the first appeal was filed to the District Court, it was not valued on this basis, but was valued on the original claim. The appellant, therefore, must re-pay the Court-fee which was refunded. A week’s time is allowed for making this payment.

JUDGMENT.—On the 26th August 1902 one Kunj Lal was arrested at Jaitu Mandi in the Nabha State in connection with a civil claim against him in that State by a firm named Ratti Ram-Mani Ram. He was released the same day on another person, Pokhar Mal, standing surety for him for the amount of the claim. Pokhar Mal was gumashta of the firm Tej Ram-Ram Karn. After these proceedings a suit was lodged against Kunj Lal in a Nabha Court and decreed against him ex parte on 13th December 1902. A note appended to the decree referred to objections by Naurang Rai of the firm Tej Ram-Ram Karn, one of the present plaintiffs, and recorded that that firm's property would not be liable for the amount of the decree if it were found (a) that Pokhar Mal was not the gumashta of the firm, and (b) that the house property pledged by Pokhar Mal in security belonged to the firm, but that if Pokhar Mal was the firm's agent and could by trade custom bind his principals they would be liable.

Subsequently, as found by the District Judge, against whose order this second appeal is preferred, the firm Tej Ram-Ram Karn was held by the Nabha Courts to be liable and in order to save their property from forced sale the proprietors compromised with the decree holder and satisfied the decree against Kunj Lal by payment on 23rd March 1908.

On the 10th March 1914 the plaintiffs, proprietors of the firm Tej Ram-Ram Karn, sued Kunj Lal in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for what they paid plus interest, obtained a decree in the first Court for the principal, and were successful on appeal to the District Judge for interest in addition. The defendant Kunj Lal also appealed and his appeal was dismissed.

Kunj Lal has preferred a second appeal on various grounds including that of limitation on which we hold that he must succeed.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that Article 61 of the Limitation Act governed the suit, the period for which in the Punjab is six years. It was contended before him and it is contended before us that the Article applicable is 81. The District Judge applied Article 61 on the ground that the plaintiffs were not the original sureties, and that they were merely held liable for the actions of Pokhar Mal who had given his personal security. We are unable to assent to this reasoning. The plaintiffs came into Court asserting that they had been obliged to pay money as sureties to the defendants, decree-holders. Their whole cause of action was that they had been treated as sureties for Kunj Lal and had paid as such.

Article 61 is the general Article and Article 81 one of a subsequent series of particular Articles specifying various situations in which money is paid by a plaintiff for a defendant. It is a principle well-established that the particular Article must be applied in preference to the general Article wherever possible. Here we are quite clear that the suit of the plaintiffs was one by sureties against the principal debtor for which the period of limitation was three years from the date of payment to the creditor. The suit having been filed a few days short of six years after the date of payment is out of time.

We accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and order that the suit of the plaintiffs be dismissed with costs throughout.

Where goods are consigned to a Railway Company to be carried from one station to another, the contract is that the goods should be carried by the nearest route. If the Railway Company, to suit their convenience, carry the goods by another and longer route, which offers far more opportunity for loss to occur, they are bound to notify the consignor, so as to give him an opportunity of deciding whether he should sign the Risk Note in Form B or not, and their failure to do so will render them liable for any loss which may occur. Mr. I. J. Sopher for Mr. M. B. Ashtaputre, for the Applicant.

Sir Thomas Strangman, Advocate-General, instructed by Messrs. Little & Co., for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit filed by the consignee of certain goods which were delivered to the South Indian Railway Company, to be carried from Sevoy Petoy, a station on the South Indian Railway, to Jalgaon, a station on the defendant Railway Company. Admittedly, when the goods arrived at Jalgaon, the oil of fourteen tins had been removed and lost to the consignee. The consignor had signed a Risk Note in the Form B, and so the G. I. P. Railway Company would not be liable for any such loss, unless it could be shown to have occurred owing to the wilful neglect of their servants, provided the goods were carried in accordance with the contract of carriage. It was proved that the waggon containing the plaintiff's goods instead of travelling along the shortest route via Dhond and Manmad was carried to Kalyan, and thence to Jalgaon. There was evidence that the Station Master of Kalyan had to put fresh seals on the waggon containing the plaintiff's goods and that would point to the loss having occurred between Kalyan and Dhond. The learned Judge found that there was no evidence to show that the Company agreed to carry the consignment via Dhond and Manmad, and that the only agreement was to carry the goods via Raichur. He also was of opinion that the carriage via Kalyan was more attractive to the plaintiff because there was only one junction on the route via Kalyan while by the other route there were two, viz, Dhond and Manmad. He forgot the fact that the goods-train had to be marshalled at Lanowli and re-marshalled at Karjat before it arrived at Kalyan, and that the same process would have to be repeated at Kaara and Igatpuri on the way from Kalyan to Jalgaon, and, therefore, instead of that route being more attractive to the plaintiff, there would be many more opportunities for the loss to occur than on the route viz Dhond and Manmad. It seems obvious that the contract was to carry the goods by the nearest route, and that if the Railway Company, to suit their convenience wished to carry the goods by a longer route which offered far more opportunity for the loss to occur, they were bound to give notice to the consignor so as to give him an opportunity of deciding whether he should sign the Risk Note in Form B or not. The evidence also shows that the route via Dhond and Manmad would be the usual route for goods coming from Southern India via Raichur and that, as a matter of fact, the charges were recovered from the plaintiff as if the goods had travelled via Dhond and Manmad. It seems to us, therefore, that the Company by carrying the goods via Kalyan went outside the terms of the contract and could no longer rely on the protection afforded by the Risk Note so as to be absolved from liability for the loss which occurred. Therefore, the decree dismissing the suit must be set aside and there must be a decree for the plaintiff with costs throughout.

to be void—Payment made under contract, recovery of.

A portion of an occupancy tenancy was mortgaged to one H. for Rs. 410, and the remainder was mortgaged to the landlords for Rs. 820. Plaintiff purchased the mortgagee rights of H. and subsequently purchased the occupancy rights of the tenant. He then applied to the Revenue Authorities for redemption of the mortgage in favour of the landlords and obtained an order directing redemption. In pursuance of this order he deposited Rs. 820 which were paid to the landlords. Subsequently the landlords sued for cancellation of the sale in favour of the plaintiff and obtained a decree whereunder they recovered possession of the tenancy. Plaintiff thereupon sued the landlords for recovery of the amounts which he had paid to H. and to the landlords:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff could not recover the money which he had paid to H.; [p. 368, col. 2.]

(2) that under the provisions of section 65 of the Contract Act the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the landlords the money which he had paid to them under the sale which had been declared to be void. [p. 368, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 5th October 1917, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, dated the 9th June 1916.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Badlu, an occupancy tenant, sold his occupancy rights for Rs. 2,400 to Karta, predecessor-in title of plaintiffs. Karta had previously purchased the mortgage rights in a part of the tenancy from Hirde Ram, defendant No. 6 for Rs. 410. The occupancy rights in the rest of the land were under mortgage to some of the landlords, namely to defendants Nos. 1 to 5, whose charges amounted to Rs. 820 and the plaintiffs, after the death of Karta, applied to the Assistant Collector to have the land redeemed from them. Ramji Lal, defendant No. 3, appeared and objected that the sale by Badlu to Karta was invalid and declined to receive the mortgage-money. The plaintiffs, however, deposited the money, and warrants for delivery of possession of the land were issued. The plaintiffs were put in possession and defendants Nos. 1 to 5 then received the mortgage-money which had been deposited.

After this the landlords, including defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and 10, sued to contest the sale by Badlu and obtained a decree for its cancellation and for the eviction of the plaintiffs, and obtained possession of the land in execution.

The plaintiffs, having been dispossessed, brought the present suit for the return of their money. The First Court held that they were entitled to recover from defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and 10 the Rs. 410 which they had paid to Hirde Ram for the mortgage rights which they had purchased, and the Rs. 820 which they had paid for redeeming the land from defendants Nos. 1 to 5, and it accordingly passed a decree for Rs. 1,230. On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the principle of caveat emptor applied, as the purchaser from Badlu should have known that the sale by Badlu was voidable at the instance of the landlord, and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, not entitled to a refund of the money which they had paid. The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

We do not see how they are entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 410 which their predecessor Karta paid to Hirde Ram in consideration for the purchase of the mortgage rights before he purchased the occupancy rights from Badlu. But with regard to the sum of Rs. 820 we are of opinion that the appeal must succeed. Defendants Nos. 1 to 5, having dispossessed the plaintiffs of the land, cannot be allowed to keep both the land and the money which was paid to them for its redemption, and the plaintiffs are entitled to a refund of the Rs. 820 under section 65 of the Contract Act. The learned District Judge says that that section does not apply because the contract of sale was not void and was not discovered to be void, but he has failed to notice that section 65 applies where a contract, though not void when it was made, afterwards becomes void, as is the case here. The sale by Badlu, though originally only voidable, became void when the landlords got their decree for its cancellation, and under section 65 of the Contract Act they are bound to refund the money which the plaintiffs paid them.

We, therefore, accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and give the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 820, of which Rs. 205 will be payable by defendant No. 1, Rs. 205 by defendants Nos. 2, and 3, Rs. 205 by defendant No. 4 and Rs. 205 by defendant No. 5. Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 will pay plaintiffs' costs on Rs. 820 in all the Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 144, 151, O. XXI, rr. 58, 61—Sale in execution of decree—Money deposited by auction-purchaser rateably distributed among creditors—Judgment-debtor's objection to sale disallowed but finally decreed—Auction-purchaser deprived of sale-property—Application for restitution under s. 144, Civil Procedure Code, if lies—Inherent powers of Court under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, when to be invoked.

Restitution can only be granted under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, on the application of a party to the "decree varied or reversed." The applicant must be a party entitled to some benefit by way of restitution. It is not sufficient that he is merely a person entitled to the benefit. [p. 370, col. 2; p. 372, col. 2.]

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code should not be invoked to cover an order which only sets right one injustice by the infliction of another, or, as it is said, robs Peter in order to pay Paul. The extraordinary powers conferred by this section should not be exercised where the equities are evenly balanced. [p. 371, col. 2.]

A claim petition by a judgment-debtor, under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the property attached in execution of decree against him was trust property, was disallowed under r. 61. The judgment-debtor, however, filed a regular suit and obtained a decree declaring that the property was trust property and that, therefore, it was not liable to be proceeded against. In the meantime, the property was sold at Court auction and the price paid by the auction-purchaser was distributed rateably among several decree-holders, whose decrees were recorded as satisfied.

Upon obtaining the decree declaring that the property was trust property and, therefore, not liable to attachment and sale the judgment-debtor obtained re-delivery of the property under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, and when the auction-purchaser was deprived of the property he claimed back his money from the various decree-holders who had received it rateably. In the meantime, their decrees had become time-barred:

Held, that the auction-purchaser could not invoke to his aid the provisions of

(1) section 144, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as

(a) the decree in execution of which the property was sold had not been reversed;

(b) the auction-purchaser was not a party to the order by which the objection-petition under O. XXI, r. 58, was disallowed under r. 61; nor could he be treated as the legal representative of the judgment-debtor;

(c) the order which was subsequently varied by the declaratory decree was the one made upon the claim petition and not an order that was passed on the execution petition for attachment and sale of the property;

(d) that the order disallowing the judgment-debtor's objection under O. XXI, r. 61, was not a decree;

Ramanadan Chettiar v. Levvai Marakayar, 23 M. 195; 10 M. L. J. 64; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 535 (F. B.) and Budruddeen Sahib v. Abdul Rahim Sahib, 31 M. 125; 18 M. L. J. 21; 3 M. L. T. 325, referred to.

(2) section 151, Civil Procedure Code, because,

(a) the refund was asked for from persons who had nothing to do with the auction-sale, but merely profited by it, in the way of rateable distribution under the orders of a Court;

Nepal Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Ramendra Nath Chakravarty, 24 Ind. Cas. 384, distinguished.

(b) the decrees had become time-barred, and if restitution was ordered the decree-holders would be deprived of the fruits of their decrees and this hardship would result to them though no blame attached to them.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.—Section 144 applies to the application by the auction-purchasers for restitution as it was the order for attachment and sale that was virtually superseded by the decree in Original Suit No. 58 of 1914. The order that was reversed is a decree. The appellants must be deemed to be parties to the proceedings as the representatives of the judgment-debtor. See Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan (1). In any case, they were parties to the reversing decree. That is sufficient to entitle them to the benefit of section 144, Civil Procedure Code.

As an alternative, the application could be sustained under the more elastic provisions of section 151, Civil Procedure Code. That section could be invoked to set right an obvious injustice. Nepal Chandra Bhatta-Char ee v. Ramendra Nath Chakravarty (2) and Kedar Nath v. Jai Berhma (3).

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar (with him Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar), for the Respondents.—The application is unsustainable under both sections 144 and 151, Civil Procedure Code. The former does not apply as the decree in the small cause suit was neither varied nor reversed by the decree in the suit instituted under O. XXI, r. 61, Civil Procedure Code. The appellants were, besides, not parties to the earlier proceedings. As representatives of judgment-debtors, if they could be treated as such, they have no right to restitution of moneys paid to the latter's creditors.

Section 151, Civil Procedure Code, could not be invoked as the appellants can claim no equity against the respondents. The persons who should reimburse the auction-purchasers are the judgment debtors. The decrees have now become time barred and it is obviously inequitable to deprive them of the fruits of their decrees. Gadi Neelaveni v. Morappareddi-gari Narayana Reddi (4), Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahomed Meera Levvai (5), Gopisetti Narayanaswamy Naidu Garu v. Kuncupira u Ohina Venkata Raju (6).

The right to restitution possessed by the auction-purchaser under the old Code (section 315) has been specially removed by the new Code, (O. XXI, r. 93).

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, OFFJ. C. J.—Appellants in this case are purchasers in Court auction, who have been deprived of their properties owing to their cancellation of the sales and who now seek restitution of the sums paid by them which have been rateably distributed among certain persons (respondents) holding decrees against the judgment-debtors. The District Munsif directed these persons to refund to appellants the amounts received by them; but his order was set aside on appeal to the District Judge, who held that appellants were not entitled to restitution either under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code or with reference to the Court's inherent powers under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for disposal of these appeals, are these:—The properties were attached and brought to sale in execution of the decrees in Small Cause Suit No. 274 of 1911 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura against one Mariappan Chetty. His sons who on his death were made parties in execution, presented a claim petition (Execution Petition No. 539 of 1922) under O. XXI, r. 58 to the effect that the properties were trust properties in their hands and not liable under the decree. This was dismissed, and the sale proceeded. The sons, however, filed a suit (Original Suit No. 53 of 1914 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad) and ultimately obtained a decree declaring that the properties were trust properties and not liable to be proceeded against or sold in execution of the decree in Small Cause Suit No. 274 of 1911. They then obtained re-delivery of the properties with mesne profits under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The first question is whether appellants, the auction-purchasers, are also entitled to avail themselves of its provisions.

In my opinion, the District Judge has rightly held that they are not, looking to the terms of the section. Restitution can only be granted under section 144 on the application of a party to the "decree varied or reversed." What was this decree? The

RAJA RAO v. ANANTHANARAYAN CHETTY.

District Munsif who decided in appellant's favour did so on the footing that it was the order for attachment and sale, and that this order was superseded by the decree in Original Suit No. 53 of 1914. The appeal was also argued before us on this basis. But the appellants were no parties to the order for sale; nor were they parties to the order dismissing Execution Petition No. 539 of 1912, which might be suggested on the alternative as the "decree varied or reversed." The learned Vakil has argued that they may be treated as the representatives of the judgment-debtors on the strength of the Full Bench judgment in Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan (1). It may be remarked that these judgments did not lay down that the auction-purchaser should in all circumstances and for all purposes be entitled to pose as the representative of the judgment debtor. But apart from this, such a character would be of no avail to appellants here. As representatives of judgment-debtors who were the successors in interest of Mariappan Chetty they would have no claim either in law or equity to recover the amounts paid over by the Court to the respondents in satisfaction of the decrees which the latter had obtained against Mariappan Chetty and which were binding on his sons.

As an alternative, it is argued that the order of the District Munsif may be supported as one passed in the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Reliance is placed on a decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court reported as Nepal Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Ramendra Nath Chakravarty (2) in which refund of the price paid was directed to be made by a decree-holder to an auction purchaser whose sale was set aside after confirmation, and who had in consequence lost the properties purchased. The decree holder in that case was the person responsible for wrongfully bringing the properties to sale. In the present case refund is asked for from persons who had nothing to do with causing the auction sale, but merely profited by it, in the way of rateable distribution under the orders of the Court. This distinction seems to me to be of considerable importance in connection with the exercise of extraordinary powers which are of a purely equitable and discretionary nature. In the present case it is pointed out by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar for respondents that the persons who in equity should re-imburse the auction-purchasers are the judgment debtors. Respondents' decrees have been recorded as satisfied by the payment of the sums sought to be recovered and the decrees themselves are now long time-barred. This is not denied. The District Munsif's order, therefore, only compensates the appellants for the loss of their money at the expense of equally innocent parties and it certainly seems to me that the extraordinary powers conferred by section 151 for the ends of justice and to prevent abuse of the process of the Court should not be invoked where the equities are so evenly balanced.

The learned Vakil for respondents has quoted several cases Gadi Neelaveni v. Marappareddigari Narayana Reddi (4), Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed Veera Levaai (5) and Gopisetti Narayanaswamy Naidu Garu v. Kaniparaya Ohina Venkata Rao (6) as authorities against the application of section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the present case. I do not propose to discuss them because I feel strongly that the section should not be invoked to cover an order which only sets right one injustice by the infliction of another or, as it is said, robs Peter in order to pay Paul.

I would dismiss the appeals with costs and also the revision petitions without costs.

VENKATASUBBA RAO, J.—Two questions have been argued before us. The appellant contended, first, that his application came within the terms of section 144, Civil Procedure Code. He argued, secondly, that if section 144 did not apply, we should, in the exercise of our inherent powers, grant him relief under section 151 of the Code.

A decree was passed in Small Cause Suit No. 274 of 1911, Madura Sub-Court, against one Mariappan Chetty, and he having died his sons were made parties in execution proceedings. The decree-holder then attached certain items of properties, and Mariappa's sons preferred an objection under Order XXI, rule 58, on the ground that the properties attached were trust properties. The objection was disallowed, and the properties were sold and the appellant purchased them in Court-auction. The appellant paid the purchase-money into Court and the money so paid was rateably distributed among several decree-holders including the decree holder who had brought the property to sale. In the meantime Mariappan's sons filed a regular suit to set aside the order made under Order XXI, rule 61, disallowing the objection above referred to. The suit was presumably filed under Order XXI, rule 63, and by a decree made in that suit the contentions of Mariappan's sons that the properties were trust properties in their hands was upheld. Thereupon they made an application to the Court for the recovery of possession of the properties sold from the appellant and obtained an order for possession and recovered the properties from the appellant.

The appellant now says that as he has been deprived of the properties, he is entitled to get back the amount he paid into Court from the various decree-holders.

I shall first deal with the question: Does the application lie under section 144? Section 144 cannot apply unless there is a decree that has been subsequently reversed or varied. It is clear that the decree in Small Cause Suit No. 274 of 1911 has neither been varied nor reversed. It has, therefore, been argued on behalf of the appellant that the order of the Court disallowing the objection of judgment-debtors was subsequently reversed by the decree in the regular suit, and that the order that was so reversed is a decree. I am unable to accept this contention. The judgment debtor's objection to the attachment on the ground that they held the properties as trustees was made under Order XXI, rule 58 and an order made upon this objection under Order XXI, rule 61 is not a decree under section 2 of Civil Procedure Code and is not, therefore, appealable. See Ramanathan Chettiar v. Levari Marakayar (7) also Budrudeen Sahib v. Abdul Rahim Sahib (8). It will be further noticed that the order that was subsequently varied was the one made upon the claim petition and not an order that was passed on the execution petition for attachment and sale of the properties. The District Munsif who ordered restitution in favour of the appellant assumed that the order that was subsequently varied amounted to a decree and held that section 144 was applicable. I am of opinion that his view is erroneous and that section 144 does not apply.

There is a further reason for holding that section 144 is not applicable. Assuming that the order which was reversed was a decree, the appellant was not a party to the order which disallowed the objection of the judgment-debtors. The applicant under section 144 must be a "party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution." It is not sufficient that he is merely a person entitled to the benefit. That this is the right construction will appear from the circumstances that a later portion of the section refers to "the parties" being placed "in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed." It is, therefore, necessary to examine whether the appellant was a party to the order reversed. It has been argued on his behalf that though the auction purchaser was not as such a party to the order he must be deemed to be a party as the legal representative of the judgment-debtors. I am unable to accept this contention and I hold for the reasons stated by his Lordship the Officiating Chief Justice, with which I respectfully agree, that the appellant is not the legal representative of the judgment-debtors.

(7) 23 M. 195; 10 M. L. J. 64; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 535 (F. B.).

(8) 31 M. 125; 48 M. L. J. 21; 3 M. L. T. 325.

The appellant has further contended that it is sufficient that the applicant was a party to the reversing decree though he was not party to the decree reversed; in other words, that the fact that he was a party to the regular suit filed under Order XXI, rule 63 confers upon him the right to apply under section 144, although he was not a party to the proceeding under Order XXI, rule 58. This contention, in my opinion, is absolutely untenable. The words of the section are incapable of being construed in this manner.

The only question that remains to be decided is whether in the circumstances the appellant can invoke the provisions of section 151 in his favour. The respondent has contended before us that there was no warranty of title at a Court sale and the appellant having purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors cannot get back the amount he paid into Court on his being deprived of the possession of the property which he purchased. He has further contended that under section 315 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, the auction purchaser had a right to receive back his purchase-money when it was found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which was purported to be sold; but that under the corresponding rule of the Code of 1908 (Order XXI, rule 93) the auction-purchaser does not possess such a right and the respondent, therefore, argues that the right of the auction-purchaser to recover the purchase-money having been specially conferred upon him by the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and having been taken away by the Code of 1908, it must be assumed that in law the auction-purchaser has no such right and that, therefore, the power of the Court under section 151 should not be exercised for the purpose of conferring upon the appellant the rights which he does not possess under the law. I think it is unnecessary to decide this question as I am prepared to hold that the appellant cannot even otherwise invoke, in the circumstances of the case, the provisions of section 151 for his benefit. It has been pointed out to us that the decrees against the judgment-debtors have become time barred. If restitution is, therefore, ordered the decree-holders will be deprived of the fruits of their decrees and this hardship will result to them although it is admitted that no blame attaches to them. In this view the cases cited by the appellant, Kedar Nath v. Jai Berhma (3) and Nepal Ohardra Bhattacharyas v. Ramendra Nath Ohakrarty (2), do not apply.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeals with costs, and also the revision petitions without costs.

License, revocability of—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 60—Q. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 203.

A license in respect of an abadi plot is revocable at will by the grantor unless the licensee is protected by section 60 of the Easements Act or section 203 of the Land Revenue Act (II of 1917) or the wajib-ul-arz of the village.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 27th November 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 105 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Appeal No. 105 of 1920, dated the 27th November 1920.

"This is an appeal against the decrees passed in Suit No. 295 of 1919 dated 30th June 1920 in the Court of the Munsif, Sohagpur. The suit was for possession of a site and the removal of a superstructure erected on it by the defendant. The site was an abadi site in Mouza Jhalon. Plaintiff alleged that the site was given to him by Chowdhri Khubchand, deceased, on payment of nazrana; that it was given to him and Murlidhar jointly but on a mutual partition of property this part fell to him so he alone brought this suit. In May 1919 the defendant built a house on this site, where the plaintiff has been in the habit of cultivating monsoon crops, and thus dispossessed him. Defendant denied that the plaintiff was ever given a license to occupy this site and, even if he was, that the document (Exhibit P.1) purports to create a lease in perpetuity of a gift, and is, therefore, void for want of registration; the defendant built his house as he was in lawful possession of the land, and, finally, the plaintiff was not a tenant of the defendant's mahal and was liable to be ejected at will as the site was vacant. Defendant also denied that the lane in suit was the same as mentioned in Exhibit P.1. The lower Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. *

Mr. O. B. Parakh, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Pleader for the plaintiff, who is the appellant here, admitted, or rather pleaded, on the 24th of February 1920 that he was a licensee of the defendant in respect of the abadi plot in suit, and the facts of the case and still more the letter from the defendant malguzar on which the plaintiff's title rests, filed as Exhibit P.1, make it manifest that he never held the land in any other capacity. The license is revocable at will by the grantor unless the licensee is protested by section 60 of the Easements Act or section 293 of the Land Revenue Act (II of 1917) or the wajib-ul-ara of the village. As the land has been under cultivation for some fifteen years neither of these Acts nor the wajib-ul-ara can give him any protection. The appeal is accordingly dismissed and the appellant must pay all the costs.

Custom—Adoption—Brother's grandson—Naru Rajputs of Hoshiarpur Tahsil—Riwaj-i-am, entry in—Baradarzada qaribi, whether includes brother's grandson.

Among Naru Rajputs of the Hoshiarpur Tahsil the adoption of a brother's grandson is valid by custom. The term baradarzada qaribi is wide enough to include a brother's grandson.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Hoshiarpur, at Jullundur, dated the 15th October 1917, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 30th March 1917.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit relates to the estate of the late Sandal Khan who adopted Barkat Ali, grandson of Jangi Khan, brother of Sandal Khan, by a deed of adoption registered on the 13th March 1907. Sandal Khan had another brother, Karam Bakhsh, whose descendants are the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claim half the estate, denying the factum of adoption and alleging that if there was any adoption it is invalid by custom. Sandal Khan also executed a deed of gift of certain land in favour of Barkat Ali. This deed was registered on the 8th of February 1913. Sandal Khan died in January 1916 and this suit was brought about three months after his death.

The Courts below have agreed, so far as the deed of gift is concerned holding that the land gifted by it was the self-acquired property of Sandal Khan and that he could do what he liked with it. They are also agreed as to the factum of the adoption but as regards the validity of the adoption they have differed, the First Court holding the adoption to be invalid and the District Judge holding it to be valid. So, the First Court gave the plaintiffs a partial decree but the learned District Judge in appeal dismissed the whole suit.

The plaintiffs, armed with a certificate, have lodged a second appeal in this Court; and the important question is whether the adoption is valid.

The parties are Naru Rajputs of the Hoshiarpur Tahsil. In the Hoshiarpur District custom varies from one Tahsil to another. So we must confine ourselves to the custom of the Hoshiarpur Tahsil. In the riwaj-i-am prepared for that Tahsil at the Settlement of 1834-85 in answer to the question what sort of relation can be adopted by a Rajput, we read, goilene wile ka riht:dar ko, qaribi baradarzada howe ya diht a ya bhanja sub la istihqiq musawwi hai. In the corresponding riwaj-i-am prepared at the recent Settlement of 1911-12 we find exactly the same answer given except that the word qaribi follows the word baradarza instead of preceding it. It is clear, therefore, that the word qaribi is linked with the word baradarza. The learned District Judge has drawn a distinction between baradarzada and bhatija which we fail to follow. The simple question, however, is whether the term qaribi baradarzada is wide enough to cover the case of the grandson of a brother. On behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants Bakhshi Tek Chand argues that the phrase may mean the son of a first cousin but that it cannot possibly mean the grandson of a nephew. The phrase qaribi baradarzada obviously must be something somewhat wider than baradarzada. In cases of succession in the Panjab we generally find that the nearness of relationship is ascertained by counting back from the propoitus to the common ancestor. Thus the grandson of a brother would count as a collateral in the second degree while the son of a first cousin would only be regarded as a collateral in the third degree. It seems to us unreasonable to suppose that the term qaribi baradarzad could cover the case of a collateral in the third degree and yet be too narrow to cover the case of a collateral in the second degree. Our opinion, therefore, is that the entry in the riwaj-i-am does cover the case of adoption of the grandson of a brother. This provision is in accordance with the ordinary custom of the Punjab, for amongst tribes which follow any custom of adoption a near collateral is generally eligible, whatever may be said as to daughter's sons and sister's sons. Here we find the riwaj-i-am declaring in favour of the adoption of both daughters' sons and sisters' sons and it would be unreasonable to suppose that this tribe, while allowing the adoption of a daughter's son or a sister's son, refused to allow the adoption of so near an agnate as a brother's grandson. The only thing that can be said on behalf of the appellants is that, although there are a few instances of the adoption of a brother's son, no particular instance has been cited of the adoption of a brother's grandson. Such cases must, however, be comparatively rare and, merely because no instance has been cited in support of the riwaj-i-am, we are not prepared to hold that the adoption is invalid by custom.

We uphold the decree of the learned District Judge dismissing the suit and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda, Kt., dated the 22nd of December 1920, in Second Appeal No. 1727 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. D. O. Maiti (with him Babu Apurba Charan Mukherji), for the Appellant.
—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration that certain certificates issued by the Secretary of State and the money realised thereunder were illegal. There were settlement proceedings in 1910 and the plaintiff was recorded as a tenant paying Rs. 25 and odd as rent. After that the Secretary of State realised the amount for the year 13 8 and thereafter for 1319-20 by issuing certificates. Then again they issued certificates for Rs. 85 and realised the balance for the previous years. The first Court decreed my suit. The lower Appellate Court, however, reversed that decree. On second appeal to this Court, Huda, J., confirmed the decision of the lower Appellate Court. The Secretary of State was not entitled to realise the amount by issuing certificate under the law. Their contention is that the rent was wrongly recorded as Rs. 25 by mistake. I submit Huda, J., was wrong in holding that section 104J of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to the case because there was no entry in the Record of Rights as finally published. The only correction that has been made was made in the copy kept in the khos mahal office. My submission is that in Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, sections 101-109 have been divided in three parts. The first part contains general provisions, the second part consists of sections 104-104J and the third part consists of sections 105-109. The present case comes under section 104J of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Refers to sections 103A, 103B, 104F, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The assessment roll ought to have been incorporated in the Record of Rights before it was finally published. Refers to section 104J of the Bengal Tenancy Act; Raj Mohan Guha v. Alam Gazi (1). That case is quite distinguishable from the present case. This amendment was made by the khos mahal Settlement Officer. I submit he has no power to make the amendment under the Act and, as a matter of fact, no amendment has been made of the Record of Rights as finally published. Then comes the question as to whether the Secretary of State can claim the enhanced rent from me under section 104J. I am an occupaney ryot and paid Rs. 25 as rent. That has been enhanced to Rs. 85. I submit the ordinary rules for enhancement of rent in case of occupaney ryots would apply to the present case. Previously, certificate was issued for 4 years at Rs. 25 annas 7 per year. Subsequently, they claimed Rs. 85. I submit successive issues of the certificate is allowed under the Public Demands Recovery Act.

PRATAP CHANDRA JANA v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—What is the provision under which the certificate is issued?]

Section 4 of the Public Demands Recovery Act empowers the issue of a certificate. The general provisions of the Civil Procedure Code would also apply. Refers to sections 4, 5, O. II, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Athirani Narain Kumari v. Bighu Mahapatra (2), Madia Prakash Singh v. Murla Manohar (3).

Babu Dwirkanath Chakravarty, Senior Government Pleader, (with him Babu Surendra Nath Guha, Junior Government Pleader), for the Respondent.—The Record of Rights was finally published on 31st May 1910. There the rent is entered as Rs. 25 annas 7. That is incorrect because it appears from a decision dated 27th March 1909 that the rent payable was Rs. 85. That decision was between these parties by the Assistant Settlement Officer in a dispute case. This was not incorporated in the finally published Record of Rights for some reason or other. The procedure that could be followed was an application for correction of the entry to the Board of Revenue under section 104J, Bengal Tenancy Act. The Collector discovered the mistake and an additional certificate was issued for the collection of the balance. There is no doubt that under the Public Demands Recovery Act the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is confined to section 35.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Is it for the Civil Court to investigate whether the entry is correct or not?]

I have been forced to take up that position. They came to the Civil Court. The Collector did not notice that mistake in the Record of Rights as finally published. The facts of the particular case should be taken into consideration. I was bound to proceed on the footing of that decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer.

PRATAP CHANDRA JANA V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

[MOCKERTJE, J.—You cannot rebut section 104].

When rent has been settled and recorded the presumption may not be rebuttable. Refers to Parfulla Narain v. Palku Mahammad (4) and Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda Mohapatra [Prasana Kumar] (5). In this case the rent settled is Rs. 85.

[MOCKERTJE, J.—But you can't assume that?]

That is not a matter of assumption but of proof. Refers to section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[MOCKERTJE, J.—That does not apply.]

No. There is a distinction between sections 103B and 104J. You will draw a distinction between rent that is settled and rent that is recorded.

[MOCKERTJE, J.—Does not section 4 contemplate that the certificate should be for the entire amount?]

The certificate could be challenged only under section 35. The Act does not preclude the Collector from issuing another certificate if there is any amount due and is legally recoverable.

Mr. S. C. Maiti replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Huda in a suit for a declaration that a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, was ultra vires, for refund of the amount recovered thereunder, and for a permanent injunction to restrain the Secretary of State for India from the issue of similar certificates in future. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. On second appeal to this Court, Mr. Justice Huda confirmed this decision. We are now invited to hold that the suit had been rightly decreed by the Trial Court, as the proceedings of the Revenue Authorities were without jurisdiction.

The facts material for the determination of the question in controversy may be briefly outlined. The plaintiff holds a tenancy under the Secretary of State for India within a temporarily settled area. The land was surveyed and the rent was settled under Part II of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the Record of

(4) 53 Ind. Cas. 122; 23 O. W. N. 260.

(5) 46 Ind. Cas. 287; 23 O. W. N. 516.

Rights, which was finally published on the 31st May 1910, contained an entry to the effect that the rent payable by the defendant was Rs. 25-7 annas a year. Rent appears to have been realised at this rate for the year following the publication of the record. On the 31st May 1915 a certificate was made under section 4 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, for a sum of Rs. 54-15-3. The certificate set out the details which showed that, calculated at the rate of Rs. 25-7-0 per annum, the amount in arrears for the Bengali years 1320, 1321 and 1322 amounted to Rs. 54-15-3. Subsequently, on the 4th December 1915, another certificate was made for Rs. 220-6-3. This certificate also set out details which showed that, calculated at the rate of Rs. £5 a year, a sum of Rs. 220-6-3 was due in respect of the years 1319, 1320, 1321 and 1322, after deduction of the amount covered by the previous certificate and amicably paid. The Revenue Authorities proceeded to sell the tenure in execution of the second certificate, with the result that the plaintiff was compelled to deposit the amount claimed and thereby to avert the sale. On the 23rd February 1918, the plaintiff commenced this litigation on the allegation that the issue of the supplementary certificate and the institution of proceedings for enforcement thereof were without jurisdiction. On behalf of the Secretary of State, the suit was defended on the ground that the entry in the Record of Rights was erroneous, that rent had been settled at Rs. 85 a year in a dispute case on the 27th March 1909, and that this was overlooked when the record was finally prepared and published. Two questions thereupon emerged for consideration, namely, first, whether it was competent to the Secretary of State to raise the question of the accuracy of the entry in the Record of Rights, and, secondly, if the question of correctness of the entry was open for consideration, whether it was competent to the Revenue Authorities to make a supplemental certificate for the period covered by the first certificate. The Courts below have expressed divergent opinions upon these points.

As regards the first question, the plaintiff maintains that section 104-J of the Bengal Tenancy Act raises an irrebuttable presumption in favour of the entry in the Record of Rights. This section provides that, subject to the provision of section 104 H, all rents settled under sections 104 A to 104 F and entered in a Record of Rights finally published under section 103-A or settled under section 104 G, shall be deemed to have been correctly settled and to be fair and equitable rents within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The effect of this provision is that when a settlement of rent has been made under Part II of Chapter X, no evidence is admissible to prove that rent is payable at a rate different from that entered in the rent-roll. Section 103-B which finds a place in Part I does not operate to modify the effect of section 104 J which finds a place in Part II. The substance of the matter is that the entry in the Record of Rights is conclusive, unless altered by means of a suit instituted under section 104-H, sub-section 2 within six months from the date of the certificate of final publication of the Record of Rights or, if an appeal has been presented to a Revenue Authority under section 104 G, then within six months from the date of the disposal of such appeal. The expression "deemed to have been correctly settled" would be meaningless, if the entry raised only a rebuttable presumption. The view we take is in accord with that adopted in Ambica Oharan v. Joy Chandra Ghosh (6), Prasanna Kumar v. Bachmuddin Howladar (7), Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda Mohapatra [Prasanna Kumar] (5), Profulla Narain v. Palku Mahammad (4). In the case before us the time for the institution of a suit under section 104-H, sub-section (2) expired on the 30th November 1910. On the other hand, the time for an appeal to the Superior Revenue Authority expired on the 31st July 1910, and the period prescribed for possible revision by the Board of Revenue terminated on the 31st May 1912. The Revenue Authorities have not availed themselves of the normal procedure; they cannot now be permitted to re-open the matter and re-agitate the question in a different forum by way of defense to an action which the tenant has been obliged to institute by reason of the seizure of his properties by summary process. The Record of Rights, finally published on the 31st May 1910, has never been amended, and the time prescribed for amendment has elapsed. It appears that in 1915, after the issue of the first certificate, some Revenue Officer discovered the inconsistency between the decision of the Settlement Officer in the dispute case dated the 27th March 1909, and the entry in the Record of Rights finally published on the 31st May 1910. He then proceeded to correct the copy of the Record of Rights which was in his custody, and this was made the basis for the issue of the supplemental certificate. The procedure was manifestly unauthorised. The original record has never been and can no longer be amended in accordance with law. There was thus no foundation for the issue of the supplemental certificate and the entry in the Record of Rights must be deemed conclusive between the Secretary of State and the tenant.

As regards the second question, the plaintiff maintains that, even if it be assumed that the Revenue Authorities are at liberty to establish now the inaccuracy of the entry in the Record of Rights, it is not open to them to issue a supplemental certificate for the period covered by the certificate previously issued. We are of opinion that this contention is of considerable force. Section 4 of the Public Demand Recovery Act, 1913, provides that when the Certificate Officer is satisfied that any public demand payable to the Collector is due, he may sign a certificate, in the prescribed form, and stating that the demand is due, and shall cause the certificate to be filed in his office. It is plain that the certificate so filed is intended to cover the entire demand due at the time. The "public demand", mentioned in section 4 and defined in section 3, clause (6), read with clause (7), of Schedule I includes a demand payable to the Collector by a person holding any interest in land, when such demand is a condition of the use and enjoyment of the land. We are of opinion that section 4 should not be so interpreted as to authorise the issue of more than one certificate in the prescribed form (Appendix, form 1) with regard to a single demand broken up into fragments. Such an interpretation would violate the cardinal rule for the avoidance of multiplicity of proceedings. That rule is recognised by the Legislature in O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1905, which requires that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which a plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, with the necessary corollary that where the plaintiff omits to sue in respect of or intentionally relinquishes any portion of his claim, he cannot afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished. This principle has been held applicable to proceedings in Revenue Courts for recovery of arrears of rent; see Madho Prakash Singh v. Murlu Manohar (3) and Adhirani Narain Kumari v. Raghu Mahapatra (2). As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Moonihse Buloor Raheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (8), the doctrine applies to cases not merely of deliberate relinquishment but also of accidental or involuntary omission. From this standpoint, the issue of the supplemental certificate was entirely unauthorised.

As a last resort, it has been urged that section 37, read with section 35 of, the Public Demands Recovery Act which specifies the grounds for cancellation or modification of a certificate by the Civil Court bars the present suit. There is plainly no foundation for this contention. The action of the Revenue Authorities was wholly unauthorised, constituting a colourable exercise and consequently a flagrant abuse of the provisions of the Statute. In such circumstances, section 37 does not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to make a declaration, to issue an injunction or otherwise to grant adequate relief; see Reajuddin v. Shahamutulla (9), Dhiraj Chandra Bose v. Hari Dasi Devi (10).

The result is that this appeal is allowed the judgment of Mr. Justice Huda in affirmance of that of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and the decree of the Primary Court is restored with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are briefly these:—On the 16th December 1899 one Khan Alam executed a deed of sale relating to certain property in favour of one Ditta, a nephew of his, for Rs. 650. This sale was duly registered and mutation took place on the 22nd May 1900. The mutation entry shows that the Revenue Authorities regarded this alienation to be a gift and not a sale. At the time when this alienation was effected another nephew of Khan Alam, viz., Data was alive. Data also had living two sons, Sher Zaman and Feroz, the latter then being an infant in arms. Data with his father Bahadur had been living for many years prior to this alienation in another village. Neither he nor his son Sher Zaman took any steps to preserve their reversionary rights, although Data was clearly the proper person to object to the alienation, being the nearest reversionary heir. Data is said to have died about 1910. Khan Alam himself died somewhere about 1918. On the 9th February 1920

FEROZ T. GHULAM SARWAR.

Feroz, who was then in Persia on military duty, instituted a suit through his brother Sher Zaman, as his Attorney, for possession of the land alienated by the deed of sale, dated the 16th December 1899, on the grounds that the alienation had been effected without consideration and without necessity. The defendant Ghulam Sarwar, son of Ditta, the original alienee, contested the suit inter alia pleading that the plaintiff Feroz had no locus standi to sue and that the suit was barred by limitation. In addition to the land alienated, the suit was for possession of a house. The Trial Court held that the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue and also that the suit was barred by limitation. It was held that the right to sue accrued, to the plaintiff's father Data on the 22nd May 1900 when mutation was effected and that from that date time commenced to run against Data and continued to run against the plaintiff who could derive no benefit from the fact that he was a minor. The suit thus having been dismissed the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge who confirmed the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the suit. The plaintiff has, therefore, come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Muhammad Amin, and I have heard Mr. Hareharan Das Bhalla on behalf of the respondent.

It has been contended that the decision of the Courts below is erroneous on both the points. Article 67 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law has been referred to as showing that the plaintiff could maintain his action. It appears that the plaintiff's father Data was absent from the village in which this land is situated and took no steps to have the alienation in question declared void. No collusion between Data and the alienor and alienee has been suggested or proved nor has his refusal to institute proceedings been established, nor, as far as I have been able to ascertain from the record, has any act or conduct of Data been shown which precluded him from suing. Further, I do not think that the fact that he refrained from taking any action can be regarded as acquiescence in the alienation. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the plaintiff who is the next reversioner has a locus standi to sue. He does not derive his right to sue from or through his father but holds it independently of Data, vide Sunjar

v. Salig Ram (1) and Arur Singh v. Solakhram Singh (2).

On the question of limitation the position appears to be this:—The plaintiff was born on the 23rd November 1898. He was, therefore, in existence when the alienation was effected and might have brought a suit. He attained the age of 18 years on the 23rd November 1916, and by the operation of section 6 of the Limitation Act could bring the suit up to the 23rd November 1919. As has been pointed out above, the suit was not filed till the 9th February 1921. It is, therefore, barred unless the plaintiff can show that he is entitled to any further saving of time. In order to do this he has alleged that he enlisted before October 1919 and proceeded on active service before the period of limitation had expired. He, therefore, claimed that section 11 of Act IX of 1918 came to his assistance and that the period during which he had been serving under war conditions should be excluded. On the other hand, it has been urged and has been held by the Courts below, that once time began to run no subsequent disability prevented its continuance. With this general proposition I am in agreement, but it seems to me that Act IX of 1918 was a special enactment intended to meet cases of this nature and that if it can be shown that the plaintiff was absent serving under war conditions, the suit should be regarded as within time. On this point there is evidence on the record to show that the plaintiff enlisted in September 1912 in the 72nd Hired Camel Corps. A letter from the Officer Commanding that Unit is on the record and shows that the plaintiff was enrolled in that Corps. The Enrolment Form was sent to the Court but has been returned. That Enrolment Form would show the date of the plaintiff's enrolment. The letter further shows that the plaintiff was recruited by Naik Ram Dass and that Naik Ram Dass left Chakwal for Persia during the first week of September 1919. The fact of enrolment, however, by itself cannot assist the plaintiff, as, in order to benefit by the provisions of section 11 of Act IX of 1918, he must show that he had been serving under war conditions before the limitation expired. Mr. Muhammad Amin contended that this had been shown, but there is no clear evidence of this on the record. Mr. Muhammad Amin, however, produced a document, a duplicate copy of which had been forwarded to the Court, according to which it is certified that Peraz had been serving in the 72nd Hired Camel Corps in East Persia since the 12th October 1919. As a matter of fact, the plaintiff is still absent on active service as is evidenced by the fact that the plaint was filed on his behalf by his brother acting as his Attorney. In these circumstances, it appears to me that it should be held that the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of section 11 of Act IX of 1918 and that the suit must be held to be within time. In any event, the claim for the house was not barred. The house was not alienated and the right to succeed to it did not accrue till the death of Khan Alam which, it is said, took place within two years of the suit.

I must, therefore, accept this appeal and setting aside the orders of the Courts below, return the case to the Trial Court for disposal in accordance with law. Costs will follow the event and the stamp on appeal will be refunded.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 50 (2),— Enhancement of rent—Presumption under s. 50 (2) —Uniform rate of rent—Tenant claiming benefit of presumption—Proof, nature of.

To entitle a tenant to the benefit of the presumption under sub-section (2) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the tenant is not required to establish actual payment of rent during the twenty years at a uniform rate; he has to establish that he and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the suit or proceeding; for a person may hold as a tenant, even though he does not actually pay the rent agreed upon to his landlord. [p. 382, col. 2.]

It has not been, and, cannot be, maintained that the omission to pay on behalf of the tenant or refusal to receive rent on the part of the landlord causes a cessation of the tenancy. [p. 382, col. 2.]

A tenant paid rent at a certain rate which was uniform from 1845 to 1897, since when there was no actual payment of rent: the landlord attempted to enhance the rent but the tenant did not accede to the demand and no proceeding was instituted in Court for alteration of the rent. In 1915 the tenant was recorded in the Record of Rights as an occupancy raiyat, whereupon the landlord instituted the present proceeding for enhancement of rent on the ground that the prevailing rent was higher than that paid by the tenant:

Held, that as the rent which was in operation in 1897 was in operation from 1897 to 1915, in other words, as the rent at which the tenant had held during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the proceeding had been at a uniform rate, he was entitled to the presumption mentioned in sub-section (2) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. JUDGMENT.

L. P. A. No. 54 of 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of this Court in an appeal preferred under section 109A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in the course of a proceeding under section 103.

MOHINI KANTA SAHA v. PREO NATH NEGGY.

It appears that in 1915, a Record of Rights was prepared which contained an entry to the effect that the defendants respondents were occupancy raiyats. The landlords appellants thereupon instituted the present proceeding for enhancement of rent on the ground that the prevailing rate was higher than that paid by the tenants. The tenants resisted the claim on the ground that they held at a rent or rate of rent which was fixed in perpetuity and that their rent was consequently not liable to enhancement. The Settlement Officer gave effect to the contention of the landlord and allowed the claim for enhancement. Upon appeal, the Special Judge upheld the defence and dismissed the claim for enhancement. On appeal to this Court, Mr. Justice Tennon held that the judgment of the Special Judge was not liable to be challenged in second appeal as erroneous in law. Mr. Justice Huda, on the other hand, came to the conclusion that the view of the Special Judge was based upon an erroneous construction of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The result was that the decision of the Special Judge stood affirmed. On the present appeal, it has been contended on behalf of the landlords that the decision of Mr. Justice Tennon in affirmance of the decision of the Special Judge is based upon an erroneous interpretation of sub-section (2) of section 50.

Sub-section (1) of section 50 provides that where a raiya and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement, the rent or rate of rent shall not be liable to be enhanced except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the tenancy or holding. In the present case, there is no direct evidence that the raiya held at a rent or rate of rent which had not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement. They are consequently compelled to have recourse to the presumption specified in sub-section (2) of section 50, which provides as follows: 'If it is proved in any suit or other proceeding under this Act that a raiya and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that they have held at Permanent Settlement." Consequently, the *raiya*s have to establish in this case that they and their predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding. The landlords have argued that the *raiya*s have failed to establish the affirmative of this proposition, because from that it is conceded that no rent has in fact been paid by them to their landlords since 1893, in other words, during the seventeen years immediately preceding the institution of the suit. The substance of the contention of the landlords is that the tenant is entitled to the benefit of the presumption under sub-section (2) of section 50, only if he proves actual payment at an unvaried rate, if not in each of the twenty years preceding the suit, at least in so many of them as to lead to the inference that there has been no change in the rent paid throughout the period of twenty years. We are of opinion that this contention cannot be accepted in view of the plain language of sub-section (2) of section 50. The tenant is not required to establish actual payment of rent, during the twenty years at a uniform rate; he has to establish that he and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the suit or proceeding. This involves a real distinction; for a person may hold as a tenant, even though he does not actually pay the rent agreed upon to his landlord. As was pointed out by Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter in Ahmed Ali v. Golam Guffoor (1), there may be cases in which a raiya might not have paid his rents for many years prior to the institution of the suit for enhancement; but if there has been no change in the rent payable by him he is not to be deprived of the presumption which the law has expressly laid down for his benefit; the payment at a uniform rate is one mode of showing that the tenure was held at a uniform rate, but what is only a particular mode of proceeding to the solution of a question ought not to be confounded with the question itself. It has not been, and, in our opinion, cannot be, maintained that the omission to pay on behalf of the tenant or refusal to receive rent on the part of the landlord causes a cessation of the tenancy. The present proceeding is, indeed, based on the assumption that the defendants hold as tenants and that their rent is liable to be enhanced. The question, consequently, arises, what is the rent or rate of rent at which they have held during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding. There is evidence to show that rent was paid at a certain rate in 1897. There is further evidence to show that the rent had been paid at the same rate for very many years earlier, and, it has been stated to us that, in one case the oldest receipt produced dates back to 1845. There is thus evidence which justifies the finding of the Special Judge that rent was paid at a certain rate which was uniform from 1845 to 1897. There has been no actual payment of rent since then. Does this justify the inference that there has been a change in the rent or rate of rent which was in operation in 1897? The answer manifestly must be in the negative. The rent could have been altered either by mutual agreement or by a decree of Court. There was an attempt on the part of the landlords to enhance the rent, but the tenants did not accede to the demand. Consequently, there is no room for the hypothesis that the rent might have been altered by agreement of parties. Admittedly, there has been no proceeding in Court for alteration of the rent before the date of the institution of the present suit. We must, consequently, hold that the rent which was in operation in 1897 was in operation from 1897 up to 1915: in other words, that the rent at which the raiyats have held during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding has been at a uniform rate. This attracts the operation of the presumption mentioned in sub-section (2) of section 50. The view we take is supported by the decisions in Ahmed Ali v. Golam Guffor (1), Sham Ohurn Koondoo v. Dwarkanath Kubeeraj (2), Kshirod Gobinda Ohoudhury v. Rajendra Narayan Shaha (3) and Grant v. Bar Sahay Singh (4) although there may be inaccurate expression in Ram Narain Roy Ohoudhry v. Mrs. Olivia Atkins (5), Mahmooda Beebe v. Hareelhun Khuleefa (6), Prem Sahoo v. Sheikh Nyymut Ali (7), Sham

(1) 11 W. R. 432; 3 B. L. R. App. 40.

Lal Ghose v. Boistab Ohurn Musoomdar (8) and Ramjadoo Gangoly v. Luckhes Narain Mundul (9) which may at first sight lend apparent support to a contrary position. Our conclusion is, that the view taken by Mr. Justice Teunon is correct, and that the appeal must consequently be dismissed with costs.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, against an order, of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, dated the 6th June 1921, passed in Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 184 of 1921, appointing a Receiver of the property in dispute in Civil Appeal No. 1847 of 1917 pending in the High Court.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, Lala Badri Das, R. B., Lala Jai Lal, R. B., Mr. H. D. Bhalla and Lala Amar Nath Ohona, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order passed by Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof on the 6th June 1921, holding that a Receiver be appointed to take possession of the property which is the subject-matter of controversy between the parties and adjourning the case to another date for the purpose of selecting a suitable person for the office of Receiver. The appeal was preferred on the 11th July 1921, after the expiry of the period of 30 days prescribed for the purpose and Mr. Tek Chand, on behalf of the respondents consequently raises a preliminary objection that the appeal is barred by time. A perusal of the record, however, shows that on the 29th June 1921 the appellant applied for a copy of the order but could not get it because the judgment was still with the learned Judge and had not yet been pronounced. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the appellant could not prefer an appeal before the delivery of the judgment and we must accordingly overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits, we have listened to lengthy arguments advanced by the learned Counsel on both sides but the question for determination is a simple one, namely, whether, to use the language of O. XL, r. 1, it appears to the Court to be just and convenient that a Receiver should be appointed to take charge of the property which is the bone of contention between the parties. Now the facts, so far as they are relevant to the question in issue, are briefly as follows:—

The property, which appears to be very valuable, belonged to one Pandit Bansilal who died childless on the 30th July 1897 leaving him surviving two widows Musammât Bishen Kaur and Musammât Budhwanti. It appears that there was a dispute between the widows which was finally settled by means of a compromise dated the 22nd February 1903. The sum and substance of this compromise is, that the property of the late Pandit Bansilal was declared to be trust property in accordance with the Will alleged to have been made by the deceased. The appellant Amar Nath and Jawala Datt Parshad were the next reversioners of Pandit Bansilal and the latter instituted in 1906, a suit contesting the validity of the aforementioned trust but subsequently abandoned his claim, and consented to the compromise entered into by the widows.

In 1909 the present appellant, Amar Nath, brought an action for a declaration that the property was not trust and that the compromise should not adversely affect his rights of succession after the death of the two widows. In that suit Jawala Datt Parshad, Prem Nath, a relation of Pandit Bansilal, and Musammât Tehal Kaur, Pandit Bansilal's step-mother, were made pro forma defendants along with the principal defendants, Musammât Bishen Kaur and Musammât Budhwanti. Musammât Bishen Kaur died during the pendency of the suit which was continued against the remaining defendants and resulted in 1917 in a decree in favour of Amar Nath. Against this decree Musammât Budhwanti preferred an appeal which is pending in this Court. In August 1918 Musammât Budhwanti died and Musammât Tehal Kaur applied to be impleaded as her representative and a formal order granting her application subject to all just exceptions was duly made by a Judge of this Court. On the 9th April 1921, she made an application for the appointment of a Receiver and this application was allowed by Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof who has written a long judgment setting out the disputes among the various persons who claim to be interested in the property and enumerating the alienations alleged to have been made by some of

The first point raised before us is to the effect that Musammatt Tehal Kaur cannot be regarded as the legal representative of the deceased Musammatt Budhwanti and consequently has no right either to prosecute the appeal or to make an application for the appointment of a Receiver. Now, it is true that as the step-mother of Pandit Bansi Lal this lady is not entitled under the Hindu Law to inherit his estate and that she can get only maintenance out of the property left by him. Mr. Tek Chand, however, invokes a custom which, he alleges, confers upon a step-mother the right of succession to the property of her step-son in the absence of lineal descendants and parents but we do not consider it necessary to prolong the proceedings by ordering an enquiry into the existence of the alleged custom. It is common ground that the widows of Pandit Bansi Lal were devoting a very large portion of the income of the estate to the maintenance of a temple, a Pathshalla and a Dharamsala, and there can be little doubt that the reversioners, who dispute the validity of the religious and charitable trust, cannot be expected to maintain these institutions. Of all the relations of Pandit Bansi Lal, Musammatt Tehal Kaur is the only person who is interested in carrying out the trust, and we consider that she is entitled to take steps to preserve the property for the trust pending the disposal of the appeal. Indeed it is laid down in Dan Parsad v. Gopi Kister (1) that a Court has a right to proceed under Order XL, rule 1 where it appears to be just and convenient to do so and that the Court can make an order suo motu. Observations to the same effect are to be found in Bidyut Prasad Narain Singh v. Asrafi Singh (2). Accordingly we must hold that the order appealed from cannot be impeached on the ground that Musammatt Tehal Kaur has not established her right of inheritance in the property.

On the question whether this is a fit case for the appointment of a Receiver we have got a clear finding arrived at by a Judge of this Court against the appellant and we must decline to interfere with his discretion in a matter of this character, unless we are satisfied that the discretion has been improperly exercised and contravenes any principle of law. We are not called upon nor do we think we should be justified to express any opinion in the matter in controversy in the appeal preferred against the decree of the Subordinate Judge and we have no desire to make any observations which would pre-judge that appeal or prejudice the claim of any of the reversioners to the property. Confining ourselves strictly to the merits of the application for the appointment of a Receiver we consider that, in view of Jawala Datt Parshad's admission by words and conduct in the suit instituted by him in 1903, one half of the estate, which he might have successfully claimed as one of the two nearest reversioners of the last male owner, should, for the purposes of this application, be regarded as trust property and that the fate of the remaining half must depend upon the result of the appeal pending in this Court. There is, therefore, at least one half of the property which should be administered for the maintenance of religious and charitable endowments and it is the duty of the Court to take suitable steps to preserve these endowments.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that as the suit brought by him was one for a mere declaration this Court should not appoint a Receiver of the property the possession of which cannot be awarded to one party or the other by the Court disposing of the main appeal. Our attention has not been invited to any authority which would limit the jurisdiction of the Court in the manner indicated above and considering that the object of the appointment of the Receiver is to protect the property and to maintain the status quo ante pending the disposal of the question whether the remaining half of the estate is or is not trust property, we are of opinion that this is a fit case in which the property should remain in custodia legis. Mr. Gokal Chand Narang argues that under Order XL, rule 1 (2) the Court has no authority to remove from the possession or the custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove and that the Court should not, therefore, remove his client from the possession of the property where Musammatt Tehal Kaur herself has not a present right so to remove him. It has, however, been held by the Calcutta High Court in Sitya Narain Singh v. Srimati Bani Keshabati Kumari (3), that the aforesaid sub-rule refers to the case of the removal of a person other than a party to the suit and the same view has been taken in Shri Neteza Pandara Sannadhi v. Ramalingam Pillai (4), we concur in this exposition of the law and hold that sub-rule (2) does not debar the Court from removing one of the parties from the possession of the property.

Upon a view of all the circumstances we are not prepared to hold that any adequate ground for our interference has been established. Before concluding we must state that the final order appointing Rai Sahib Seth Ram Parshad to be the Receiver of the property is not impeached before us though a separate appeal reiterating the grounds of objection to the property of the order directing the appointment of a Receiver was preferred by the appellant. We are, therefore, not called upon to consider the question of the personnel or of the remuneration to be awarded to the Receiver for his services.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1456
OF 1920.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 3, Sch. I, Art. 14

—Plea of limitation raised in first appeal when to be given effect to.

The plea of limitation can be taken at any stage of a case and under section 3 of the Limitation Act a Court of Appeal is bound to give effect to this plea when raised. But in order that this plea may be given effect to when raised in appeal it is necessary that the facts showing that the suit is barred should be apparent on the record [p. 387, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 23rd February 1920, affirming that of the Mansif Third Court at Narainganj, dated the 17th May 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Tarak Nath Chakroborty (with him Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit that the land in suit did not appertain to Zamindari No. 162 but to Mahal No. 1170 of the Dacca Collectorate. The First Court decreed the suit according to the admission in our defence that 14 annas share of the land belonged to the Mahal No. 1170. We then appealed and raised the plea of limitation. The appeal was, however, dismissed. My point is that the plea of limitation can be raised at any stage of the suit. The Court is bound to go into the question. Refers to section 3 of Indian Limitation Act. The bar of limitation appears on the face of the record. Order VII, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure has, therefore, no application. There is no allegation of fraud even in the plaint. There is not the slightest indication as to the cause of delay in filing the suit. The order may have been illegal or improper but that does not show that it was passed without jurisdiction. Refers to Yar Mohammad Saha v. Hayat Mohammad Saha (1). The mere fact that no notice of the application under section 88 of the Estates Partition Act was served on the plaintiffs would not take away the jurisdiction of the Collector. At best, the Collector might be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. If the order is a nullity then the plaintiff has no cause of action at all.

Babu Priya Nath Dutt (with him Babu Biraj Mohan Mazumdar, for the Deputy Registrar), for the Respondent.—My point is that the order of the Collector is a nullity having been passed in our absence. Refers to Raj Chandra Roy v. Fajiruddin Hossain (2). Article 14 of the Limitation Act has no application. Assuming that it does apply, the Subordinate Judge is right in his conclusion. We distinctly said that the defendant falsely and without our knowledge applied for partition under the Estates Partition Act. The objection as to limitation was not taken in the First Court. Refers to Order XII, rule 6; Order VIII, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. They ought to have taken the point specifically so that we could have amended our plaint. I submit the suit is not barred. Refers to Kedar Nath Mondal v. Mokerh Chandra Khan (3). In that case Mukerjee, J., held that the point of limitation should be taken in first stage. Refers to Laloo Singh v. Purna Chandra Banerjee (4), Anand Kishore Chowdhury v. Daje Thakurcin (5) and Narendra Lal Khan v. Jogi Hari (6).

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakrabarty replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration that the land described in the schedule to the plaint did not appertain to Zamindari No. 162 but appertained to Mahal No. 1170 of the Dacca Collectorate. The first defendant who has appealed before me filed a written statement admitting that the 14 annas share of the disputed land appertain to Mahal No. 1170. He further stated that he had no objection to the said 14 annas being partitioned as appertaining to Mahal No. 1170. In the First Court the only issue that was tried on these pleadings was whether the plaintiffs had any cause of action. That issue was determined in the plaintiffs' favour and the suit was decreed with costs. In the decree it was directed that "it be declared that the alleged 14 annas share of the disputed land appertain to Mahal No. 1170 taluk Mahadeb Roy and not to Zamindari No. 162 and that the said 14 annas share of the disputed land should in partitioning the said Mahal No. 1170 be taken as appertaining to the same." Against this decree the first defendant appealed and in the lower Appellate Court he, for the first time, raised a plea that the plaintiffs suit was barred by limitation under Article 14 of the Schedule 1 of the Indian Limitation Act. The lower Appellate Court held that as the suit had been instituted one year after the order of the Deputy Collector under section 88 of the Estates Partition Act it was time barred, but as the plaintiffs denied the factum of notice as required by section 88 of the Estates Partition Act and there was no assertion against that denial, the defendant could not be allowed to take up that point at that stage.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the plea of limitation can be taken at any stage of the case, and that under section 3 of the Limitation Act the Court of Appeal was bound to give effect to this plea when raised. But in order that this plea may be given effect to when raised in appeal it is necessary that the facts showing that the suit is barred should be apparent on the record. In the present case, owing to the nature of the defence set up by the defendant, I find it difficult to hold that the plea of limitation should succeed. It has been found as a fact, and this finding must be accepted in second appeal that no notice of the application under section 88 of the Estates Partition Act was served on the plaintiffs. This would make the order passed in these proceedings a bad order since the section expressly requires that due notice should be given to the parties before any enquiry is made into facts of possession. But my principal difficulty in this case is that it is impossible to ascertain what was the actual order passed or by whom it was passed. Section 85 provides for an enquiry by a Deputy Collector who would report his conclusion to the Collector and on this report the Collector would dispose of the matter by passing an order. On behalf of the appellant reliance is placed on the plaint. But the plaint is by no means clear. In paragraph 4 of the plaint reference is made to a report made under section 88 which would appear to be the report under that section by a Deputy Collector. But in the same paragraph it is stated that the Deputy Collector committed an error by deciding that the land in suit appertained to estate as 162. But under section 88, as already pointed out, the decision on the dispute is to be made not by the Deputy Collector but by the Collector. In paragraph 9 reference is made to the date of the judgment of the proceedings. Whether the judgment is the final order by the Collector or the report by the Deputy Collector referred to in paragraph 4 is by no means clear, owing to there being no dispute as to the plaintiff's main contention no copy of the proceedings under section 88 of the Estates Partition Act was filed in the Court and there is nothing to show what actually happened in these proceedings. Without knowing what the order passed was it is impossible to say whether or not this suit was maintainable without setting aside the order passed in the partition proceedings or whether the judgment of the 10th November 1917 was the final order in the case from which the period of limitation should commence. Taking this view I hold that the lower Appellate Court was substantially right in holding the plea of limitation could not succeed in appeal.

I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Letters Patent (Lahore), cl. 10—"Judgment"— Order when 'judgment'—Suit dismissed by Trial Court merits—Appeal against order of remand dismissed by Single Judge of High Court—Letters Patent Appeal of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Suit for possession by heir or reversioner—Object of Punjab Act—Suit barred before accrual of right to sue—Limitation—Particular provision, plaint to determine.

In determining whether an order constitutes a 'judgment' or not within the meaning of clause 10 of the Letters Patent, the Court must take into consideration the nature of the order and its effect upon the civil proceeding in which it is made.
If it puts an end to the proceeding, or, if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the proceeding, then it is a 'judgment.' [p. 391, col. 2; p.
392, col. 1.]

(Case-law reviewed.)

A suit was dismissed by the Trial Court as barred by limitation. The District Judge held that it was not so barred and remanded it for decision on the merits. An appeal against the order of remand was dismissed by a single Judge of the High Court:

Held, that the order of the single Judge constituted a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 10 of the Letters Patent. [p. 392, col. 1.]

Obiter dicta—(1) It is not necessary that a decision in order to constitute a 'judgment' must involve an actual decision on the right in controversy between the parties. While a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure cannot be viewed as a 'judgment', it cannot be held that the words 'right' and 'liability' used in the definition of 'judgment' given by Sir Richard Couch in Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company, Limited (1) have reference only to the substantive law and not to a matter of procedure. [p.
391, col. 1.]

(2) The determination of the question whether a person is entitled to institute a suit for possession within twelve years from a certain date is a determination of a right, more especially when it involves the determination of the acquisition of a prescriptive right by the person in possession. [p. 390,
col. 1.]

(3) The object of the Legislature in enacting subsection (2) of section 104, Civil Procedure Code, was to make it clear that there was no second appeal under the Code from the orders specified in subsection (1) of the section. Sub-section (2) was never intended to override the express provisions of the Letters Patent and to take away by implication the right of appeal conferred by those special provisions.

An action to recover possession of ancestral land alienated by a male proprietor subject to the Customary Law of the Punjab is governed by the provisions of the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act, I of 1900, if the death of the alienor, which gives rise to the cause of action for a suit for possession, takes place after the enforcement of the Act. [p. 392, col. 2.]

Mahna Singh v. Ladha Singh, 49 Ind. Cas. 708; 18 P. R. 1919, followed.

The whole scheme of the Act makes it clear that the object of the Legislature was to remove an uncertainty about titles to land by compelling the relatives of the male proprietors to impeach their alienations within a limited period, namely, twelve years from one of the dates specified therein. It was intended that the title of the alienee should be immune from attack, if the alienation in his favour was not contested within twelve years from the date mentioned in the third column of the schedule. Article 2, which deals with a suit for possession, should be read with Article 1 which prescribes the period of limitation for a suit for a declaratory decree, and the word 'heir' used in the former Article connotes the same person or persons as the expression "son or reversioner" in the latter Article. [p. 392, col. 2; p. 393, col. 1.]

The word "heir" denotes a person who succeeds by descent to an estate of inheritance, and it is beyond doubt that as long as a proprietor is living he has no heir. The person impeaching his alienation and seeking a declaratory decree cannot, therefore, be designated by the term "heir" and is consequently described as "son or reversioner." It is only after the death of the proprietor that the "son or reversioner" becomes his heir. [p. 393, col. 1.]

In order to determine whether an action is governed by a particular provision of the Law of Limitation the Court has only to peruse the plaint and to decide whether upon the averments contained therein the claim comes within that provision. [p. 393, col. 1.]

It is by no means a rare thing that a suit for possession is barred by limitation though the right to sue for possession has not yet accrued. [p. 398, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Scott-Smith (passed in Civil Appeal No. 2523 of 1920), dated the 10th March 1921, and reported as 64 Ind. Cas. 67 affirming that of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 20th August 1920.

Thakur Gullu Ram, for the Appellant.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Lala Balwant Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which are relevant to the question of limitation arising in appeal are as follows:—

On the 17th March 1894 one Baghela, a Jat of the Ludhiana District, made a gift of the land in dispute to his step son Raldu Singh and on the 11th January 1896 a mutation in respect of it was effected in favour of the donee. The donor died on the 14th July 1901 and the present action for possession of the property was brought on the 21st January 1919 by his collateral Sawal Singh. The Trial Court dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by limitation, but its decree was discharged by the District Judge who came to the conclusion that the suit was within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 144 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, and remanded the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for decision on the remaining issues. Against the order of remand an appeal was preferred to the High Court which was heard by Mr. Justice Scott-Smith who has affirmed the decision of the District Judge and dismissed the appeal.

From the decision of the learned Judge the defendant has brought the present appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent. Mr. Sheo Narain for the respondent raises a preliminary objection that the order complained of does not constitute a "judgment" within the meaning of the aforeaid clause, and that consequently no appeal lies from it.

The expression "judgment" is not defined in the Letters Patent, and though some attempts have been made by the High Courts at defining the term, it cannot be said that any precise and, at the same time, exhaustive definition has been formulated. The earliest definition, which is often cited and is now regarded as the locus classicus, is contained in the well known judgment of Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company Limited (1). In that case Sir Richard Couch C. J., said, "we think 'judgment' in clause 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either final or preliminary or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it leaving other matters to be determined." The learned Advocate for the respondent places his reliance upon this definition and contends that the words 'right' and 'liability' as used in the definition, have reference to the substantive law and not to a matter of procedure; and that the question of limitation which was the only issue determined by the Single Bench in this case, is not a question of 'right' or 'liability', but is a matter which affects only the remedy of the plaintiff. In this connection our attention is invited to the observations of Mookerjee, J., in Ramendra Nath Roy v. Brojendra Nath Dass (2), but we do not think that they support the contention of the respondent. The question for consideration in that case was whether the adjudication that there was a misjoinder of causes of action in the suit and that the plaintiff could not proceed against all the defendants in one suit was a 'judgment' within the definition given by Sir Richard Couch. Now, Mr. Justice Mookerjee points out that, while a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure in a suit could not be treated as a judgment, the adjudication on the question of multifariousness was not an order of that description and that it determined some right between the parties, namely, the right whether the suit as framed was not authorized by the law and the rules relating to procedure, and could not, therefore, be entertained. It is not necessary that a decision, in order to constitute a judgment, must involve an actual decision on the right in controversy between the parties. While fully endorsing the view that a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure cannot be viewed as a judgment, we cannot hold that the words, 'right' and 'liability' were used in the narrow sense contended for by the learned Advocate. It seems to us that the determination of the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to bring his suit after the lapse of twelve years from the date of the mutation is a determination of a right, and the adjudication thereupon certainly affects the merits of the question between the parties, more especially when it involves, as it does in the present case, the determination of the point whether the defendant has acquired a prescriptive right of ownership to the land in dispute, vide section 28 of the Indian Limitation Act. It is, however, clear that this definition, which has no doubt been adopted by the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay as a useful guide in determining the question whether a decision is or is not a judgment, has never been regarded as absolutely exhaustive vide, Budhu Lal v. Ohattu Gope (3) and Ramendra Nath Roy v. Brojendra Nath Dass (2). The Allahabad High Court has not felt the necessity of defining the term 'judgment,' because it has held that the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent is, in respect of an order made under the Civil Procedure Code, controlled by the provision of section 104, Civil Procedure Code. Now section 588 of the old Code, which has now been replaced by section 104 and Order XLIII, rule 1 of the new Code, enacted that an appeal lay from the order specified in that section and from no other orders, and it was consequently decided by a Full Bench of that Court in Muhammad Naim-ul-lah Khan v. Ihsan-ul-lah Khan (4) that clause 10 of the Letters Patent was controlled in its operation by section 588, and that no appeal lay under the Letters Patent from an order passed under the Code if it was not one of the orders enumerated in that section. Section 104 of the new Code, however, expressly saves the right of appeal otherwise provided by "any law for the time being in force," but a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Piara Lal v. Madan Lal (5), has again adopted the rule enunciated in Muhammad Naim-ul-lah Khan v. Ihsan-ul-lah Khan (4) on the ground that sub-section (2) of section 104 makes the appellate orders final and takes away pro tanto the right of appeal conferred by the Letters Patent. It seems to us that the object of the Legislature in enacting sub-section (2) was to make it clear that there was no second appeal under the Code from the orders specified in sub-section (1) of section 104, and that sub-section (2) was not intended to override the express provisions of the Letters Patent. In the case of Hurriah Chunder Chowdhury v. Kali Sunderi Debi (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following important observations. "It only remains to observe that their Lordships do not think that section 583 of Act X of 1877, which has the effect of restricting certain appeals, applies to such a case as this, where the appeal is from one of the Judges of the Court to the Full Court." We do not agree with the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court when they say, vide Banno Bibi v. Mehdi Husain (7), that these observations were confined to the facts of that particular case. We consider that the general provision contained in section 104 does not take away by implication the right of appeal conferred in express terms by the special provisions relating to appeal to be found in the Letters Patent and this is the view taken by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay in Tootsee Money Dass v. Sudevi Dass (8), Sobhathathi Chetti v. Narayanasami Chetti (9) and Secretary of State for India v. Jehangir Maneckji Ourseki (10).

(1) 8 B. L. R. 433; 17 W. R. 364.

RULDU SINGH v. SAWAL SINGH.

Coming now to the definition of the expression "judgment" given by the Madras High Court we find that the earliest Madras case which deals with this matter is that of DeSouza v. Coles (11). In that case Mr. Justice Bittleston said, "the words, judgment" ... cannot be limited to the final judgment in the suit, but must be held to have the more general meaning of any decision or determination affecting the rights or the interest of any suitor or applicant.... When the language giving the appeal is so general in its terms as that contained in the 15th clause of the Charter, it is, we think, impossible to prescribe any limits to the right of appeal founded upon the nature of the order or decree appealed from." It is difficult to endorse the view contained in the second sentence of the passage quoted above. There can be no doubt that this definition is much too wide, and it has now been superseded by another definition which appears to be the best definition attempted so far. In Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (12) it was rightly pointed out that in order to decide whether an adjudication should be treated as a 'judgment' regard should be had, not to the form of the adjudication, but to its effect upon the suit or other civil proceeding in which it was made. In that case Sir Arnold White laid down the following test:—"If its effect, whatever its form may be, and whatever may be the nature of the application on which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, I think the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause." It will be observed that this definition furnishes a better and a surer test for deciding the question whether an adjudication is or is not a judgment than that given by Sir Richard Couch in the case of Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company Limited (1). If an adjudication puts an end to the suit or appeal, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or the appeal, then it is clearly a judgment. The difficulty, however, arises when an adjudication has no such effect upon a suit or appeal, but disposes of only an application made in a suit or appeal. Now there can be no doubt that it is not every application which results in an adjudication which can be held to be a judgment. In the Madras case, cited above, Sir Arnold White draws a distinction between an application which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication in a suit and an application which is an independent proceeding ancillary to the suit and instituted not as a step towards judgment but with a view to render the judgment effective, if obtained. He considers that while an adjudication on the former would not be a judgment an order terminating the latter would come within the purview of that expression.

Now, there are a large number of applications in respect of which it is easy to determine whether they belong to one category or the other. For example, applications for transfer, summoning witnesses, issue of commission for the examination of witnesses, adjournments, directing a party to produce and give inspection of documents, framing an issue, are clearly those on which an adjudication cannot be regarded as a judgment. other hand, applications for the appointment of a Receiver, issue of an interim injunction, etc., belong to the second class, in which the order disposing of the application would be a judgment appealable under the Letters Patent. Indeed, to this class may be assigned all the applications, the orders on which are appealable under section 104 or Order XLIII, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. There are, however, several applications in respect of which the distinction drawn in the Madras case cannot be of much practical assistance in deciding whether the order thereupon should be a judgment within the meaning of the Letters Patent. Applications for a mandamus, leave to defend in a summary suit, on a negotiable instrument, etc., may be cited as examples of this type of applications. There is no sure guide for deciding whether an order terminating an application of this character is or is not a judgment, and it is for this reason that the High Courts have, in respect of orders passed thereon, taken divergent views; for instance, an order directing a mandamus to issue to a public body to compel it to refer a question of compensation to arbitration has been held by the Calcutta High Court in Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company, Limited (1) not to be a judgment, but this view has been dissented from by the Madras High Court in Tuljaram Row v. Alegappa Chettiar (12).

It is clear that, in the absence of an authoritative definition binding upon all the High Courts, there is bound to be some divergence of judicial opinion on the subject. It is, therefore, impossible to lay down any definite rule which would meet the requirements of all the cases, and the only thing which can be said is that, in determining whether an order constitutes a judgment or not, the Court must take into consideration the nature of the order and its effect upon the civil proceeding in which it was made.

The case with which we are concerned does not, however, present any real difficulty. It is beyond dispute that the decision of the learned Judge confirming the order of the District Judge put an end to the appeal which came up before him, and it must, therefore, be held to be a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 10 of the Letters Patent. We are accordingly of opinion that the preliminary objection is not well founded and must be overruled.

On the merits we are unable to endorse the conclusion of the Single Bench and consider that the suit is governed by the provisions of the Punjab Limitation Act, I of 1900. It is common ground that the alienor died in 1901, after the date of the enforcement of the Act, and it has been repeatedly held, vide, inter alia, Mahan Singh v. Ludha Singh (13) that an action to recover possession of ancestral land alienated by a male proprietor subject to the Customary Law of the Punjab is governed by the provisions of the aforesaid Act, if the death of the alienor, which gives rise to the cause of action for a suit for possession, takes place after the enforcement of the Act. It is, however, urged that Article 2 of the Schedule to the Act, which is the only provision governing a suit for possession, refers to a suit by the "heir" of the alienor, and that the plaintiff Sanwal Singh was not the heir of Baghela within the meaning of the above Article. Now, it appears that one Basawa Singh was the nearest reversioner of Baghela, but that he assented to the alienation and attested the deed of gift executed by Baghela. Basawa Singh, however, survived Baghela and is said to have died only four or five years before the institution of the suit, and it is, therefore, contended that on the date of Baghela's death Basawa Singh was his heir, and that Sanwal Singh was "only a remote reversioner who became entitled to possession after the death of Baghela's heir."

We have considered this argument, but we do not think that it takes the case out of the purview of the aforesaid Article. The whole scheme of the Act makes it clear that the object of the Legislature was to remove an uncertainty about titles to land by compelling the relatives of the male proprietors to impeach their alienations within a limited period, namely, twelve years from one of the dates specified therein. It was intended that the title of the alienee should be immune from attack, if the alienation in his favour was not contested within twelve years from the date mentioned in the third column of the Schedule. Article 2, which deals with a suit for possession, should be read with Article 1, which prescribes the period of limitation for a suit for a declaratory decree, and it seems to us that the word "heir" used in the former Article connotes the same person or persons as the expression "son or reversioner," in the latter Article. The word "heir" denotes a person who succeeds by descent to an estate of inheritance, and it is beyond doubt that as long as a proprietor is living he has no heir. The person impeaching his alienation and seeking a declaratory decree cannot, therefore, be designated by the term "heir," and is consequently described as "son or reversioner." It is only after the death of the proprietor that the "son or reversioner" becomes his heir.

RULDU SINGH v. SANWAL SINGH.

The plaintiff Sanwal Singh, when seeking to recover possession of the property of Baghela, claims to be his heir, and it seems to us that the suit as brought by him is a suit by Baghela's heir. Whether he could or could not have claimed the property immediately after the death of Baghela is beside the point; the question is, whether the suit as brought by him is a suit by the heir of the proprietor. In order to determine whether an action is governed by a particular provision of the Law of Limitation the Court has only to peruse the plaint and to decide whether upon the averments contained therein the claim comes within that provision. Now if the claim in the present case is one by the heir of the alienor to recover possession of the property alienated by him, (and we consider that there can be no reasonable doubt on that point) the Court is not called upon to go into the history of the question whether the plaintiff was or was not entitled to inherit the estate immediately after the alienor's death.

It is urged that the plaintiff could not sue for possession during the lifetime of Basawa Singh, that his right to possession accrued for the first time on the latter's death, and that the date of that death should be regarded as the terminus a quo for the period of limitation prescribed for the suit. Now, assuming that the plaintiff's right to possession did not accrue until the death of Basawa Singh, we consider that the Legislature has drawn a clear distinction between the date on which the right to sue accrues and the date from which the period of limitation begins to run. Indeed, it is laid down in express terms that if no declaratory decree has been obtained, in respect of an alienation, the period of twelve years for a suit for possession is to be counted from the date of the mutation in respect of the alienation, or, in the absence of mutation, from the date of the alienee obtaining possession, etc., as the case may be; and it is by no means a rare thing that a suit for possession is barred by limitation though the right to sue for possession has not yet accrued. The argument that the contention urged by the defendant would lead to an anomalous position does not appeal to us, because it is beyond doubt that the provisions of the Act are not free from such anomalies. The reason, however, is not far to seek. The object of the Legislature was to ensure, without leaving any loophole, that the title of the alienee should not remain in doubt for more than twelve years and that object has been achieved regardless of any anomalies or absurdities which may arise in special cases.

We must, however, point out that it would also be absurd that each successive reversioner should have twelve years for a suit for possession from the date of death of the preceding reversioner. According to this contention an alienation could be attacked after the expiry of even a hundred years, a result which is much more absurd than that pointed out by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff. It may be that the framers of the Act did not anticipate all the results which flow from its provisions, but we have to interpret the Statute as we find it.

We accordingly hold that the action brought by the plaintiff comes within the ambit of the Act and as it was brought after the expiry of twelve years from the date mentioned in the Schedule to the Act it is barred by time. We, therefore, accept the appeal and, reversing the judgment of the Single Bench, dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Pleadings—Suit for possession of mortgaged property—Mortgage-bond challenged as fraudulent—Fraud not proved—Amendment—Suit, whether can be converted into suit for redemption—Discretion of Court.

In the absence of special circumstances, a suit to recover possession of a plot of land on a declaration that a mortgage-bond was fraudulent, collusive and without consideration, when the case of fraud has failed, cannot be converted into a suit for redemption of the mortgage; but it may be so converted, in the discretion of the Court, if the mortgage is valid and binding and the circumstances of the case permit it. [p. 395, col. 1.]

A plaintiff must ordinarily succeed on the case he has made in the plaint and, unless there are special circumstances, an action instituted for purposes absolutely inconsistent with redemption cannot properly be converted into an action to redeem, as it would in reality amount to the conversion of a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Hooghly, dated the 8th of September 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Arambag, dated the 22nd of April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Hemendra Nath Sen and Gopendra N. Das, for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court should have given us an opportunity to redeem the mortgage. That course was followed in the case of Bal Kishan Lal v. Topeswar Singh (1). There although the plaintiff failed in his main contention he was allowed to redeem.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, for the Respondents.—Where, as in this case, possession has been sought on the ground that the mortgage itself was fraudulent and the allegation of fraud has failed, the suit cannot be allowed to be converted into one for redemption: Kokilasari Dasi v. Rudranand Goswami (2), Ghurphokni v. Purneshwar Dayal (3). Mookerjee, J., who was a party to the decision in Bal Kishan Lal's case (1) was also a party to these decisions. Refers also to Ram Dao Mondal v. Indromoni Dasi (4) and to Gordon v. Horsfall (5).

[N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.—This case was before the Judicature Acts.]

Bal Kishan Lal's case (1) is not in point. In case the validity of the mortgage was not challenged, what was attacked was the decree and the execution proceedings.

The necessary parties are wanting—the Thakur and Tiwari have not been made parties.

Babu Hemendra Nath Sen, in reply.—The Code gives your Lordships power to grant leave to amend the plaint at any stage.

[N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.—But not so as to alter the whole character of the plaint].

Your Lordships will allow the amendment to save the expense and delay of another litigation.

[N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.—As the Thakur is not a party, even if we make an order in your favour the order will be infructuous.]

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in the appeal is whether the plaintiff should be allowed to redeem in the present suit, which is one for recovery of possession, on a declaration that the mortgage-bond was fraudulent, collusive and without consideration and that the decree obtained, therefore, was also fraudulent and collusive.

It is found by the Courts below that the mortgage was not fraudulent and the suit was accordingly dismissed.

It is contended before us, as it was before the lower Appellate Court, that the plaintiff should be allowed to redeem in the present suit and in support of that contention the case of Bal Kishan Lal v. Topeswar Singh (1) is relied on.

In that case it appears that there were allegations of fraud which had failed, but notwithstanding that the plaintiff was allowed to redeem in that suit. It is to be observed, however, that what was attacked as fraudulent was not the mortgage but the decree which was obtained upon the mortgage against the father of the plaintiff who was the Kurtha of a Mitakshara family. That decision of Mookerjee, J., cannot be said to be directly in point.

On the other hand, Mr. Justice Mookerjee discussed this question in two earlier cases. In Kokilasari Dasi v. Rudranand Goswami (2) where it was held that "a plaintiff must ordinarily succeed on the case he has made in the plaint and that, unless there are special circumstances, an action instituted for purposes absolutely inconsistent with redemption, cannot properly be converted into an action to redeem."

In another case Ghurphekni v. Furmashor Dayal (3), it was held that "where a plaintiff has rested his case upon fraud, when the case of fraud has failed, he cannot be permitted to support it upon an entirely different and inconsistent ground. Although, therefore, a suit, brought as one for possession, may, in the discretion of the Court, where the circumstances of the case permit it, be converted into one for redemption on the assumption that the mortgage was valid and binding, a plaintiff must ordinarily succeed on the case he has made in the plaint, and that, unless there are special circumstances, an action instituted for purposes absolutely inconsistent with redemption cannot properly be converted into an action to redeem, as it would in reality amount to the conversion of a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character."

These cases do not appear to have been cited before the learned Judges in the case of Bal Kishan Lal v. Tejwar Singh (1). Although the decision on the question whether a suit for possession can be converted into a suit for redemption are not uniform, no case has been cited in support of the contention that, where the mortgage has been challenged as fraudulent, and the fraud attempted to be proved and the plaintiff failed to prove it, he should be allowed to redeem.

On the other hand, in the case of Ram Das Mondal v. Indromoni Dasi (4) Macpherson, J., observed: "I know of no case in which a suit based on fraud and fought out on the ground of fraud and dismissed in the First Court on the ground of there having been no fraud has, in the Appellate Court, been converted into one for redemption."

We are unable to hold that there are any special circumstances in the case. It is unnecessary to discuss the matter further because that is not the only difficulty in the way of the plaintiff. The property has been found to have been dedicated to a Thakur and the Thakur is not a party to the suit. Any decree for redemption passed against the defendants in the absence of the Thakur would, therefore, be infructuous.

In these circumstances, we think that the present suit must fail. This, however, will not prevent the plaintiff from bringing any suit that he may be advised for redemption.

The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Sheikhpura at Lohare, dated the 3rd March 1921, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sheikhpura, dated the 21st December 1920.

Lala Amir Ohand Mehta, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT—The plaintiff sues to pre-empt land which was sold by the first defendant, Jalal, to the second defendant Natha Singh. Rupees 800 out of the purchase-money were left with the vendee for payment to the plaintiff, to whom the land had been mortgaged. The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit on the ground that the plaintiff waived his right of pre-emption by accepting the mortgage-money from the vendee without demur and without setting up his claim. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court.

The Courts have not noticed the fact that the receipt given by the plaintiff for the mortgage-money recites, not that he received the money from Natha Singh, but that he received it from Jalal through Natha Singh, with whom it was deposited. Further, in Fazalddad Khan v. Sawan Singh (1) it was held that the mere acceptance of his money by a mortgagee from the vendee, or his omission at the time to express a desire to purchase the property is not a waiver of his right to claim pre-emption.

Bawa Lehna Singh v. Jagan Nath (2) which has been relied on by the Courts below, is clearly distinguishable as in that case the mortgagee had elected to recognise the validity of the sale by demanding his money from the vendee and this distinction was pointed out in Fazalddad Khan v. Sawan Singh (1).

Mehta Ohandras Malik v. Ibar Khan (3), referred to by the lower Appellate Court is also distinguishable as in that case the vendee had sent a formal notice to the mortgagee that he, the vendee, had bought the property and that the mortgagee should take his money.

The learned District Judge has also laid stress on the fact that the plaintiff stood by while the vendee proceeded to break up part of the land in dispute, which at the time of the sale was left waste, and that he did not bring his suit till 7½ months after the redemption of the mortgage. But the ruling of 1903 mentioned above is also an authority for holding that mere delay in suing is not a waiver of the plaintiff's right of pre-emption. A pre-emptor is allowed by the law twelve months to make up his mind whether he will sue or not, and any delay in suing is immaterial provided that the suit is within the period of limitation.

The lower Appellate Court has quoted Bajinath Ram Goenka v. Ramdhari Chowdhury (4), in which it was held that the right of pre-emption must be exercised with the utmost promptitude and that any unreasonable or unnecessary delay, is to be construed as an election not to pre-empt. But that case related to a right of pre-emption under the Muhammadan Law, and is, therefore, quite inapplicable to the present case.

I hold, therefore, that plaintiff's conduct in accepting the mortgage-money without asserting his right of pre-emption, and in waiting for 7½ months before bringing the suit, is not a waiver of his right of pre-emption. I accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decrees of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code to that Court for the disposal of the appeal before it according to law. The Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal in this Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Hindu Law—Surrender of estate by widow—Reservation of absolute estate in portion for maintenance—Validity of surrender.

A surrender by a widow of her husband's estate is not invalid merely because she bargains for an absolute estate in a portion of the estate for her maintenance, so long as the lands allotted to her for maintenance are not in excess of her requirements for maintenance and the transaction is otherwise fair.

A reservation for maintenance to be valid need not be only of a life-estate.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Visvanatha Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that Exhibits I and II and the evidence in the case show that there was a surrender by the second defendant to the third defendant of all the properties she was in possession of as widow and that she got a sum of Rs. 500 and land yielding about Rs. 25 a year absolutely for her maintenance. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the transaction evidenced by Exhibits I and II was a devise by the widow to get an absolute estate in a portion of her husband's property. It is in evidence that she would require at least Rs. 4 a month for her maintenance and that the land she got would yield about Rs. 25 a year. The interest on the sum of Rs. 500 and the yield of the land would hardly be sufficient for her maintenance. Having regard to the extent of the lands surrendered by her and the yield, it is difficult to see why she should have entered into the transaction evidenced by Exhibits I and II if her object was not bona fide.

The next question is whether the fact that she got an absolute estate in the land which she got for her maintenance and in Rs. 500 given to her would render the surrender invalid. In the case of widows entitled to maintenance it is open to them to get properties absolutely in lieu of their claim and there is no reason why a surrender by a widow should be invalid where she bargains for an absolute estate in a portion of the estate for her maintenance so long as the lands allotted to her for maintenance are not in excess of her requirements for maintenance and the transaction is otherwise fair. No authority is cited for the view that the reservation for maintenance which would, under the decision of the Privy Council in Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prashad Singh (1), be valid should be only of a life estate.

We are of opinion that there was a valid surrender by the 2nd defendant in favour of the 3rd defendant, who is the father of the plaintiff, and that the suit by the plaintiff is not maintainable.

We reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Babu Ram Chandra Masumdar (with him Babu Dharendra Lal Kastgir), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession. The plaintiff's predecessor was auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue. The sale took place in 1911. The plaintiff's case is that the defendants are the tenure-holders of the mahal and hence the tenure is liable to be cancelled and the plaintiff is entitled to khas possession. The defence was threefold etc.—(1) that the sale has not the effect of a revenue sale inasmuch as there was a previous arrangement between the auction-purchaser and the outgoing proprietor; (2) that the tenure was a protected interest within the meaning of section 37 of the Revenue Sale Law, and (3) that the defendant is a cultivating raiyat having the right of occupancy in the land. The First Court held that the defendant was a tenure-holder and as such he had no protected interest in the land, that there was a previous arrangement as alleged and hence it amounted to a sale. The First Court, therefore, passed a decree for rent and mesne profits. On appeal by both the plaintiff and the defendant the lower Appellate Court agreed with the First Court on the first two points. With reference to the last point the First Court's decree for rent was affirmed but mesne profits were decreed in accordance with the old rate of rent. The plaintiff now appeals to this Court. The defendant has filed cross appeal. My point is that there having been no fraud in law, the effect of the sale was that of a revenue sale and secondly that the mesne profits ought not to have been allowed at the old rate of rent. The previous arrangement was reduced into writing but was not called for and secondary evidence was gone into. I submit that cannot be done in accordance with law. Section 66 of the Indian Evidence Act does not apply to cases of this nature. As regards mesne profits the Court below has affirmed the decree for fair rent. I would, therefore, be entitled logically to mesne profits on the basis of fair rent fixed by the Courts. The case in Harendra Lal Roy v. Salimullah (1) is distinguishable. In the present case there were other bidders. Refers to Sreenath Ghose v. Hurnath Dutt (2). The arrangement in the present case was made after the properties were advertised for sale. I submit there could be no fraud in a case like this. I cannot suffer for any act of the outgoing proprietor. All that the arrangement was for, was that a fair value would be obtained at the sale. That could not possibly constitute a fraud in law.

Babu Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty (with him Babu Chanira Sekhar Sen), for the Respondents.—I hold under a kaimi dumi pottah and the jamah is fixed and consolidated. It does not lie in their mouth to question the contract now. They cannot give oral evidence to prove alterations in the contract of tenancy. Refers to Lakhi Charan Saha v. Hamid Ali (3), Sarbeswar Patra v. Maharaja Sir Bijoy Chand (4), Maug Eyin v. Ma Shwe La (5), have been recorded in the settlement proceedings as a raiya. Refers to Promoda Nath Roy v. Asir-ud-din (6), Secretary of Stuts for India v. Diganbar Nanda (7). The suit for khas possession being dismissed on the ground that the sale was private the question does not lie. I would be protested under the terms of my contract. If the purchaser is bound by the contract no question of settling fair rent can possibly arise. I hold under the terms of my lease. Refers to Uma Charan v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. (8). The findings of fact all conclude the appeal as regards the question of secondary evidence I submit it could be given according to section 66 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

IN No. 1894 OF 1919.

This appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession of the lands in dispute by the purchaser of an estate at a sale for arrears of revenue. The defendants pleaded that by reason of an agreement between the defaulter and the purchaser the latter was not entitled to the benefit of a revenue sale; and that the defendants had a protested interest in the land which could not be annulled. The Courts below found that the defendant's interest was that of a tenure-holder, and was not a protested interest, but that the sale in essence was a private sale, and the plaintiff, therefore, could not get khas possession of the land. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is found that the former proprietor Purno was heavily indebted, and that he purposely defaulted in the payment of Government revenue in order that the property might fetch a higher price than at a private sale. He had already twice done this; but his object had been frustrated by the tenure-holder depositing the arrears of revenue. He defaulted a third time, and on this occasion he entered into an agreement with Ramdhan (the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest), before the sale, under which the latter was to purchase the property at the revenue sale. The price of the disputed taraf together with other mahals was settled at Rs. 4,300, and it was agreed that if the price at the auction sale was less than that amount, Ramdhan was to pay Purno the balance privately, but that if the bidding exceeded that sum, and plaintiff had to bid any sum in excess of Rs. 4,300, the defaulter (Purno) would refund such excess to Ramdhan. As security for the performance of the contract Ramdhan deposited Rs. 1,000 with a third person (one Shamsunder). As a matter of fact the bidding went up to Rs. 5,100 and Purno refunded the excess to Ramdhan.

The learned District Judge has held that the wilful default of Purno in order that the revenue sale might fetch a higher price than a private sale was fraudulent. That fact by itself cannot affect the rights of the purchaser if he is no party to the design. A proprietor of an estate may be unwilling to retain an estate, and if he defaults in paying revenue in order that he may get a higher price at the sale which entitles the purchaser to set aside all interests other than protested interests, his fraudulent motive cannot affect the rights of a bona fide purchaser at the sale. It is not found that there was any agreement between Purno and Ramdhan before there was default in paying the revenue. It is accordingly contended that the purchaser is not affected by any fraudulent design on the part of the defaulter.

But the finding of the learned Additional District Judge is "that Ramdhan Dhar knew what the real nature of the sale was, that it was essentially a private sale and not a revenue sale, and, if he knew that, it must reasonably be held that for the sake of obtaining an advantage (the advantage of the power to annul incumbrances) he agreed in making the transaction ostensibly a revenue sale and that the advantage he thus obtained was an unfair advantage and was obtained by deceit, and that, therefore, he colluded with Purno and, along with Purno acted fraudulently." Ramdhan Dhar, the predecessor in interest of the plaintiff, was then a party to this fraud and is bound by its consequences.

In the case of Nawab Sidhee Nozir Ali Khan v. Ajoodhyaram Khan (9) the Judicial Committee held that it was a great fraud in a mortgagee to attempt to deprive the mortgagor of his right of redemption by means of a fictitious sale of the property for arrears of revenue. The agreement in that case, however, was made with the purchaser before the default took place. But in Sreenath Ghose v. Hurnath Dutt (2) there was an actual arrear of rent for which a decree had been obtained and execution threatened before any negotiation took place with the purchaser. Markby, J., in that case observed:—"Now, we are by no means sure that it is not the duty of a lessor under such circumstances to do his utmost to postpone the sale, and so to protect the interests of his lessee, that is certainly what an upright and honest man would do under the circumstances; and it is a rule of English Law which seems to be founded on broad principles of equity which are applicable here also, that an intermediate landlord is bound to protect his own tenant from all paramount claims. See Graham v. Allsopp (10). At any rate we cannot doubt that it is gross fraud in the intermediate landlord to use his influence to urge on a sale for arrears of rent in order to secure to the purchaser the advantages of such a sale under the Act; the intermediate landlord at the same time bargaining to receive as a reward for his services a share in the advantages thereby secured. And if this be a fraud, then to this fraud the plaintiff was a party; and the sale being part of the machinery by which this fraud was effected, we think it ought to be put entirely on one side in considering the question now before us, and that, as between the plaintiff and the Beparass, the plaintiff ought to be considered, not as having the rights of an auction-purchaser under the Bengal Act, VIII of 1855, but only as having the right of a private purchaser."

This case was followed in the cases of Harendra Lal Roy v. Salinullah (11) and Uma Charan v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (12). In them the agreement with the purchaser appears to have taken place before the default was committed though in the latter the final settlement of the price at which the purchaser was to purchase the property at the sale took place only on the day of sale. The learned Judges in that case observed:—"In the case before us, the default was wilfully made; the sale was deliberately brought about though the judgment-debtor was able to pay the judgment debt; the purchaser and the price to be paid by them were settled in advance; here we have all the characteristics of a private sale. It was clearly an abuse of statutory provisions for sale of tenures in execution of decrees for rent, to bring about designedly a sale under such circumstances, so that the right of under-tenure holders might be destroyed, an unencumbered title conveyed to the purchaser, and the maximum of benefit conferred upon the defaulter. The transaction in all its characteristics was a private sale, and if we were to regard it as a real rent sale, we would have to hold that an unscrupulous tenure-holder may successfully avail himself of the stringent provisions of the rent law, solely with a view to injure subordinate tenure-holder and to profit by their detriment, while providing, by means of a secret arrangement with the intending purchaser, ample safeguards against any possible loss to himself by the transaction," and held "that the plaintiffs (the purchasers) must be treated as in no better position than a purchaser by a private transfer."

We think in the present case although Ramdhan only joined in the fraud after the default had been made he cannot, by reason of his entering into the agreement before the sale which was the machinery by which the fraud was to be carried out, and with knowledge thereof, be permitted to enjoy to the detriment of others the benefits which result to a purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue; and that Ramdhan did not by this transaction acquire rights higher than those of a purchaser at a private sale.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the defendant not having called upon the plaintiff to produce the agreement, oral evidence was inadmissible to prove the terms of the agreement. But no objection was taken when oral evidence was adduced on the point. Had any objection been taken at the time the defendant might have called upon the plaintiff to produce the written agreement. We do not think, therefore, that the objection should be entertained.

Since Ramdhan did not acquire rights higher than those of a purchaser at a private sale, it is unnecessary to consider whether the interest was a protested one. The plaintiff is not entitled to khas possession. He is entitled only to the rent which was being paid previously to the sale.

The suit is not one for rent but the Courts below have given a decree for rent without objection on the part of the defendant on this point. We accordingly hold that the plaintiff should get rent at the rate provided in the kabuliyat.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed. We direct that each party do bear its own costs in all Courts.

In the view we have taken in the appeal, it is unnecessary to consider the question of status of the defendants which was dealt with by the Court below and which forms the subject-matter of the cross-objections before us. The cross-objections are accordingly disallowed. With regard to cross-objections we make no order as to costs.

This judgment will govern the other appeals (Second Appeals Nos. 216 and 521 of 1920.)

Where property is vested in a juridical person and such property is transferred by a person who is only the representative and manager of that juridical person, such transfer is a direct challenge upon the title of the juridical person, and there is adverse possession to the right of that person from the date of the transfer, and a suit to contest such a transfer must be brought within 12 years from that date. But where the property is vested in the Mahant or shebait, the act of alienation is not a challenge upon the title of the juridical person, though the property may be endowed property, in the sense that its income has to be appropriated to the purposes of the endowment, and there is no adverse possession so long as the person making the alienation is alive, the possession of the alienee becomes adverse when a new title comes into existence which is capable of maintaining a suit and which has not approved of, or acquiesced in, the alienation. The endowments of a Hindu Math are not "conveyed in trust," nor is the head of the Math a "trustee" with regard to them, save as to any specific property proved to have vested in the head for a specific and definite object, and consequently Article 134 of the Limitation Act does not apply where the head of a Math has alienated the properties not proved to be subject to a specific trust. A person in whose favour a conveyance is made of the suit properties pendente lite, is not a necessary party to the suit, and if, on his own application, he is joined as a party, and during the pendency of an appeal in the suit he dies, the fact that his heirs are not substituted in his place, is not a defect in the constitution of the appeal. JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—These analogous appeals arise out of suits instituted by the appellants for recovery of certain properties held by Mohant Bhuan Gir as Mohant of an Asthal at Pakri Khemkaran, and now in the possession of the defendants as a result of certain transactions of Mohant Bhuan Gir. Plaintiff No. 1 claims to have succeeded Bhuan Gir as Mohant of the Asthal. The remaining plaintiffs have taken certain conveyances from plaintiff No. 1 and have actually paid the expenses of this litigation. The plaintiffs allege that Bhuan Gir was addicted to certain vicious habits and that there was an entire absence of legal necessity in respect of the various transactions into which Bhuan Gir entered as a result of which the properties, to recover which the present suits have been instituted, have passed into the hands of the defendants. It appears that Bhuan Gir left for a pilgrimage sometime prior to 1895, and has not been heard of since. In 1895 the plaintiffs instituted suits for recovery of these properties and they allege that Bhuan Gir had in fact died on the 15th Baisak 1299. The defendants in their written statement raised the plea that Bhuan Gir was in fact alive at the date of the institution of the suits and they maintained that the suits were premature. Both the Court of first instance as well as the High Court on appeal found in favour of the defendants on the point raised by them and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit as premature, the judgment of the High Court being dated the 30th November 1897. As Bhuan Gir has not been heard of since the date of the pronouncement of the judgment by the High Court, the plaintiffs instituted these suits in June 1917.

The defendants raise various questions of law and facts but the learned Subordinate Judge has decided all the points, save one, in favour of the plaintiffs. He has come to the conclusion that Bhuan Gir held the properties as a trustee for the Asthal and that there was no necessity for him to dispose of these properties. But he came to the conclusion that the suits having been instituted more than twelve years from the date of the alienations in question, they are barred under the provisions of Article 134 of the Limitation Act. It has, however, been held by the Judicial Committee in the recent case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (1) that the endowments of a Hindu Math are not "conveyed in trust" nor is the head of the Math a "trustee" with regard to them, save as to any specific property proved to have vested in the head for a specific and definite object, and that consequently Article 134 of the Limitation Act does not apply, where the head of a Math has alienated the properties not proved to be subject to a specific trust. It is not the case of the respondents that the properties in dispute were conveyed in trust to the head of the Asthal at Pakri Khemkaran or that they were vested in him for a specific and definite object. In my opinion, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point cannot be supported and must be reversed.

The learned Vakil for the respondents accepts the position that, in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee to which I have just referred, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported; but he maintains that, though Article 134 does not apply, the suits are nevertheless barred under Article 144 of the Limitation Act. Under Article 144 of the Limitation Act the period begins to run from the time when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. There are decisions, far too numerous to mention, that, where the property is in a juridical person and such property is transferred by a person who is only the representative and the manager of that juridical person, then there is adverse possession to the right of the juridical person from the date of the alienation. It is sufficient to refer to Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das (2). The facts of that case were these; the properties in question which were annexed to the Math at Bibi sarai formed part of the debutter estate of idol Sri Gopaljiu, the Bibisara Math being subordinate to the Math at Bhadrak. On the death of a Mahant, a controversy arose between two chelas as to the right of succession to the Maths and the property annexed to them. The dispute was settled by an arrangement embodied in an ekranama dated the 3rd November 1874 executed by the senior chela in favour of the junior chela, by which the Math at Bhadrak was allotted in perpetuity to the senior chela and his successors, while the Math at Bibisara and the properties annexed to it were allotted to the junior chela and his successors for the purposes connected with his Math, subject to an annual payment of Rs. 15 towards the expenses of the Bhadrak Math. Less than twelve years after the death of the senior chela, but considerably more than that period after the date of the ekranama, the appellant, the successor of the senior chela, brought a suit against the junior chela to recover possession of the properties annexed to Bibisara Math, on the allegation that they were debutter properties dedicated to the worship and service of the plaintiff's idol and that they should not have been alienated in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the defendant. Now, it will be noticed that if the period of limitation began to run from the date of the alienation the suit was clearly barred by limitation; but that if it began to run from the date of the death of the person who alienated the property, the suit was well within time. It was held by the Judicial Committee that the period began to run from the date of the ekranama and that the suit was accordingly barred by limitation. The basis of the decision was stated by Sir Arthur Wilson who delivered the judgment of the Board to be this: that in point of law the property dealt with by the ekranama was, prior to its date, to be regarded as vested not in the Mahant, but in the legal entity, the idol, the Mahant being only his representative and manager. The learned Vakil for the respondents strongly relied on this case and maintained that the plaintiffs' suits having admittedly been brought more than twelve years after the dates of the alienation in question must be dismissed as barred by limitation.

But there is a second and a different line of cases upon which Mr. Imam strongly relies. The first of these cases is Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi (3). The facts of that case were these; in 1787 the then Raja of Pandra made a grant "by way of lakheraj debutter" the entire Mouza of Gorfalbari to the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff. It will be noticed that the grant was in terms not to an idol but to the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff who received the gift as one for the service of the particular idols whose shebait he was. On the 6th February 1860 and on the 2nd November 1896 respectively the then Mahant of the endowment granted leases of the Mouza in question in favour of the defendants. The action was brought within twelve years of the death of the Mahant who granted the leases in question but considerably more than twelve years after the dates of the leases for possession of the Mouza on the ground that there was no power in his predecessor to alienate the Mouza in favour of the defendants. The Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that the leases were valid only during the lifetime of the Mahant by whom these were granted and that, as Article 134 of the Limitation Act did not apply, the plaintiff's suit could not be regarded as barred by limitation. It will be noticed that on the construction of the original grant in favour of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title it was argued on behalf of the lessees that the property was in fact not debutter property but was the property of the Mahant by whom the leases were granted. The argument was that although the grant was to the Mahant and by way of Lakherai debutter there was no complete or specific dedication of the Mouza to the service of any idol but that the gift was to the Mahant personally and descendible to his heirs in return for blessings bestowed on the donor and his family. The Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that the donee received the gift as a gift for the service of the particular idols whose shebait he was and that the income of the Mouza was entirely appropriated to that service. It will be noticed that if the argument of the respondents before us be well-founded, that argument was a clear answer to the suit in Abhiram Goswami's case (3).

The only other case to which I need refer is the case of Vidya Varuthi Thiruthay. Balusami Ayyar (1). The properties which were the subject-matter of the litigation in that case were undoubtedly endowed properties in the sense that their income was appropriated to the purposes of the endowment, but the title to the properties was in the head of the endowment and the income was at his absolute disposal during his lifetime. On the 17th March 1891 the then Mahant, who may be described as Mahant No. 1, gave a lease in favour of plaintiff No. 2. The Mahant died shortly after and was succeeded by Mahant No. 2. In 1902 plaintiff No. 2 gave a sub-lease to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In 1905 plaintiff No. 2 assigned his interest under the leases of the 17th March 1891 to plaintiff No. 1. In the same year the management of the Math passed into the hands of the Diwan of Mysore. In 1903 Mahant No. 2 died and was succeeded by defendant No. 26 who may be described as Mahant No. 3. In 1912 the sub-lease in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 expired. Before the expiry of the lease they obtained a lease for seventeen years from the Diwan of Mysore. On the 15th March 1913 the suit was instituted for recovery of the land from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the question raised was whether Mahant No. 1 was entitled to grant a lease in favour of plaintiff No. 2 and if he was not so entitled, whether the plaintiffs had acquired a title in themselves by adverse possession. Now, it will be noticed that the alienation in question took place on the 17th March 1891 and the dispossession of the plaintiffs took place in 1912. If it be considered that the time began to run from the date of the lease, the plaintiffs undoubtedly acquired a title in the subject-matter of the lease by adverse possession. If, on the other hand, it be held that the time began to run only from the death of the Mahants who granted and recognised the lease then it could not be said that the plaintiffs had acquired a title by adverse possession; for though Mahant No. 1 died shortly after granting the lease there was evidence which was accepted by the Judicial Committee that Mahant No. 2 recognised the transfer and received the rent from the plaintiffs. Mahant No. 2, it will be remembered, died in 1903 and if the period of limitation only began to run from the date of the death of Mahant No. 2 it could not be said that the plaintiffs had acquired a title by adverse possession. The Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that neither under Article 134 nor under Article 144 had the plaintiffs acquired a title to hold the land as against the endowment. It will be useful to quote the following passage from the judgment of the Judicial Committee:—"Before the Board an alternative argument has been advanced. It is contended that the second plaintiff acquired the title he is seeking to establish by twelve years adverse possession under Article 144. That Article declares that for a suit 'for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not hereby (i.e., by the Schedule) otherwise specially provided for' the period of limitation is twelve years from the date when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff. In view of the argument it is necessary to discover when, according to the plaintiff, his adverse possession began. He was let into possession by Mahant No. 1 under a lease which purported to be a permanent lease, but which under the law could endure only for the grantor's lifetime. According to the well settled law of India (apart from the question of necessity, which does not here arise) a Mahant is incompetent to create any interest in respect of the Math property to endure beyond his life. With regard to Mahant No. 2, he was vested with a power similarly limited. He permitted the plaintiff to continue in possession and received the rent during his life. Such receipt was with the knowledge which must be imputed to him that the tenancy created by his predecessor ended with his predecessor's life and can, therefore, only be properly referable to a new tenancy created by himself. It was within his power to continue such tenancy during his life, and, in these circumstances, the proper inference is that it was so continued, and consequently the possession never became adverse until his death."

Now, how is the decision in Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das (2), to be reconciled with the decisions in the other two cases? In Damodar Das's case (2) the period of limitation, according to the decision of the Judicial Committee, began to run from the date of the alienation and not from the date of the death of the person who made the alienation. In the two other cases the period of limitation was held to run not from the dates of the alienations in question, but from the dates of the death of the persons making the alienations. In my opinion the true rule is this, where the property is vested in the juridical person, as it was in Damodar Das's case (2), and the Mahant is only the representative and manager of the idol, the act of alienation is a direct challenge upon the title of the idol, and the idol or the manager of the idol on behalf of the idol must bring the suit within 12 years from the date of the alienation. But where the title is in the Mahant or the shebait, as it was in the two other cases to which I have referred, the act of alienation is not a challenge upon the title of the idol, though the property may be endowed property in the sense that its income has to be appropriated to the purposes of the endowment, and there is no adverse possession so long as the person making the alienation is alive, and the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiffs only when a new title has come into existence capable of maintaining the suit and which has not approved of or acquiesced in the alienation.

I have now to see whether the title to the properties in dispute was in the juridical person or in the succession of Mahants who presided over the affairs of that juridical person. In my opinion, there is no doubt whatever that the title is not in the juridical person but in the Mahants. Exhibit 12 is an extract from the certified copy of register relating to Parganna Tilokeshand and it shows that the villages stood in the name of the Mahant as "Bishunprit" and "Sheotar" villages. Exhibits 13, 13a and 13b show that the grants in question were made in favour of the Mahants although the documents by which the grants were made are variously named as "Sheotar" and "Sheoprit" documents. Exhibit 11 is the certified copy of a rubkar dated the 2nd November 1836 in certain proceedings instituted by the Government to assess revenue on these properties. The document recites that the original grant was made by Raja Pratap Singh in favour of Lachmi Gir, the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff, and that the property was Shivater property and that in 1836 the question arose whether the grantee was entitled to hold the land revenue free. Certain proceedings were instituted to try the question whether the grant had been made previous to the 12th of August 1765, the date of the accession of the East India Company to Diwani; the British Government having adopted the principle that grants previous to the accession to Diwani accompanied with possession should be held valid. As the grantee could not establish that the grant had in fact been made to him prior to the accession of the East India Company to Diwani, it was held that revenue should be assessed on these properties and we find from various documents in the record that settlement was concluded with Mahant Manik Gir one of the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiff. There can be no doubt whatever that though the property was endowed property in the sense that its income had to be appropriated to the purposes of the endowment, still the title was in the successive Mahants and that accordingly time began to run from the date of the death of Bhuan Gir who alienated the properties in dispute. There is no evidence when Bhuan Gir died, but as he has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive, we are entitled to presume that he is dead. I am of opinion that these suits are not barred by limitation.

While I am on the question of limitation, it will be convenient to dispose of another point which was raised by Mr. Sultan Ahmed who appeared on behalf of some of the respondents. He argued that assuming that time began to run from the date of the death of Bhuan Gir, the suits must still be held to be barred by limitation inasmuch as it was the plaintiff's own case in the suits which he instituted in 1895 that Bhuan Gir died on the 15th Baisak 1299. Alternatively, he argues that the plaintiff must show that his suit is within time. In other words, he must give evidence as to the date when Bhuan Gir actually died. In my opinion, the arguments are without any substance. It is quite true that it was the plaintiff's case in the suit which he instituted in 1895 that Bhuan Gir died on the 15th Baisak 1299 but that case was not accepted by the Courts. As regards the argument that Bhuan Gir must have died more than 12 years before the institution of these suits, the short answer is that, though a person who has not been heard of for seven years, is presumed to be dead, there is no presumption as to the time of his death, and that if any one seeks to establish the precise period at which such person died, he must do so by actual evidence. The plaintiffs in substance say this: "We have not heard of Bhuan Gir for seven years and we would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive. Consequently we ask the Court to presume that he is dead". The Court is entitled to presume that he is actually dead at the date of the institution of the suit and if it be the defendants' case that he died more than twelve years prior to the institution of these suits, it is for the defendants to establish the date of Bhuan Gir's death by actual evidence. I must overrule the contentions raised on behalf of the defendants on the question of limitation.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided all the other issues in favour of the appellants, but the respondents have challenged the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on these issues, and it will now be necessary for me to consider how far the arguments advanced on behalf of the respondents are entitled to succeed. It is argued that the suit is bad for non-joinder of parties. It appears that prior to 1895 there was a transfer by plaintiff No. 1 of certain share in the properties in dispute in favour of one Mahabaruni Prashad and it was argued before us that the failure to join him as a plaintiff in the action debarred the plaintiffs from recovering possession at any rate of such share of the properties which plaintiff No. 1 sold to Mahabaruni Prashad. The argument, in my opinion, is unsubstantial. The conveyance was admittedly prior to 1895 and it was found in the suits which the plaintiffs instituted in 1895 that the plaintiffs had no cause of action. In other words, plaintiff No. 1 had no title in him to convey. Accordingly it was unnecessary for him to join Mahabaruni Prashad as a plaintiff in the action. It was also argued that as one of the appellants, Nurul Husain, died pending the disposal of the appeals in this Court and that as the plaintiffs declined to substitute the heirs of Nurul Husain in the place of Nurul Husain, the plaintiffs are incompetent to get a decree in respect of the share which the plaintiff No. 1 sold to Nurul Husain. In my opinion, the question is one between plaintiff No. 1 and Nurul Husain. Now the answers to this argument are two in number. In the first place, the suit was filed on the 30th November 1916 and the conveyance in favour of Nurul Husain is dated the 15th of June 1917. In other words, Nurul Husain took the transfer pendente lite and it was wholly unnecessary to join him as a plaintiff in the action. He was in fact added as a plaintiff on the 30th January 1918 on his own application. In my opinion, he was not a necessary party to the suit and it is not a defect in the constitution of the appeal that his heirs were not substituted in his place. The other answer is that the question whether any title passed to Nurul Husain is a question of evidence which can only be decided in a proceeding between the plaintiff and Nurul Husain. We do not know whether Nurul Husain paid the purchase money to plaintiff No. 1 and it may have been agreed between them that title would not pass until the payment of the full consideration money. I am wholly unable to decide this point in the present proceedings between the plaintiffs and the defendants.

The next argument of Mr. Sultan Ahmed is that as a result of the resumption proceedings to which I have already referred the properties in suit must now be regarded as having been resumed by the Government and settled with the Mahant in his personal capacity. Mr. Sultan Ahmed puts his argument as follows: The properties were either in the idol or in the Mahant. If they were in the idol the suit is clearly barred. If they were in the Mahant then we are bound to consider the effect of the resumption proceedings. If the result of the resumption proceedings was to vest the property in the Mahant then Bhuan Gir was fully competent to alienate the property and Mr. Sultan Ahmed relied on Divi Punniah v. Goruntla Kotamma (4). That was a case where the Government resumed certain lands which were held previously as charitable inam and after imposing an assessment granted a patta to one of the persons who were the trustees thereof prior to the resumption. It was held that the representatives of the other trustees had no right to claim a share in the land as against the trustee to whom the patta was given. Now, in my opinion, the question here is entirely different. It was not the object of the paramount authority in the resumption proceedings to resume the lands and to re-settle the lands with the persons who originally held the lands. As the history of the legislation on the subject shows the resumption was not of the land but of the revenue and that resumption meant nothing more than assessing the land to Government revenue. In my opinion, the person with whom the Government settled the land in 1836 must be regarded as having continued to hold the land on the same terms and subject to the same restrictions that bound him prior to the resumption proceedings.

It was lastly argued that there was legal necessity in respect of the transactions in question. The learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with this question and has decided the issue in favour of the plaintiff. Mr. Sultan Ahmed argued before us that it was sufficient for him to establish that there was representation made to his predecessors in title that there was necessity for the loans, and that he made due enquiry to satisfy himself that there was in fact such necessity although it may be that there was no necessity to raise the loans, and he relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in a recent case* to the effect that the recital is clear evidence of representation and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then, when proof of actual necessity has become impossible, the recital coupled with such circumstances will be sufficient evidence to support the deed. We have been referred to the documents which establish that the transactions took place so far back as the 19th December 1878 and the 6th March 1880, and we accept Mr. Sultan Ahmed's contention that proof of actual necessity has become almost impossible. But before he can take advantage of the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee he must establish that the circumstances were such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed the truth of the representation of which the recital is evidence. Now we have no proof at all as to what the circumstances in 1878 were. The income of the properties was between Rs. 3,000 and Rs. 4,000 a year. We have no evidence that the circumstances at that time were such as to compel Bhnan Gir to go to the defendants' predecessors in title for loans. In my opinion, the issue was rightly decided by the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of the appellants.

I would allow these appeals, set aside the judgment and decrees passed by the Court below and give the plaintiffs a decree for possession in respect of the properties specified in the plaint with costs in both the Courts and means profits.

—APPELLANTS

versus

A. N. S. RAMACHANDRA RAO AND OTHERS RESPONDENTS.

Res judicata.—Proceedings under Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), operate as res judicata.—Principle of res judicata is general.—Plea of trifling value for not appealing, not admissible.—Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 54.—No further appeal to Privy Council from award.—"Award," meaning of.—Dispute among persons interested in compensation money is not part of award.—Decision of such dispute appealable to Privy Council.—Hindu Law—Gift—Widow—Alienation.

A decision of a competent Court in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act operates as res judicata and the same question cannot be re-opened in a subsequent litigation between the same parties. [p. 412, col. 2.]

It is not competent for a Court, in the case of the same question arising between the same parties, to review a previous decision, no longer open to appeal, given by another Court having jurisdiction to try the second case. If the decision was wrong, it ought to have been appealed from in due time. Nor in such circumstances can the interested parties be heard to say that the value of the subject-matter on which the former decision was pronounced was comparatively so trifling that it was not worth their while to appeal from it. If such a plea were admissible, there would be no finality in litigation. The importance of a judicial decision is not to be measured by the pecuniary value of the particular item in dispute [p. 412, col. 2.]

Badar Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin, (1903) A. C. 615 at p. 623; 78 L. J. P. C. 161; 101 L. T. 161, referred to.

The principle which prevents the same case being twice litigated is of general application, and is not limited by the specific words of the Code of the Civil Procedure in this respect. [p. 412, col. 2.]

George Henry Hook v. Administrator General of Bengal, 60 Ind. Cas. 631; 48 I. A. 187; 19 A. L. J. 866; 40 M. L. J. 423; 29 M. L. T. 336; (1921) M. W. N. 313; 33 C. L. J. 405; 3 U. P. L. R. (P. C.) 17; 23 Bom. L. R. 648; 25 C. W. N. 915; 14 L. W. 221; 48 C. 499 (P. C.), referred to.

Under the Land Acquisition Act there are two perfectly separate and distinct forms of procedure contemplated. The first is that necessary for fixing the amount of the compensation and this is described as being an award. [p. 412, col. 2.]

When once the award as to the amount has become final, all questions as to fixing of compensation are then at an end; the duty of the Collector in case of dispute as to the relative rights of the persons together entitled to the money is to place the money under the control of the Court, and the parties then can proceed to litigate in the ordinary way to determine what their right and title to the property may be [p. 412, col. 2.]

The award as constituted by Statute is nothing but an award which states the area of the land, the compensation to be allowed and the apportionment among the persons interested in the land of whose claims the Collector has information, meaning thereby people whose interests are not in dispute, but from the moment when the sum has been deposited in Court under section 31 (2), the functions of the award have ceased; and all that is left, is a dispute between interested people as to the extent of their interests. Such dispute forms no part of the award. [p. 412, col. 1.]

Trinagani Dassi v. Krishna Lal Dey, 6 Ind. Cas. 157; 17 C. W. N. 935n. and Balaram Bhramaratar Ray v. Sham Sunder Narendra, 23 C. 526; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 350, referred to.

From an award under the Land Acquisition Act an appeal lies to the High Court and there is no further appeal to the Privy Council. But a dispute as to the relative rights of the persons interested in the compensation money, fixed by the award, forms no part of the award and the right of appeal to the Privy Council from a decision of such a dispute is not taken away. [p. 412, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court (Wallis, C. J. and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.), dated 8th October 1918, Appeal Suit No. 1 of 1918 and reported as 52 Ind. Cas. 91, reversing a decree of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore.

FACTS.—The appellants are the respondents of one Bavaji Pandit. The respondents are the sister's sons of one of the widows of the said Bavaji Pandit. The widow got the suit property under the Will of her husband. In 1884 a piece of land forming a portion of the property got by the widow under the said Will was acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act. A question then arose as between the widow and the father of the appellants as to the character and extent of the estate taken by the widow under the Will. The District Court held that the widow took an absolute estate but, on appeal, the High Court held that she took only a limited estate. There was no appeal from that decree. In 1916 the widow alienated the remaining property to the respondents by a Will. After the death of the widow in 1916 the appellants instituted the present suit for possession of the property in the hands of the respondents. The Trial Judge gave the appellants a decree but the High Court, on appeal, went into the question of construction of the Will and dismissed the appellant's claim holding that the widow had an absolute and alienable estate. Hence the present appeal.

Mr. De Gruyter, K.O., and Mr. Narasimham, for the Appellants.—A Hindu widow may have an absolute estate under her husband's Will [Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1) and Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (2)] (1) 35 I. A. 17; 5 A. L. J. 67; 12 C. W. N. 231; 18 M. L. J. 7; 10 Bom. L. R. 59; 7 C. L. J. 131; 3 M. L. T. 144; 30 A. 84 (P. C.). (2) 65 Ind. Cas. 974; 49 I. A. 1; 26 C. W. decided on the 2nd December 1921]. There is a long catena of cases in all the High Courts that a gift to a widow by the husband does not imply a heritable estate. (Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 664). Konjehari Dhur v. Frenchand Dutt (3), Jamna Das v. Ramautar Pande (4), Carlapatti Chinna v. Oota Wammalivariah (5).

A widow can only alienate immoveable property for a legal necessity. She cannot alienate immoveable property without the consent of her husband. (Narada, Colebrook's Digest, Book V, page 476).

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The effect of Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1) is that if you have a gift to a woman in unqualified language she takes absolutely unless there is something to cut it down.]

Independent of the recent decisions of the Board, the Bombay High Court held that even the use of the word "Malik" would not give a woman powers of alienation. Motilal Mithalal v. Advocate General of Bombay (6).

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—I think that Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1), decides otherwise. Full ownership includes the power to alienate.]

There are texts of Hindu Law that, in the case of a widow, even though she be given an absolute estate, she has no power of alienation unless conferred by express terms. A Hindu widow may have an estate of inheritance but she has no power of alienation.

The question in issue was decided by the High Court on a previous occasion in Land Acquisition proceedings. The High Court construed the Will as conferring only a limited estate. It is not open to the High Court to go into the question again as the prior decision operates as res judicata. George Henry Hook v. Administration General of Bengal (7). The widow could have appealed against that decree to this Board. Special leave was given in one case. Sri Braja Kisora Deva Garu v. Sri Kundana Devi Pattu Mahadevi Garu (8). The principle of res judicata applies to the whole property and not merely to that portion concerned in the land acquisition proceedings. Section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act applies only to appeals from the award. Other questions are tried and decided as in ordinary suits.

Mr. Dube, for Respondent No. 1.—Ameer Ali's Book takes the view that it is not res judicata. The effect of the English decisions is given in Read v. Victoria Station Co (9).

[LORD BUCKMASTER referred to Ram Chunder Singh v. Madho Kumari (10)].

The preamble to the Land Acquisition Act clearly shows that the object of the Act was to determine the amount of compensation. Section 54 gives one appeal to the High Court and no more.

If there is a dispute as to apportionment, it had to be referred to a Civil Court. In this case we have no evidence as to what the dispute was. The only papers filed here are the judgment and the decree and we do not know whether the dispute arose so as to create an estoppel.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The judgment expressly refers to sections 31 and 32 of the Act.]

Those sections do not necessarily mean that there shall be a judicial determination as to who is entitled. The judgment says that the District Judge is to pass an order under section 32; we do not know what order he passed. All proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act end in awards. It has been laid down that there is no further appeal to this Board. Rangoon Potatourg Company Limited v. Collector of Rangoon (11).

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—This is not an award but an adjudication as to title.]

There was an application for special leave in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act and the Board refused leave.

Special Officer, Salsette Building Sites v. Dhabhai Bezanji (12). An adjudication forms part of the award. Since the decision in Rangoon Potatourg Co. Limited v. Collector of Rangoon (11) there has been no appeal to the Board in land acquisition cases. Mahadevi v. Neslamani (13) is an express decision that it cannot be res judicata. That was no doubt a decision on section 39 of the Act of 1870 but on this point the present Act of 1894 is identical. Ameer Ali's Civil Procedure Code, page 103, lays down that having regard to the peculiar nature of land acquisition proceedings, the Courts have always held that there is no res judicata.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O., and Mr. Narasimham, for the Appellants, were not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—On the 6th August 1858 Ramajee Bavajee Pandit, who died on the 10th August 1858, executed a deed of settlement of all his moveable and immoveable properties. It is prefaced by a statement that he had adopted Panchapikes, the second son of Mahasubd Rajaram, and after various gifts and dispositions which are not material, it continued in these terms:—

"Out of the remaining property, after deducting the above, my adopted son, to whom I have given the name of Bavajee Pandit, shall be entitled to and enjoy half of the property. Out of the remaining half of the property these two persons, namely, (my) senior wife Sowbhagiavathy Kamatchi and junior wife Sowbhagiavathy Thulja shall take half and half."

In 1894 one acre and 74 cent. of the land so given, and then in the possession of Thulja Boyee, was acquired by the Government. The usual proceedings for determining the amount of compensation appear to have taken place, and no dispute arose as to the award, but a question did arise as between Ramajee Bavajee Pandit, the adopted son, and the widow as to the character and extent of the estate that she took under the Will. If she took absolutely, the money could be divided forthwith; but if she took a limited interest, her share would have to be invested. It was consequently necessary that this dispute should be determined in order that the compensation monies should be properly dealt with. Section 31, sub-section (2), of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, expressly contemplates this position, for, after referring in sub-section (1), to the payment of the compensation by the Collector to the persons interested, sub-section (2) provides that "if there be no person competent to alienate the land, or if there be any dispute as to the title to receive the compensation or as to the apportionment of it, the Collector shall deposit the amount of the compensation in the Court to which a reference under section 18 would be submitted." Section 18 does not define the Court; this is done by section 3, sub-section (d), which provides that a Court means a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, unless a special Judicial Officer within specified limits has been appointed to perform the functions of the Court under the Act. Section 32 further provides that when money has been deposited in Court under sub-section (2) of section 31, and it appears that the land whereof the same was awarded belonged to any person who had no power to alienate, the Court shall order the money to be invested as therein mentioned. Now, the dispute between Bavajee and the widow was plain upon the face of the document. It depended upon whether the deed had conferred an absolute heritable and alienable estate upon the widow, or whether she took either a limited Hindu widow's estate or a heritable estate which she was incapable of alienating. What the actual proceedings were that ensued between them is not plain, but they must have come before the District Court of Tanjore, for the grounds of appeal from the order of that Court are before their Lordships, and from these it appears that the District Judge had held that the widow had an absolute estate. From this decision Bavajee brought the appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Madras. Judgment was delivered by the High Court on the 13th July, 1897, by Sir Arthur Collins, C.J., and Mr. Justice Shephard. Their judgment is short, and, as it throws considerable light upon the whole proceedings, it is desirable that it should be reproduced in full. It is as follows:—

"The first question is what estate the widow Thulja Boyee took under the gift of 1858. We cannot agree with the District Judge that the law is unsettled on the question of such gifts. There being no indication of intention to give a large estate, we must assume that the husband intended that a widow's estate only should pass. This being so, it is quite clear that sections 31 and 32 of the Act apply. The order must be set aside as the parties are not agreed as to the mode in which the money should be invested.

"We must direct the District Judge to pass order under the provisions of section 32. Each party to bear his own costs of this appeal."

On the 10th June 1911 and again on the 11th January 1916 Thulja Boyee executed Wills and bequeathed all her moveable and immovable properties to the first respondent; she died on the 2nd April 1916. The adopted son, Bavajee Ramajee Pandit, also died at a date subsequent to the decision of the High Court, but the exact time is not stated, nor is it material, and the present appellant and his brother Jeevanna Rao, now deceased, were his two sons. On the 12th July 1916 they instituted the suit out of which these proceedings have arisen against the claimants under Thulja's Will, alleging that she had only a limited estate under the deed of settlement, and that she had no power to dispose of the properties by Will. The learned Subordinate Judge decided in their favour, but this decision was reversed by the High Court, from whose decree the present appeal has been brought. Both the judgments of the Subordinate Judge and the High Court depended upon the true effect of the deed of settlement, but for reasons, which their Lordships will shortly explain, they do not think that this question was open to either of the Courts.
